Despite the turbulence that inevitably surrounds judicial nominees, President Bush's selections have generally fared well, with none generating the level of controversy raised over nominees such as Robert Bork or Clarence Thomas.

That may be about to change. Bush's attempt to elevate Mississippi federal Judge Charles

REV_00140238

Pickering to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals is generating serious resistance. In the process, the nomination has awakened some long-dormant issues from the bitter fights of the civil rights era. Pickering, 64, came of age in Mississippi's racially explosive 1950s and 1960s, and opponents say his career shows a history of racial insensitivity. He wrote an article in law school explaining how to strengthen a state statute against interracial marriage, he voted as a state senator to fund the notoriously segregationist Sovereignty Commission and he intervened to reduce the sentence of a cross-burner.

The Congressional Black Caucus and the Mississippi NAACP oppose Pickering's nomination. Asked if the judge is a racist, L.A. Warren, an official with the Mississippi NAACP, responded: "If it walks like a duck and it quacks like a duck, it appears to be a duck."

But supporters, including some of the state's black leaders, describe Pickering as an entirely different person. They say he has helped the state shed its racist past by, for example, testifying against a grand wizard of the Ku Klux Klan in the 1960s at great peril to himself.

W.O. "Chet" Dillard, a lifelong friend of Pickering, said he and Pickering fought for such causes as putting blacks on juries when the two were local prosecutors in the 1960s.

"We almost had to stand back-to-back to protect each other in Jones County," Dillard said. "He was from Jones County, and it was difficult for him to take a stand that was unpopular among his friends and neighbors and tell them, 'This is the law.'"

The Senate Judiciary Committee may vote by the end of the month on the nomination of Pickering, who is extraordinarily well-connected. He is a close friend of Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) and the father of Rep. Charles "Chip" Pickering Jr. (R-Miss.).

The debate is sharpened because Pickering is a candidate for the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, which covers Mississippi, Texas and Louisiana, an area that is a historic civil rights battleground. In the 1960s, 5th Circuit judges such as John Minor Wisdom surprised the nation with decisions ordering the desegregation of the University of Mississippi and other institutions.

But the court has swung to the conservative side in recent years. It covers an area with a high poverty rate and many minorities, and liberals are anxious to prevent it from becoming more conservative.

This helps explain why the Pickering nomination is shaping up as Bush's first real judicial battle.

Pickering's opponents reel off a litany of questionable actions: As a law student in 1959, Pickering wrote a law review article suggesting ways for the state to close a loophole in its law against interracial marriage. The Legislature acted on his suggestions the following year, passing an amendment to close the loophole.

Critics also fault Pickering for going into private practice with Carroll Gartin, an avowed segregationist. Pickering's supporters say Gartin was a prominent Mississippi figure and that his positions were hardly unusual.

The Sovereignty Commission represents another bleak chapter in Mississippi's past, and critics say Pickering was associated with that group. The commission was created by the state to fight the U.S. Supreme Court's desegregation orders, and Pickering voted to fund it twice when he was in the state Legislature.

Pickering has denied any substantial association with the commission. "I never had any contact with that agency, and I had disagreement with the purposes and the methods and some of the approaches that they took," Pickering told the Senate in 1990. His opponents dispute this, saying he had more contact than he admits, such as seeking information on a commission investigation.

More broadly, some of Pickering's defenders argue that these events took place 35 years ago or more and belong to a distant past. But a more recent episode could prove the most controversial for Pickering.

In 1994, the judge presided over a trial of three people accused of burning a cross on the lawn of an interracial couple. Two pleaded guilty and received relatively light penalties; the third went to trial and was convicted, receiving a 5-year mandatory sentence.

Saying he was disturbed by the 5-year sentence and the disparity in the punishments, Pickering personally contacted the Justice Department to express his frustration, possibly violating judicial ethics rules. He made his displeasure clear to prosecutors, who dropped a key charge against the cross-burner--a virtually unheard-of action, because the man already had been convicted.

At a recent Senate Judiciary Committee hearing, Pickering defended his action, saying he had made clear his disapproval of the defendants' actions in court. "I described the cross-burning as a despicable act," Pickering told the senators. "I observed that the act was drunk young men doing a dastardly deed that they should not have had in their heart."

Pickering's opponents were not mollified. "He is a throwback to a pretty shameful episode in our nation's history," said Nan Aron, president of the Alliance for Justice, adding that Pickering's rulings have been hostile to civil rights.

But his friends say they do not recognize Pickering in this portrait. Among the judge's backers are prominent African-Americans including James Charles Evers, brother of slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers, and Henry Wingate, the first black federal judge in Mississippi.

Pickering showed flashes of courage during the civil rights era, supporters say, and in his recent career he has shown sensitivity to minority concerns.

Pickering sent his children to public schools when many whites were abandoning them for all-white private schools, these supporters say. In 1967, Pickering testified against Ku Klux Klan imperial wizard Samuel Bowers in a case involving the murder of civil rights worker Vernon Dahmer.

REV_00140240

The judge's backers cite other actions: He hired the first black staffer in the Mississippi Republican Party, for example, and he helped establish an Institute for Racial Reconciliation at the University of Mississippi.

"He does happen to be white and he does happen to be a Baptist," said Dillard, his old friend. "But you couldn't find any person that I think is more morally conscientious about following the laws as set forth by the United States Supreme Court."

The Senate Judiciary Committee's vote on Pickering could be close, and the rhetoric has become fierce.

"We hope to God that he doesn't make it," Warren said. "We know his past."

Bush Puts Abortion Card Back Into Play; President Starts Preparing for 2004

By Tom Teepen
Dayton Daily News
Tuesday, February 12, 2002

Abortion is back. not that it ever exactly disappeared as a political issue, but it did lapse into an extended period of blessed quiet, like a bear hibernating. Alas, a grizzly.

Anti-abortion leaders, aware that he was on their side, let George W. Bush campaign for the presidency without having to make the repeated and histrionic obeisance to them that they had demanded of previous Republican candidates, to the detriment, on balance, of their campaigns. The silence gave Al Gore little to make hay of and, in kind with the rest of his flailing campaign, he never figured out how to work the issue to his advantage without seeming to cry fire where there were no flames. (Democrats must be groaning at the recent indications that Gore is ramping up for 2004.)

Bush was smart enough not to characterize his new administration right off with a lot of anti-abortion maneuvering. Now, however, the administration is slipping firmly into anti-abortion gear.

The president recently favored abortion opponents, rallying on the anniversary of the Supreme Court ruling that established women's abortion rights, with a Reaganesque, go-get-'em statement of support.

The White House has put forward judicial nominees who are committed opponents of lawful abortion, such as federal district Judge Charles Pickering, the recovering (one hopes) racist who Bush wants to jump up to the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The Justice Department has intervened in an Ohio case to argue for a state ban on so-called partial-birth abortions - a term without medical meaning invented by anti-abortion groups to demonize procedures that are rare and usually resorted to only in medically desperate circumstances.

Anti-abortion groups have been trying for years to use this side issue as an oblique way to get at all abortions. A federal district court, following the lead of other courts in reviewing similar laws, ruled that the Ohio statute was overly restrictive. The administration wants the law upheld on appeal.

And Secretary Tommy Thompson of the Department of Health and Human Services recently ruled that, for the purposes of the Children's Health Insurance Program, enacted in 1997, fetuses are 'children.' The program provides medical coverage to children whose families are needy but not poor enough to qualify for Medicaid.

The change was necessary, Thompson said, to provide prenatal care to women.

Bunk.

The goal is worthy, but there were a variety of other ways - from similar fiat to legislation - to accomplish it without pouring a little bureaucratic acid on the foundation of the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision.

Thompson announced the move - to cheers - at the annual Conservative Political Action Conference. If you think the delegates were actually cheering the expansion of a federal program, welcome to Oz.

White House analysts have concluded that the usual Christian fundamentalist turnout for Republicans wasn't as strong for Bush as it should have been, and the president has opportunities, as well, to significantly increase support among Catholics.

Gore isn't the only player from 2002 already revving up for '04.

Pennsylvania Republican's Vote May Be Key

By Ana Radelat
Gannett News Service
Tuesday, February 12, 2002

With Democrats likely to vote against the candidacy of Judge Charles Pickering for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, a Republican from Pennsylvania may hold the swing vote on the nomination.

While most of the nine Republican members of the Senate Judiciary Committee lauded 64-year-old Pickering's record as a U.S. District judge, state senator, and a prosecuting attorney in Jones County, Sen. Arlen Specter, was skeptical of the judge's defense of some of his rulings.

REV_00140242

"I don't think its schizophrenia, but it's a little ambivalent at least," Specter said.

The Pennsylvania lawmaker also rebuked Pickering for criticisms he had made of the Voting Rights Act, a key federal civil rights law. "It's curious to me that you want to be a federal judge because here you are saying the courts have no business in these cases," Specter said.

Specter's vote may not be needed to defeat Pickering if all 10 Democrats on the Judiciary Committee decide to vote against the judge's nomination.

None of the panel's members, no Democrat or Republican, has revealed how they will vote when the committee meets again to decide Pickering's future, an event that probably will occur at the end of this month at the earliest.

But speculation over Specter's vote is keenest among those who oppose and support Pickering's candidacy.

A former prosecutor known for his tough stance on crime and his strong defense of civil and women's rights, Specter may muster the courage to defy Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott. The Mississippi senator, a friend and political ally of the judge, pressed the White House to nominate Pickering for a seat on the appeals court that hears cases from Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas.

But in the aftermath of last week's contentious Senate hearing on his candidacy, Lott couldn't predict whether Pickering would win confirmation.

"I think it's going to be close, but I certainly hope he does. He deserves it," Lott said on "Fox News Sunday." "This is a very unfair besmirching of a good man's record."

Lott also said he did not think the White House was abandoning Pickering's candidacy.

Kate Michelman, president of the National Abortion & Reproductive Rights Action League said she thinks Lott is under a lot of pressure to try to sway at least a couple of Democratic members of the panel and keep Specter from crossing the line. Her organization is one of dozens opposing Pickering's nomination.

"I think he underestimated the difficulty Pickering's record presents," Michelman said.

A report to be released Tuesday from the Citizens' Commission on Civil Rights, a bipartisan group of former government officials and civic leaders, called the Bush administration's selection of judicial nominees -- especially Pickering -- part of a continuous erosion of the nation's civil rights laws.

The groups lined up against Pickering, which run the gamut from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to the American Association of University Women, hope Pickering's nomination is buried by an unfavorable vote in the Judiciary Committee and the full Senate never has a chance to consider his candidacy.

"I'd be very difficult to defeat him on the Senate floor given Lott's power," Michelman said.

On Feb. 4, in his second appearance before the panel, Specter and Democratic members of the Senate Judiciary Committee grilled Pickering for more than four hours.

The embattled nominee was accused of improper conduct in presiding over a 1994 cross-burning case in Jones County, of writing an article in 1959 on Mississippi's law on interracial marriages that provided a blueprint for correcting a flaw in the statute and of voting in the Mississippi Senate in favor of spending bills that financed the anti-segregationist Sovereignty Commission.

Pickering also was criticized for becoming the law partner of a former state official who was an avowed segregationist and for calling lawyers in Mississippi asking them to write letters in support of his candidacy. Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., said Pickering's request for recommendation letters -- which the judge collected in his chambers and faxed to Washington -- "creates an appearance of coercion" among the lawyers who bring cases before him.

In addition, several Democrats, including Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., accused Pickering of being "outside the mainstream" of legal though on civil and women's rights.

Pickering objected to the characterization.

"I do not think that my activities in all of the things I've done in my life are outside the mainstream," Pickering told the panel. "They indicate someone who has been concerned about these rights, and I have taken action to protect these rights."

Pickering's Republican supporters say the judge had demonstrated "moral courage" in prosecuting Ku Klux Klan members and prodding Mississippi to abandon its segregationist past.

Pickering Expected to Lose Judiciary Committee Vote

By Paul Kane
Roll Call
Thursday, February 14, 2002

Despite increasing threats of retaliation from Republicans, Senate Democrats have dug in their heels to fight a controversial judicial nomination that has further poisoned the already strained relations between the two sides.

Resistance to U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering's elevation to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals has only grown among Democrats on the Judiciary Committee since his unusual second hearing last week, according to interviews with activists, aides and Senators.

With a one-vote edge on the panel, the 10 Judiciary Democrats have the power to sink the Pickering nomination, which has become a top priority for Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.), a close Pickering friend for 30 years.

Written follow-up questions to the Mississippi judge are due to be sent off today, but one Judiciary Democrat said his side is "ready to vote" and doesn't need any more information.

Asked if Pickering could do more to help his cause, Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.) said, "Idon't think so. ... He had ample opportunity to express himself."

Sen. Maria Cantwell (D-Wash.), expressing concerns about his rulings on privacy, said she is "not likely" to vote for Pickering.

Sen. Russ Feingold (D-Wis.) said he had grave concerns about Pickering's efforts to round up letters of support from home-state interests, questioning whether it was improper because some of those same people may have cases before his federal court.

And Sen. Joseph Biden (D-Del.) said he was not certain of Pickering's "veracity" in responding to questions posed by Sen. John Edwards (D-N.C.) about a 1994 case in which the judge contacted Justice Department officials about sentencing.

Although no Democrat would officially declare Pickering's nomination dead, aides and Senators privately said it was unlikely Pickering would receive the single Democratic vote he needs to get out of committee. That sentiment was backed up by Majority Leader Thomas Daschle's (D-S.D.) decision to take the unusual step of announcing his opposition to Pickering in two nationally televised interviews Sunday and Monday before Judiciary had rendered its verdict.

GOP sources said Lott is personally incensed about the opposition to Pickering, which has been laced with racially tinged allegations regarding Mississippi's civil rights era. Lott is particularly irate at Daschle for taking such a public stance against his home-state friend.

"Senate Democrats haven't really thought through the consequences of opposing this nominee. This is a political boomerang that's going to come back at them very hard," said one senior GOP aide.

Lott has declined to spell out what retribution he will mete out for knocking down Pickering's appellate court bid, but he's made clear he will seek revenge. "It certainly will not be a positive thing for relations around here," he said this week.

Another senior GOP aide said Republicans have grown so irate over Pickering's treatment and the perceived lack of response from Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) to take up more circuit court nominees that many Senators want to shut down all legislative activity on the floor.

"There has been serious talk of just shutting down the whole damn Senate for however long it takes," the aide said.

REV_00140245

Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (Idaho) said that Democrats, at the behest of left-wing interest groups, have acted in a "strident, openly partisan" manner that will result in a shot back at them. "That's a game played that does have repercussions in the end," he said, predicting that Pickering's defeat could lead to "the inability of the Senate to function."

"You have to operate with 60-plus votes,"he said, an indirect threat to block any moves to legislation on the Senate floor, which requires at least 60 votes. Last fall, in an attempt to confirm more GOP-nominated judges, Republicans blocked all appropriations bills for several weeks.

Unbowed by the threats, Democrats are ready for the fights. "We'll be reminding them that this is better treatment than many Democratic nominees who never got a hearing, who never got a vote," said one Democratic aide.

Echoing statements by Leahy and Daschle, Durbin said that Democrats have every intention of holding hearings and votes on controversial nominees. They will not take a "death-through-inaction" approach to nominees, he said, something Democrats accused Senate Republicans of doing with Clinton administration nominees in the 1990s.

If all 10 Judiciary Democrats oppose a nominee, Durbin said the message will be sent to the White House and the nominee, giving him or her the chance to back out before actually being rejected. "We should make every effort to be sensitive to the nominees. If we are not going to support them, then they should be given every opportunity to make a final decision," he said.

Republicans are particularly bitter about a potential committee defeat on Pickering, and any future judicial battles, because they know they can win a floor vote on the Mississippi judge. They expect to hold all 49 of their votes, and at least two Senate Democrats, Zell Miller (Ga.) and Fritz Hollings (S.C.), are willing to vote for Pickering if his nomination ever gets out of Judiciary and onto the floor.

Miller said his main standard for a judge would be if the two home-state Senators support the nominee, which in this case both Lott and Sen. Thad Cochran (R-Miss.) do.

Hollings, meanwhile, noted that the most salacious charges concern the judge's activities in the 1960s. "Iknow all of these charges they bring up, but I'll still vote for him. They haven't brought up anything recent. On the contrary, I think he's a fine judge," he said.

Hollings dismissed allegations that Pickering had ties to segregationists in Mississippi in the civil rights era and suggested that a high standard such as that might disqualify a few people from serving in the Senate.

"We've got leaders in the Senate that used to be members of the Klan," Hollings said, an apparent shot at Appropriations Chairman Robert Byrd's (D-W.Va.) past membership in the Ku Klux Klan more than 50 years ago.

Republicans are particularly concerned about what a potential defeat in committee for Pickering will mean for future appellate court nominees, such as Miguel Estrada and Jeffrey Sutton, who are younger, more ideologically conservative and potential Supreme Court nominees in the future.

All 10 Judiciary Democrats fall within the liberal wing of the party on social issues. At least three - Biden, Edwards and Feingold - are considering presidential bids and would need the support of interest groups such as the NAACP and the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League, both of which oppose Pickering.

Biden said he was surprised to receive calls from his friends to put in good words for Pickering, who has been supported by Dicky Scruggs, the nation's leading anti-tobacco trial lawyer (and Lott's brother-in-law), and Charles Evers, the brother of slain civil rights activist Medgar Evers, among others.

"A lot of people I Respect - people that aren't in politics - have called to say this guy's a good guy. I still have an open mind on this," Biden said.

But Republicans are taking a believe-it-when-we-see-it approach, doubtful that any Democrat will cross the key liberal constituencies opposed to Pickering.

"Unless there's going to be some Democrat that's going to look beyond the rhetoric that's being put out by the civil rights lobby, it's going to be pretty tough to get [Pickering] out of committee," said Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa), a senior Judiciary member.

Hawaii's Two U.S. Senators Approve Clifton Nomination

The Associated Press
Wednesday, February 13, 2002

Hawaii's two Democratic U.S. senators have approved the nomination of Honolulu attorney Richard Clifton to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Sen. Daniel Inouye officially notified the Senate Judiciary Committee last week that he would allow the nomination of Clifton, counsel for the Hawaii Republican Party, to proceed, The Honolulu Advertiser reported from Washington. Sen. Daniel Akaka notified the committee on Monday. The committee has yet to schedule a hearing on the Clifton nomination.

President Bush nominated Clifton in June, but the nomination stalled after the two Hawaii senators refused to approve Bush's choice because they were not involved in the selection.

The Clinton administration had nominated Honolulu attorney James Duffy for the position, but the Senate, then led by Republicans, never acted on it.

Courts: Enviros Question Appellate Court Nominee's Background

REV_00140247

By Brian Stempeck
Greenwire
Thursday, February 14, 2002

With the zeal normally reserved for Supreme Court nominations, environmental and other activist groups are attacking the records of appellate court nominees. Though a great deal of attention has been paid to the civil rights-related furor surrounding Judge Charles Pickering, the Bush administration's pick for the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, conservation groups are trying to shift the spotlight to controversial environmental decisions made by another nominee, Judge D. Brooks Smith, nominated to the Third Circuit.

In a letter sent at the beginning of the month, a coalition of 27 environmental groups including the Earthjustice Legal Defense Fund, Defenders of Wildlife, the Alliance for Justice and the Community Rights Counsel called for the Judiciary Committee to investigate the track record of Smith. The groups say the Pennsylvania District Court judge has a history of ruling in favor of polluters and that Smith took all-expenses paid trips courtesy of corporations and special interests. But one of the groups that sponsored the judge's trips -- and some environmentalists themselves -- say the trips were in fact legitimate judicial seminars.

SMITH'S ENVIRONMENTAL RECORD

In the letter to the Judiciary Committee dated Feb. 1, the coalition identified four "anti-environmental rulings" authored by Judge Smith, including decisions related to pollution settlements, the takings clause and toxic dumping.

The groups claim Smith accepted a biased plea bargain from Action Coal, Inc., a Pennsylvania coal mining company that illegally dumped acid mine drainage into a nearby stream. "Smith penalized the company only $50,000 for dumping, just one percent of the profit realized," the groups said, referring to the $5 million the company saved by not treating the waste instead. Action Coal has since disputed the amount it saved, however, said Glenn Sugameli of Earthjustice.

But Smith's decision was only the federal side of the case, said Ted Kopas, a spokesman for the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Quality. At the state level, Action Coal was forced to pay the "largest civil penalty in the history of Pennsylvania mining," said Kopas, setting up a trust fund to "ensure perpetual treatment of discharges on Action mining sites." Action Coal was forced to pay $625,000 to the state, he said. "Certainly we were satisfied with how we settled the situation. The watershed is in better health today than it has been in years."

The environmental groups also mentioned a district court case, Wicker v. Conrail in which they say Smith unlawfully dismissed claims from railroad employees who had been exposed to toxic waste. "A three-judge Third Circuit panel that included two Reagan appointees unanimously reversed Judge Smith," the groups said in the letter.

Other cases cited included: o Unity Real Estate v. Hudson, which the groups say "strongly suggests that these property rights extremists would find a sympathetic ear in Judge Smith."

* A case related to Wicker where Smith excluded testimony from a pathologist who felt toxic waste was responsible for one employee's death.

Land and property rights advocates contacted had no comment regarding Smith's background or the cases involved. Justice Department officials did not return phone calls.

"Environmental groups don't usually weigh in with judicial concerns," said Sugameli of Earthjustice. Of 34 judges confirmed under this administration, and 56 pending nominations, environmental groups have only raised concerns with Smith, Pickering and one other judge, he said. "Unfortunately the current crop seems to include a number of judges outside the mainstream." Smith's positions in particular are "much more extreme than anything the Supreme Court or any court has ever said." The letter is "technically not a position of opposition," he added, but is a call to investigate Smith's background further.

The groups are also trying to stress that "lower court nominations can be as important as Supreme Court nominations," said Sugameli. Because the high court typically takes less than 80 cases a year, "the vast majority of decisions are made by circuit courts," he said.

JUDICIAL JUNKETS

The environmental coalition was also critical of the trips it says Smith took, trips sponsored by corporations and special interest groups. According to the Community Rights Counsel, Smith took 12 trips between 1992 and 2000. Doug Kendell of CRC called him "one of the most junketed federal judges in America," and the groups cite trips to "luxury resorts and dude ranches."

But the Foundation for Research on Economics and the Environment (FREE), one of the groups sponsoring the trips for federal judges says CRC has misrepresented what are valuable seminars on environmental economics. Smith attended three FREE seminars in Montana between 1996 and 1998, said Doug Geddes, FREE program director, but "for those folks to imply that this is some sort of opportunity for the far right to come talk to judges is just nonsense."

"We are accused of holding conferences at 'luxury' resorts," FREE said on its website in response to CRC criticisms. "Have you ever been to or spoken with representatives of our $110 a night conference facility, the Gallatin Gateway Inn?" CRC publicizes "a distorted and indeed dishonest caricature of FREE's environmental economics and risk analysis seminar series for federal judges," FREE says.

In fact, members of some of the environmental groups criticizing Smith's nomination have even attended FREE seminars themselves. "Over the last twenty years I have attended several FREE programs, including a seminar for federal judges where I made a presentation," said Hank Fischer, former Northern Rockies Representative for Defenders of Wildlife, in a letter to FREE.

"I have never attended a FREE program that didn't feature a full array of viewpoints," he said. "For instance, at the judges seminar where I gave my presentation, the judges also heard from Michael Bean of Environmental Defense (one of the nations most respected endangered species experts) and Doug Honnold of Earth Justice (one of the nations leading environmental litigants)."

Nevertheless, with Sen. Russ Feingold (D-Wis.) -- who co-sponsored a bill outlawing judicial junkets with Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) -- on the Judiciary Committee, there will likely be plenty of interest in Smith's background, said Sugameli. A committee source said that although no date has yet been set for a hearing on Smith, "it's likely that his record on environmental issues and all-expense paid trips will come up." No senators in particular have yet expressed interest in probing Smith's background, the source said, but Sen. Maria Cantwell (D-Wash.) may take an interest.

Supporters of Smith's nomination, including Sen. Rick Santorum (R-Penn.) had no comment on the environmental groups' allegations.

Pickering's Fate in Hands of 'Undecideds'

By James Brosnan
The Commercial Appeal
Wednesday, February 13, 2002

A majority of Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee said Tuesday they remain undecided about whether to confirm U.S. Dist. Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi to the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Committee chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) said Pickering probably added to their concerns during his four-plus hours of testimony before the committee Thursday, but he has not polled the members and has not decided when to schedule a vote. Pickering, 65, of Laurel, Miss., has come under fire from civil rights, pro-choice and African-American groups. Pickering needs one of the 10 Democrats on the committee to support his confirmation if he can get all nine Republicans.

"Obviously they (the Democrats) control the committee," said Sen. Thad Cochran (R-Miss.). I don't know the extent to which they're going to enforce discipline on all their members."

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle (D-S.D.) closed one door Tuesday when he said he would not allow a full Senate vote on Pickering if he doesn't clear the Judiciary Committee. He will extend that privilege only on the President's Supreme Court nominees.

One committee Democrat, Maria Cantwell of Washington, said she is "not likely to support Pickering" because he would not say whether he personally believes there is a right of privacy implicit in the Constitution. That right of privacy was the basis of the Roe vs. Wade ruling striking down state laws prohibiting abortion.

Sen. Diane Feinstein (D-Calif.) also expressed concern about whether Pickering would follow precedent in abortion cases.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) said he believes Pickering still has a chance, even though he has been "unfairly besmirched."

"This is not about Charles Pickering. It's not even about me," said Lott.

"It's about, 'OK, we'll teach you that if you nominate any conservatives, people who are personally pro-life, even though they comply with what the Supreme Court has ruled, we're going to give you a hard time.'"

Leahy responded, "I don't care what someone's personal view on abortion is. That was only one question."

Sen. John Edwards (D-N.C.) said he has "very serious reservations" about Pickering's actions in a cross-burning case to pressure the Department of Justice to drop one charge against a defendant.

Democrats Ted Kennedy of Massachusetts and Russ Feingold and Herbert Kohl of Wisconsin also said they have concerns, but have not reached a conclusion.

Sen. Specter May Hold Judge's Fate; The Moderate Republican is Mum About His Vote on Charles Pickering's Appeal Court Nomination

By Ben Bryant
The Philadelphia Inquirer
Wednesday, February 13, 2002

Sen. Arlen Specter's support was key to the confirmations of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas in 1991 and Attorney General John Ashcroft last year.

Now, the Pennsylvania Republican may be able to determine the fate of Charles W. Pickering Sr., the federal judge from Mississippi whom President Bush wants to fill a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

And Specter is not tipping his hand.

Specter, one of the most liberal Republicans in the Senate, is the only Republican on the Judiciary Committee not to endorse the nomination of Pickering, who is a U.S. District Court judge for the Southern District of Mississippi. "He'll make up his mind when he makes up his mind," said Bill Reynolds, Specter's press secretary.

If Specter does not support Pickering, Republicans will need to attract two of the committee's 10 Democrats to send the nomination to the floor.

The situation indicates how much power Republicans lost last year when Sen. James M. Jeffords of Vermont left the party, swinging control of the upper house to the Democrats. Deprived of majorities on committees, Republicans are facing significant delays in moving Bush nominees through the Senate.

Adding to their problems is the high-stakes nature of appeals court nominations.

"A lot of the matters that don't make it to the Supreme Court get held up in the appeals courts," said Norm Ornstein, a congressional expert with the American Enterprise Institute in Washington. "Democrats want to have their say on who gets to sit on those benches."

Sen. Orrin G. Hatch of Utah, the ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee, said Democrats were working hand in hand with "leftist groups" to scuttle all Bush nominees.

Thomas Mann, a Brookings Institution scholar in Washington, said there was a definite element of partisan warfare to the hearings, an aspect present since the 1987 scuttling of Robert Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court.

"This is about more than Charles Pickering," Mann said. "This is about Bush and the Democrats."

Specter's role is more complex. He has supported conservative nominees over his four terms in the Senate, drawing criticism from feminists over his skeptical questioning of Anita Hill, the law professor whose sexual-harassment allegations almost sank Thomas' appointment to the Supreme Court in 1991.

Specter's support was key in holding other moderate Republicans in line for Thomas. His seal of approval on Ashcroft had similar power last year, when liberal Democrats were assailing Bush's nominee for attorney general on issues of abortion rights and race. Ashcroft eventually prevailed with the support of all Republicans and several Democrats.

So what's holding Specter back from endorsing Pickering?

"Abortion is a very important issue to him," a Democratic staffer on the Judiciary Committee said. "He wants to be sure to preserve a woman's right to choose."

At Pickering's second confirmation hearing Thursday, Specter said he noticed a "curious ambivalence" toward reproductive rights and questions of sexual privacy in several of the judge's opinions.

At the hearing, Democrats suggested Pickering was too far off-center on minority and women's rights. A Republican said the Democrats treated the judge as if he were a criminal.

Thanks to their slim majority, Judiciary's 10 Democrats have enough votes to kill the Pickering nomination if all of them vote no.

But Republicans may have a Plan B, said a Republican Judiciary staffer who asked not to be identified. Although the staffer did not name Democratic senators being pursued by the GOP to support Pickering, an aide to a House Democrat said Sens. Dianne Feinstein (D., Calif.) and Russell D. Feingold (D., Wis.) were possible votes for the judge.

The vote will take place "probably in four to five weeks," a Judiciary spokesman said.

The committee can vote to send the nomination to the full Senate with a favorable or unfavorable recommendation. It can also report Pickering to the floor with no recommendation.

Or the full Senate can bring Pickering up for a vote by itself, discharging his nomination from Judiciary with a majority vote. To do that, Republicans would have to attract support across the aisle from conservative Democrats such as Zell Miller of Georgia and Ben Nelson of Nebraska.

And, in what may be a harder task, they would have to hold onto the moderate-to-liberal members of their own caucus - Specter and several other Northeastern senators.

Metairie Lawyer OK'd as U.S. District Judge

The Advocate
Tuesday, February 12, 2002

The U.S. Senate unanimously approved Jay Zainey of Metairie to be a U.S. District Court judge of the Eastern District of Louisiana on Monday.

After his nomination, Zainey withdrew his family's membership from a Jefferson Parish country club after questions were raised about whether it discriminates against black people. U.S. Rep. Billy Tauzin, R-Chackbay, and former Gov. Dave Treen supported Zainey's nomination. Zainey was Treen's campaign spokesman in 1999, when the former governor ran and lost against David Vitter to succeed Rep. Robert Livingston in Congress.

Zainey received a bachelor's degree from the University of New Orleans in 1973 and a law degree from LSU in 1975.

He served as president of the state bar from 1995-96. While he was president, the bar voted to changes its rules of conduct and bar lawyers from sending targeted solicitation letters for 30 days after an accident or disaster.

Zainey has served as an ad hoc judge in the First Parish Court and Juvenile Court in Jefferson Parish.

As a defense attorney, Zainey represented Frank Bedell, the bus driver implicated after his death in a bus crash on Mother's Day, 1999, which killed 22 people.

Civil Rights Panel Assails Bush Record

CNN.com
Tuesday, February 12, 2002

The Bush administration, backed by a conservative judiciary, is pursuing policies that will increasingly resegregate the United States, according to a new report issued by the Citizens' Commission on Civil Rights.

The commission, founded as a bipartisan body in 1982 to monitor federal policies, said in a 350-page report issued Tuesday that the country was witnessing a "judicial assault on civil rights," partly under cover of the war against terrorism.

"The Bush administration seems determined to pursue policies that will widen the gap between the haves and have-nots," said William Taylor, acting chair of the panel.

"We may awaken from our current preoccupation with national security to find ourselves a nation more divided, less equal, and therefore less secure, than before," he said.

Although President Bush has only been in office slightly more than a year, the report said the direction of his administration seemed "ominous," especially on the issue of judicial appointments.

"Fueled by an economic slowdown and the nation's ongoing war on terrorism, attention to civil rights issues, particularly those involving regulation and enforcement, has been almost nonexistent at a time when events demand just the opposite," the commission said.

It was particularly critical of what it called the judicial dismantling of affirmative action programs that had sought to give women and minorities more opportunities in employment and education to make up for past inequities.

"These decisions have reversed the progress of earlier years and led to a trend towards resegregating America," the report said.

It said this trend was reinforced by failures to apply fair housing laws and the collapse of federal programs designed to give poor people access to affordable housing outside of inner-city ghettos.

The Bush administration was spurring these developments by nominating conservatives opposed to using federal authority to protect civil rights to key positions, the report said.

While the federal government and state and local authorities have poured billions of dollars into urban sprawl, helping construct the infrastructure for expanding suburban developments, it has allowed inner cities to decay while failing to invest in mass transportation, it charged.

"The president came to office trumpeting a concept that he called 'compassionate conservatism.' In practice, after a year, we can see that it amounts to practical and policy tokenism. ... Compassionate conservatism is a sham," said Roger Wilkins, a professor of history and culture at George Mason University and a member of the commission.

Wilkins said Bush's budget, delivered to Congress last week, crippled job training and community development programs that were needed to help poor parents provide a stable environment in which their children could succeed.

In the criminal justice system, racial inequality was pervasive at all levels and growing, the report said.

"Our criminal laws, while facially neutral, are enforced in a manner that is massively and pervasively biased," it said.

"Blacks, Hispanics and other minorities are victimized by disproportionate targeting and unfair treatment by police and other front-line law enforcement officials; by racially skewed charging and plea bargaining decisions of prosecutors; by discriminatory sentencing practices; and by the failure of judges, elected officials and other criminal justice policy-makers to redress the inequities that become more glaring every day," the report said.

Op/Eds

So Much for the Truth; Democrats Distort Nominee's Record

The Daily Oklahoman
Wednesday, February 13, 2002

LIBERALS' scorched-earth strategy in dealing with President Bush's judicial nominations is well illustrated by the distortion job currently being done on U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering, Bush's choice to move up to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Pickering, 64, who has served as a district judge in Hattiesburg, Miss., for 11 years, is being attacked by civil rights and women's rights activists in a style more typical of the assaults made on nominees of presidents in their seventh or eighth year in office, not their second.

Detractors imply that Pickering is a racist because he worked to reduce the sentence of a man in a 1994 cross-burning case. They also don't like his opposition to abortion or his skeptical view of federal job-discrimination laws. For Democrats in the Senate who have slowed confirmations of Bush appointees to a trickle, this is red meat. And grossly unfair.

In fact, as a young lawyer Pickering testified against the imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan and worked with federal law enforcement to arrest klansmen. He also worked to heal racial wounds in his community. As for abortion, he's never had to rule on the issue and has steadfastly maintained that a judge's role is to uphold the law.

Concerning the 1994 cross-burning case, Pickering intervened because of a huge disparity he saw in the sentences recommended for the various defendants.

He called the actions of one of the men a "drunken prank," but he also called it a "despicable act" deserving jail time. Still, he disagreed with a Justice Department civil rights lawyer about whether the man deserved a seven-year term when another defendant was recommended for only a minimal sentence.

Democrats claim Pickering acted improperly by meeting with prosecutors in the case and by going over their heads to the Justice Department. All we know is that Pickering is praised by people who know him and his work in Mississippi. Among his supporters is James Charles Evers, brother of slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers, who would know a racist if he saw one.

It seems to matter little to Democrats, who run the Senate by a one-vote margin. Pickering's nomination is just one of a bundle they have put into the deep freeze, mostly for purely partisan reasons. Last year they confirmed just 43 percent of Bush's judicial nominees, which trailed the confirmation rates of Ronald Reagan (91 percent), George H.W. Bush (62 percent) and Bill Clinton (57 percent) in their first years in office.

Pickering, who received a "well qualified" recommendation from the American Bar Association, doesn't deserve this kind of treatment. He and other Bush nominees are entitled to more timely consideration by the Senate Judiciary Committee and up-or-down votes by the full Senate.

The country deserves an end to the partisanship on Bush's judicial appointments.

Passing Judgement

Intelligencer Journal
Tuesday, February 12, 2002

Sen. Orrin Hatch's selective memory is showing once again.

As chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee during the Clinton administration, Hatch and his colleagues held up hundreds of judicial appointments.

Last week, in defense of Charles W. Pickering Sr., a Mississippi judge whose actions and decisions in the arena of race and the law have raised questions about his fitness to serve on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit, Hatch accused Democrats colleagues of working hand-in-hand with "leftist groups that want to inject political litmus tests into the confirmation process. "Frankly," he said, "I get a little sick of these things that seem to happen here every time we get a Republican president (making judicial nominations)."

His remark evoked the appropriate guffaws from Pickering critics in the gallery, as they should.

In a thinly veiled reference to Hatch and Senate Republicans, Judiciary Committee Chairman Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said he will schedule confirmation hearings "at a pace that will exceed the pace of the past six years."

In fact, Hatch told The Washington Post that the real test for Leahy's committee will be if they can match the 100 confirmations that occurred during Clinton's second year in office. To that end, he said, the committee is off to a good start.

That list, however, should exclude Pickering. As a young attorney in 1959, he offered legal advice on ways to enable Mississippi to criminalize interracial marriage. He also has been linked with Mississippi's Sovereignty Commission, which spied on civil rights and labor groups. While Pickering has maintained he had no ties to the group, he did vote to fund the organization in 1972 and 1973, and a 1972 commission memo lists his name as one of the state lawmakers who wanted to be kept informed of the group's activities.

To counter those accusations, his supporters point out that in the late 1960s he helped prosecute the Ku Klux Klan in Mississippi, and that his views at that time, were not unique in the South.

But during an unusual second hearing last week, evidence was presented suggesting that his past continues to color his present. In a 1994 case involving a cross-burning, Pickering was upset about the stiff, 7-year sentence proposed for Daniel Swan, a 20-year-old who joined two accomplices.

According to Justice Department files, the judge met privately with prosecutors and threatened to order a new trial unless they agreed to a lesser sentence. When they refused, documents show, he contacted a Justice Department official in Washington. The defendant eventually received a 27-month sentence.

Pickerings' actions, said some senators, appear to have violated the judge's code of conduct.

This is not, as some have claimed, a witch hunt into Pickering's past, but a compilation of the sum and total of his actions.

The 5th Circuit of the U.S. Appeals Court covering Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas has been called a trailblazer on desegregation and voting rights in the past. Little wonder Pickering faces opposition. He should not be confirmed.

Appeals Court Nominee Has Earned Our Support

Women's Bar Association of Western Pennsylvania
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Thursday, February 14, 2002

We are writing in response to the Feb. 9 article reporting that a group called the Feminist Majority is among a coalition that is "mounting a campaign against President Bush's nomination of Western Pennsylvania's Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals" ("Appeals Court Nominee Targeted"). We feel compelled to respond.

On behalf of the executive board of the Women's Bar Association of Western Pennsylvania, we support, without reservation, the nomination of the Honorable D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals. Since his appointment to the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania, we have had the pleasure of appearing before Judge Smith as federal prosecutors, defense attorneys and sole practitioners, as well as members of large national law firms. He has always treated each of us and our clients, both individuals and corporations, with dignity and respect. We have found Judge Smith to be a person of high integrity. He is exceptionally intelligent, thoughtful, hard-working and conscientious. When appearing before Judge Smith, you can be assured your case and issues will receive fair and thorough consideration. The public should be aware that the American Bar Association rated Judge Smith as well qualified for the 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals and the Allegheny County Bar Association gave Judge Smith its highest rating, highly recommended.

Judge Smith has consistently attended and supported events sponsored by the Women's Bar Association. This year, we asked him to speak at our annual Susan B. Anthony Award presentation, which is in honor of Mary Beth Buchanan, Western Pennsylvania's first appointed female U.S. attorney. Judge Smith was chosen to speak because of his contributions in creating a good working relationship between attorneys and the judiciary, and because of his commitment to eradicating gender bias in the court system.

Last year, our organization prepared and presented a report to the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania committee on racial and gender bias in the justice system. In interviewing attorneys to prepare the report, we did not receive a single complaint concerning Judge Smith. Based on our personal experience, as well as this study (through which a complaint could be made anonymously), any suggestion or insinuation that Judge Smith is sexist or gender-biased is simply not true.

Living in a State of Constitutional Denial

REV_00140258

By Jonathan Turley
The Chicago Tribune
Sunday, February 10, 2002

Liberal Democrats appear these days to be slowly moving through the stages of loss first defined by psychiatrist Elizabeth Kubler- Ross: denial, anger, bargaining, depression and acceptance. A recent proposal by University of Chicago law professor Abner Mikva would suggest that some Democrats remain mired somewhere between denial and bargaining.

Mikva recently put forward a theory that has the hearts of many die-hard Democrats racing with anticipation: President Bush should be barred from filling any vacancies to the U.S. Supreme Court during his current term. Cloaked in constitutional and historical arguments, Mikva insists that any Supreme Court appointments should be delayed until the next presidential election in two years.

With Bush's popularity at a historic high, Mikva appears to be moving from denial to anger to bargaining. Mikva grudgingly accepts that Bush is president, though in a Washington Post commentary he emphasizes that Al Gore won the popular vote. This is suggested as somehow significant despite the facts that the popular vote margin was statistically razor thin; that previous presidents have been elected on the electoral but not the popular vote; and that, in our constitutional electoral system, popular vote is legally meaningless. Yet this image of an election stolen creates a useful appearance of victimization for Mikva and others in advancing this proposal. It is not that we are trying to subvert the constitutional process, we have been injured and deserve recourse. Otherwise, Mikva's proposal is nothing more than a raw partisan shutdown of the president's prerogative to fill Supreme Court vacancies.

The real motivation for this proposal, however, lies elsewhere. Mikva notes that the Supreme Court could easily have as many as three vacancies during Bush's term and he asks menacingly: "What kind of person would President Bush nominate?" Clearly, not a person to Mikva's liking.

The solution for Mikva is simply to divvy up powers with Bush like hostile roommates locked into a multiyear lease: Bush can continue to wage war and enjoy the trappings of office but the Supreme Court would be off-limits. His reasons are many but few withstand serious review. First, Mikva argues that nothing in the Constitution requires nine justices and that historically there have been long periods of delay in the confirmation of nominees. This ignores that modern delays in confirmation have been due to concern of an individual's qualifications, not some categorical denial of the right of a president to place qualified people on the court.

Mikva also argues that it would be unseemly to allow the president to add to a court that "itself made the final decision as to who should be president."

Mikva again chooses to ignore that voters chose this president through our constitutional electoral system. As it turns out, the people of Florida and the rest of the country made the final decision as to who should be president. Mikva simply notes that "there is still unhappiness" about the court's decision, an empirical observation apparently based on his conversations with

unrequited Gore supporters.

Mikva labels the current Supreme Court as an "activist" court that only needs a couple of new votes to reshape laws in an image that Mikva finds unacceptable. He apparently prefers his own image. For years, conservatives criticized Mikva as one of the most liberal members of Congress when he represented the 10th Congressional District and later as one of the nation's most liberal judges in Washington D.C. Long accused of continuing his legislative career from the bench after leaving Congress, Mikva's labeling of any court as activist is rather disorienting.

Mikva's suggestion would seriously weaken our constitutional system by creating ambiguities in authority or questions of legitimacy. Mikva would create a precedent for members of Congress to categorically refuse nominees by presidents under certain undefined circumstances. It is not simply a bad idea, it is a dangerous one. The sooner this bizarre theory is put to rest the sooner Mikva and others may reach the stage of Kubler-Ross that most voters reached last January: acceptance.

Judge Pickering's Past

By Marcia Greenberger
The Washington Post
Thursday, February 14, 2002

In the Feb. 8 news story "Democrats Challenge Choice of Mississippi Judge," District Court Judge Charles W. Pickering reportedly said that the reason he repeatedly rules against people with employment discrimination claims is because most claims of merit are resolved by the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC).

Judge Pickering is wrong.

The EEOC has a backlog of nearly 35,000 cases, so those needing a timely resolution of their claims can hardly depend on the commission to provide it.

In those cases where the EEOC does offer mediation as an option, both parties must agree. Although most employees who file discrimination complaints with the agency agree to mediation, almost two-thirds of employers decline -- thus giving victims of discrimination little choice but to pursue their claims in court.

Finally, given its resource constraints, the EEOC typically litigates only 3.5 percent of the charges in which it finds reason to believe that discrimination has occurred.

A judge who approaches the employment discrimination cases that come before him with the misguided preconception that they must be without merit -- because otherwise they would have been resolved by the EEOC – cannot be counted on to uphold the laws and the constitutional protections that guarantee civil rights and equal opportunities for all citizens.

Judge Pickering should not be elevated to the 5th Circuit.

Fight Over Judge Replay our Bitter History

By Clarence Page
The Atlanta Journal-Constitution
Wednesday, February 13, 2002

Supporters of U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. compare his confirmation hearings to the McCarthy era. That critique misses the point. I'd compare it to the Nuremberg Trials--or, better yet, to South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission.

Are those comparisons too harsh? Not for those of us who were on the receiving end of the racial apartheid that Pickering once helped to uphold. Questions about his past explain why his nomination to the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans has become President Bush's first big judicial confirmation fight.

Pickering's Feb. 7 hearing went all the way back to his college days to dig up tidbits like the article he penned in 1959 as a 21- year-old law student in the University of Mississippi Law Journal. Without expressing a hint of moral reservation, it suggested how the state could salvage its overturned ban on interracial marriages to "serve the purpose that the legislature undoubtedly intended it to serve."

It was just an "academic exercise," Pickering says now. But some observers were not impressed, especially those of us who remember how disregarding the "white" and "colored" signs on restrooms, water fountains and restaurants in the South could get you killed.

"This hearing is a painful recollection of America's civil rights history," said Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.), who was one of Pickering's toughest interrogators during his hearing. (The committee probably will vote by the end of the month on Pickering's confirmation.)

Yes, such recollections apparently are so painful that Pickering had some trouble recalling all that he was doing at the time. Take, for example, his alleged associations with his state's notorious Sovereignty Commission.

From 1956 to 1973, that supersecretive body devoted itself to protecting the state's "sovereignty," meaning its racial segregation laws and traditions, against the U.S. Supreme Court and other pesky Washington intrusions.

It spied on civil rights groups and targeted civil rights sympathizers for firings, beatings and maybe even killings. Leaked documents revealed that the commission secretly helped the defense team of avowed racist Byron de la Beckwith, who escaped punishment in two trials for the 1963 murder of civil rights leader Medgar Evers. He finally was convicted in 1994 after the documents leaked out.

Pickering testified in 1990, when appointed by the first President Bush, that he had no contact with the commission. He further denied that it was still in business in the 1970s when Pickering was a state senator. Yet a document that was unearthed when the commission's files were opened to the public in 1998 showed Pickering's response to be less than truthful. As a state senator, the document indicated, he had "requested to be advised of developments" in a labor dispute in Laurel, Miss., in the early 1970s.

"If I were making that decision today, I would not do it," Pickering replied to Durbin's questioning.

Pickering also denied that former Mississippi Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin, who was Pickering's law partner from 1961 to 1971, was a segregationist. But Pickering changed that tune when Durbin waved copies of an old campaign ad. It showed Gartin waving a pen with which, he declares in the ad, he "will veto any effort to weaken our defenses around our Southern way of life."

Pickering said he believed Gartin was "trying to move the state forward and still stay in politics." Right. Sometimes you have to go along to get ahead.

With that in mind, Pickering deserves praise for courageously testifying in 1967 against Sam Bowers, a Ku Klux Klan leader who was being tried for the firebombing death of Vernon Dahmer Sr., a civil rights leader who was helping blacks register to vote.

Pickering's testimony against Bowers cost Pickering his re- election as the local prosecutor, Medgar Evers' brother Charles Evers wrote in a Wall Street Journal piece in support of Pickering.

On the other hand, William Taylor, a Washington lawyer who served on the Washington, D-C.-based Citizens' Commission on Civil Rights at that time, pointed out that, by that time, even the white establishment of Mississippi had begun to decide that Klan violence was bad for business.

And Charles Evers, who went on to become a civil rights leader and a small-town mayor before switching from the Democratic to the Republican Party, was listed in the Sovereignty

Commission's documents among the 5,000 tipsters, black and white, who informed on their neighbors. When Time magazine asked him about it in 1998, he was quoted as saying, "If you don't know who your enemies are and talk to them, how are you going to deal with them."

Yes, if Charles Evers sees the value in going along to get ahead, he probably learned it from the masters of the game.

Bush should withdraw this nomination to spare the nation and his administration any more pain.

Do the Crime, Do the Time

By Thomas Jipping
WorldNetDaily
Thursday, February 14, 2002

Senate Democrats say Republicans blocked President Clinton's judicial nominees when they ran the Senate. It's odd, though, that Republican "obstruction" still resulted in confirmation of a lot of radical judges.

Two of Mr. Clinton's most radical nominees were Richard Paez and Marsha Berzon. Republicans resisted for a time, and then-Majority Leader Trent Lott promised in September 1999 not to bring up the nominations "unless we have the votes to defeat them." Yet the obstructionist Republican Senate confirmed them both on March 9, 2000, and today they are among Mr. Clinton's 14 appointments to the activist U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. Three cheers for Republican obstruction.

In 1994, nearly three-fourths of California voters said habitual criminals were not first-time offenders, enacting the "Three Strikes" law requiring at least 25 years behind bars for a third serious or violent felony. The legislature determines, and can always change, the definition of a serious felony, but the people decided that multiple serious felonies deserve more serious punishment.

Californians may have been what one reporter called the "world's largest legislature" when they enacted this law, but last November they met the world's smallest legislature. And Judge Richard Paez won, ruling that using it exactly as Californians intended results in unconstitutional cruel and unusual punishment. The people said to look at the last felony in light of the others; Judge Paez looked at the last felony by itself, concluding that a 25-year sentence was "grossly disproportionate" to the crime.

Judge Marsha Berzon, confirmed on that same fateful day by that same obstructionist Republican Senate, has now had a crack at it. Earnest Bray had been convicted of four counts of robbery, Richard Brown of at least five serious or violent felonies – including second degree murder, assault with a deadly weapon, and robbery. They had chosen a life of crime and those prior crimes converted a subsequent offense from a misdemeanor petty theft into a felony petty theft

"with a prior." Conviction of this third (actually, fifth for Bray and sixth for Brown) felony required a minimum sentence of 25 years. They kept doing the crime so they were finally to do some time.

Opponents of "Three Strikes," however, did not stop when they lost at the polls in 1994. Leftist law professor Erwin Chemerinsky looked for cases in which, no matter what the rap sheet, the latest felony looked relatively minor. Though under "Three Strikes" the rap sheet helped determine the sentence, if a judge looked only at the small tip of the criminal iceberg, he might say the sentence did not fit the crime. Bingo – Mr. Chemerinsky hit pay-dirt with Mr. Clinton's liberal activists out there on the left coast.

(Mr. Chemerinsky, by the way, is now helping bring the lawsuit alleging mistreatment of foreign terrorists in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. Yes, that Chemerinsky.)

Joined by liberal activist poster boy Stephen Reinhardt and fellow Clinton appointee A. Wallace Tashima, Judge Berzon did her part. Going to prison for 25 years for petty theft or shoplifting would, by itself, strike most people as a little much – or, in legalese, "grossly disproportionate." The point is, of course, that neither of these career criminals had received that sentence for that crime. That's not, however, how it works in judicial activist-land. There, reality is whatever the judge says it is.

Judge Berzon looked at petty theft itself – what she called the "core conduct" of the crime for which Bray was convicted. But then homicide is the "core conduct" of both involuntary manslaughter and first-degree murder. It's the other circumstances that define the actual crime and resulting sentence. Bray chose to commit the "prior" that turned his petty theft from a misdemeanor into a felony. Never mind, Judge Berzon's version of the law is what matters and that's what she struck down.

Democrats planned all along to block President Bush's judges. In May 2000, six months before the election, Sen. Joe Biden said: "If Bush is elected … we will see most of the judges stopped who are Republican." Even after Sept. 11, Sen. Biden said: "We are not united on the makeup of the Supreme Court." Democrats planned to justify their obstruction by accusing Republicans of it, whether it had actually happened or not.

If Republicans had only lived up to their billing, perhaps judges like these would not be overturning the people's decisions and dismantling the criminal justice system. Instead, the accusation of fake obstruction is keeping Bush judges from balancing the activism of judges that some real obstruction could have prevented.

Don't Confirm Pickering: Appeals Court Nominee Carries Too Much Baggage

The Register-Guard
Tuesday, February 12, 2002

Charles Pickering, a federal trial judge in Mississippi and now President Bush's nominee for the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, has become something of a political lightning rod.

Civil rights and pro-choice advocates strongly oppose his nomination. Some Democrats are raising questions about a possible violation of the judicial canon of ethics because of a phone call Pickering made to one party in a 1994 trial over a cross-burning incident. Conservatives and, most particularly, U.S. Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., strongly support the nominee as a principled, courageous judge.

On the civil rights front, Pickering's opponents have reached back to 1959, when Pickering was a law student and wrote a three-page note for the school's law review, pointing out flaws in Mississippi's anti-miscegenation law prohibiting marriages between blacks and whites. The note said that the law was vulnerable unless the state legislature made changes. The suggested changes were made.

Questions have also been raised about an alleged connection in the 1960s to the notorious Mississippi Sovereignty Commission, which sought to maintain segregation in the state. Pickering has said he had no contact with the commission, but a document disclosed in 1998 showed that, as a state senator, he asked a commission official to inform him of labor unrest in his home county. And, finally, Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., raised the ethics issue relating to the phone call.

Pickering's supporters told the Senate Judiciary Committee that Pickering was not and had never been a racist and that it was unfair to reach back 40 years to find fault. Others said the judge had helped, not hindered, the recruitment of black Mississippians to run for public office. And Pickering himself testified at the committee's confirmation hearing that he didn't consider his phone call to the U.S. Justice Department to complain about a mandatory five-year sentence for the cross-burner to be a violation of judicial ethics.

The Pickering nomination is seen as a precursor to later Bush nominees to the federal bench. With Democrats in control of the Senate, the president would do well - for himself and for the country - to choose middle-of-the-road nominees and not conservative ideologues. Lott's support for Pickering will certainly help the nominee on the political front, but what's at stake here is the judiciary, not hometown buddies and political cronies.

Charles Pickering's background suggests a mixed view on race, a strong opposition to women's right to choose an abortion, a possible fib about his connection to the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission and a relaxed view of judicial ethics. None of that adds up to a good reason to put him on the appeals court that covers Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas. If anything, it adds up to a reason to reject his nomination. The Senate should do just that.

EXCERPT

JIM LEHRER: Finally Senator, yesterday you said you were going to oppose the nomination of Federal District Judge Charles Pickering--nominated to go to the Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

He's from Mississippi; he's a close friend of Senator Lott (R-Miss.) that you're going to oppose the nomination. Why?

SEN. TOM DASCHLE: Well, because I don't think that Mr. Pickering is qualified at this point. I think that there are some very serious questions about his ability as well as his background and it causes me concern.

So while I certainly believe he has every right to be - to have his case heard, for a vote to be taken, unlike our Republican colleagues, who would sit on nominations for years, we're going to have a vote in committee, and if it reaches the floor on the floor, but when that vote is cast, I've made the decision to oppose his nomination.

JIM LEHRER: It has to do with what he has done as a federal district judge or what he did earlier as a state senator, or what?

SEN. TOM DASCHLE: Well, I think a combination of things, Jim. I'll have a lot more to say about it as the nomination comes to the floor, if it does, but I believe that we can do better than that, and I've expressed myself in that regard.

JIM LEHRER: Senator Daschle, thank you very much.

Letter to the Wall Street Journal Editorial Board

People for the American Way
Tuesday, February 12, 2002

Having been attacked some two dozen times over the years on the editorial page of the Wall Street Journal, I was not surprised by the February 8 editorial regarding the opposition of People For the American Way to the confirmation of Charles Pickering to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. The Journal's editorial page, of course, has long been known as the national chat room of right wing conservatism. Far too often that page has been characterized by vitriolic, shoddy, and irresponsible journalism. For these reasons, I rarely respond to Journal diatribes. However, given what is at stake with the Pickering nomination specifically, and the broader right-wing campaign for ideological domination of the federal judiciary, I am compelled this time to respond.

Your editorial fails to note the opposition to Pickering's confirmation from the Mississippi NAACP and the Magnolia Bar Association, a predominantly African American bar association in Mississippi. His confirmation is also opposed by the Congressional Black Caucus and by a large and diverse coalition of national organizations, including People For the American Way. After carefully reviewing Judge Pickering's record, these organizations have come to the conclusion that Pickering's confirmation to the Fifth Circuit would pose a significant threat to the rights and freedoms that Americans hold dear.

With respect to the Journal's attack on the Democratic members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, particularly Committee Chair Patrick Leahy, the very thought that anyone could control the members of the Senate is absurd. Indeed, the editorial is a transparent attempt to intimidate the Judiciary Committee Democrats, and is sadly typical of the tactics employed throughout the years by the Journal's editorial page.

Rather than deal with Judge Pickering's record, the editorial calls me a "race-card specialist" for having the temerity to address Pickering's disturbing record on civil rights. It is a sad day in America when legitimate concerns about a judicial nominee's record on civil rights cannot be raised without those expressing such concerns being attacked in this manner. It is the obvious aim of such mud-slinging not only to discourage the careful scrutiny required of any judicial nominee but to deflect attention from the nominee's actual record.

People For the American Way has carefully examined Judge Pickering's long public record, focusing particularly on his record as a Mississippi state Senator and later as a federal district court judge. That record is one of insensitivity and hostility to key principles and laws protecting the civil rights of minorities, women, and all Americans. For example, ignored by the Journal editorial is the fact that Pickering, as a judge, has criticized the fundamental "one-person one-vote" principle recognized by the Supreme Court under the 14th Amendment. Also, he has suggested that large deviations from equality in drawing legislative district lines, which the Supreme Court has held presumptively unconstitutional, were "relatively minor" and "de minimis." And, as a judge, Pickering has also criticized or sought to limit important remedies provided by the Voting Rights Act. In addition, in a number of cases involving claims of employment discrimination, Pickering has inserted severe criticisms of civil rights plaintiffs and the use of civil rights statutes, disparagingly stating that the courts "are not super personnel managers charged with second guessing every employment decision made regarding minorities." (See Report of People For the American Way Opposing the Confirmation of Charles W. Pickering, Sr. to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit ["PFAW Report"], pgs. 4-7.)

As a Mississippi state Senator, Pickering supported voting-related measures that helped perpetuate discrimination against African Americans. For example, in 1973, Pickering voted for a partial Senate redistricting plan that harmed minority voting rights by continuing to provide for county-wide voting in a populous county rather than creating single-member districts. In 1975, Pickering voted for a broader Senate-passed measure that similarly provided for county-wide district voting. Also in 1975, when Congress was to renew Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act mandating pre-clearance of voting changes in jurisdictions with a history of discrimination like Mississippi, some legislators opposed it. Pickering co-sponsored a Mississippi Senate resolution calling on Congress to repeal the provision or apply it to all states, regardless of their discrimination history. (See PFAW Report, pgs. 7-9.)

In addition, Pickering voted twice as a Senator (in 1972 and 1973) to appropriate state monies to fund the notorious Mississippi Sovereignty Commission, created by the state after Brown v. Board of Education to resist desegregation. At Pickering's first confirmation hearing, in 1990, he told the Judiciary Committee that "I know very little about what is in those [Commission] records. In fact, the only thing I know is what I read in the newspapers." And while Pickering denied under oath, at his 1990 hearing, having had any contact with the Sovereignty Commission, a subsequently released Commission memorandum dated January 5, 1972 stated that "Senator Charles Pickering" and two other state legislators were "very interested" in a Commission investigation into union activity that had resulted in a strike against a large employer in Laurel, Pickering's home town. Also according to this memorandum, Pickering and the other legislators had "requested to be advised of developments" concerning the union investigation, and had requested background information on the union leader. (See PFAW Report, pgs. 7-10.)

Confronted with this Commission document that conflicts not only with Pickering's 1990 denial of contact with the Sovereignty Commission but also with his professed lack of knowledge about the Commission, Pickering suggested at his February 7, 2002 hearing that he was worried about Ku Klux Klan attempts to infiltrate the union. The Sovereignty Commission, however, worked to infiltrate and spy on civil rights organizations and to obstruct desegregation, hardly the group to which one would turn if concerned about the Klan, as Senator Durbin observed at the February 7 hearing. Moreover, the Commission memorandum itself contains no foundation for the suggestion that Pickering's request had anything to do with the Klan. To the contrary, it states that the request from Pickering and the other legislators was to be "advised of developments in connection with SCEF [Southern Conference Educational Fund] infiltration of GPA [Gulfcoast Pulpwood Association] and full background on James Simmons [President of the GPA]." None of these troubling facts is even mentioned in the Journal editorial.

Completely ignoring Pickering's record in the state Senate, the editorial goes back farther in time and attempts to minimize Pickering's role in Mississippi's shameful history of prohibiting and penalizing interracial marriage. As a law student, Pickering wrote an article advising the Mississippi legislature how to fix a loophole in the state's law making interracial marriage a felony punishable by up to ten years in prison. The loophole had rendered the law unenforceable; Pickering's advice, which the legislature promptly took, enabled the law to be enforced. (See PFAW Report, pgs. 10-12.)

Defending Pickering, the Journal claims that Pickering's article "was supposed to be presenting a neutral analysis of the law," as though neutrality in the face of such an utterly repugnant law was somehow praiseworthy. Moreover, the article was not neutral at all, but rather a prescription for curing the legal defect in the law. And while Pickering has testified at his confirmation hearings to a current belief that who one marries is a personal choice that should not be regulated, at none of his confirmation hearings has he even expressed regret over having written the article. To the contrary, as recently as last week at his confirmation hearing, Pickering has tried to characterize the article as an "academic exercise." But there was nothing "academic" at all about these laws, which harmed real people, or about Pickering's advice to the legislature that the law "should" be amended, or about the fact that the legislature did amend the law as he had suggested, making it enforceable. The Journal falsely accuses us of being concerned only about Pickering's article, which your editorial excuses as youthful indiscretion, conveniently ignoring the concerns specifically expressed in our report about Pickering's far more recent efforts to minimize the article at his confirmation hearings. (See PFAW Report, pgs. 9-11.)

Instead, the Journal editorial rests its entire view of Pickering's civil rights record on Pickering's brief testimony given in a 1967 trial against a leader of the Klan. It is true that this was a courageous and commendable act. But the act itself does not mean, as the Journal suggests, that Pickering has been a champion of civil rights, or even that the testimony was motivated by opposition to the Klan's racist activities. Neither we nor the Journal's editorial writers can know Pickering's motivations. In fact, it appears from a book written by Chet Dillard, one of Judge Pickering's supporters, that Klan violence at that time in Mississippi was hurting the white business establishment in Laurel, Pickering's home town. Dillard's book also includes the following portion of a public statement regarding Klan violence issued in the mid-1960s by the local District Attorney (Dillard), the sheriff of Jones County, the Mayor of the City of Laurel, the county attorney (identified elsewhere in Dillard's book as Charles Pickering) and the Laurel Chief of Police:

We, the undersigned elected officials and public officers charged with the responsibility of protecting you and your property, wish to publicly state and make known our position and intentions concerning certain acts of violence which have recently taken place in Jones County. While we believe in continuing our Southern way of life and realize that outside agitators have cause [sic] much turmoil and racial hatred, let there be no misunderstanding, we oppose such activities, but law and order must prevail.

W.O. Dillard, Clear Burning, at 119 (emphasis added).

In any event, the charge against Judge Pickering is not that he is a racist, which is nothing more than a straw person set up by the Journal for debunking by reference to his 1967 testimony. In evaluating Pickering's commitment to progress on civil rights and hence his qualifications for a lifetime appointment to the court of appeals, of far greater relevance than one act taken 35 years ago is how he subsequently handled broader civil rights issues as a state Senator and then as a federal trial judge. In those important and influential public positions, Pickering has been sorely wanting, as his record reveals. (See PFAW Report, pgs. 4-12.)

Ignoring that record, the Journal moves on to a different subject and criticizes us for our concern about Judge Pickering's use of his official judicial position to promote religion and religious practices. In a speech made in 1984, before he became a judge, Pickering stated that the Bible should be "recognized as the absolute authority by which all conduct of man is judged . . . ." He was asked about this by the Senate Judiciary Committee at his 1990 confirmation hearing, and whether he would have any problem separating his religious beliefs from his role as a judge. He assured the Committee he would not. But his record since becoming a judge indicates that he has had such difficulty. Indeed, the Almanac of the Federal Judiciary, an independent publication that profiles all federal judges, contains this statement from one lawyer who has practiced before Judge Pickering: "He is the judge who concerns me the most. He's a fine person, but he's almost so pious that it interferes with his assignment as a judge." As we stressed in our report, our concern does not relate to Judge Pickering's personal religious beliefs. Judge Pickering, like every American, is entitled to hold and to practice his religious beliefs. But it is inappropriate for a federal judge, acting in that capacity, to attempt to promote those beliefs or suggest to those appearing before him that they should undertake particular religious practices or bring religion into their own lives. As the Supreme Court has recognized, "a union of government and religion tends to destroy government and to degrade religion." (See PFAW Report, pgs. 20-24.)

The Journal editorial wrongly accuses us of criticizing Judge Pickering because he has published fewer than 100 of the approximately 1,100 written decisions he estimates he has issued in his 11 years on the bench. The editorial misses the point entirely, which is that it would have been premature for the Senate Judiciary Committee to consider Judge Pickering's nomination without having copies of his unpublished decisions, decisions that form the bulk of his record as a district court judge and are unquestionably relevant to his qualification to sit on the court of appeals. Nonetheless, Senator Trent Lott, a friend of Pickering's and his Senate patron, pushed for Pickering's consideration by the Senate Judiciary Committee last fall even though Pickering's unpublished decisions were not available. The efforts by Senator Lott to bring about this irresponsible act was political maneuvering at its worst. Fortunately, Senator Leahy takes seriously the Senate's constitutional role in examining and consenting to judicial nominees, and insisted that Judge Pickering provide his unpublished decisions to the Judiciary Committee. Even then, scores of those decisions were not provided to the Committee until the eve of Pickering's hearing on February 7, and more than 100 still have not been produced, additional points overlooked by the Journal.

Another critical point about Judge Pickering's decisions is the record of his reversals by the Fifth Circuit, also ignored by the Journal. In 15 of the 26 cases that Pickering has been reversed by the Fifth Circuit, it has been through unpublished decisions by the court of appeals. According to Fifth Circuit rules, unpublished decisions are used to decide "particular cases on the basis of well-settled principles of law." Eleven of those 15 cases in which Pickering, according to the Fifth Circuit, violated "well-settled principles of law" involved constitutional, civil rights, criminal procedure, or labor issues, further raising troubling concerns about Pickering. Moreover, Pickering is one of two district court judges within the Fifth Circuit nominated by President Bush to that court of appeals. The other, Edith Brown Clement, who was recently elevated to the Fifth Circuit after serving as a district court judge for a slightly shorter period than Pickering, was never reversed in an unpublished opinion by the Fifth Circuit, according to the information that she provided to the Senate. (See PFAW Report, pgs. 11-16.)

The Journal editorial next moves to an attack on the Judiciary Committee for failing to hold hearings on 21 of 23 pending appellate court nominations. In fact, since June, when the Senator

Leahy became chair of the Committee, the Committee has held hearings on eight of President Bush's appellate nominees. Also since June, the Senate has confirmed a total of 34 of President Bush's judicial nominees. Indeed, despite the tragedies of September 11 and the disruptions caused by the anthrax attacks, the Committee is acting far more responsibly under Senator Leahy's leadership than the past six-and-one-half years when Republicans controlled the Committee.

While your editorial appears to minimize the importance of appellate court nominations, senators like Trent Lott, John Ashcroft, and Orrin Hatch thought the appeals courts were so important that they created an unprecedented ideological blockade against President Clinton's appellate court nominees. Between 1995-2000, 35 percent of Clinton's appeals court nominees were blocked without even getting a vote; 45 percent failed to receive a vote in the Congress during which they were nominated. The record was even worse with regard to the Fifth Circuit, to which Judge Pickering has been nominated. During the last five years of the Clinton administration, only one of the four Clinton nominees to that court was confirmed; the three others were not even allowed to come up for a vote.

This was not politics as usual. Progressive organizations opposed only a handful of lower court nominees during the 12 years that Ronald Reagan and George H.W. Bush filled federal courts with hundreds of extremely conservative judges. Consistent with the Senate tradition with respect to lower court nominees, we generally focused on competence and character, though ideology was considered in a few extreme cases.

But right-wing senators, urged on by Religious Right organizations and their allies, shattered that tradition. Their campaign was remarkably successful in perpetuating appeals court vacancies. Currently, seven of the 13 federal circuit courts are dominated by Republican appointees and four by Democratic appointees; two are tied. When current vacancies are filled, the number dominated by Republican appointees will be 11 of 13. And by the end of this presidential term, it could be all 13. That makes it critically important that President Bush nominate and the Senate confirm mainstream judges who can win genuine bipartisan support.

The campaign by right-wing senators reflects their understanding that the appeals courts are critical to the ultimate success of their efforts to achieve ideological domination of the federal judiciary. Because the Supreme Court hears fewer and fewer cases each year (fewer than 90 last Term, compared with nearly 30,000 last year by the federal courts of appeal), the appeals courts frequently are the court of last resort when it comes to protecting civil and constitutional rights.

Judge Pickering's nomination to the Fifth Circuit is of particular importance and concern since that court's jurisdiction includes the largest minority population in the country (42%). Especially in the Fifth Circuit, which has already issued a number of troubling decisions on civil and constitutional rights, adding another judge like Charles Pickering poses a grave danger to Americans' rights and liberties.

As more than 200 law professors stated in a letter sent to the Senate Judiciary Committee last summer, no judicial nominee is presumptively entitled to confirmation. Because federal judicial appointments are for life and significantly affect the rights of all Americans, and because of the Senate's co-equal role with the President in the confirmation process, nominees must demonstrate that they meet the appropriate criteria. These criteria include an "exemplary record in the law," an "open mind to decision-making," a "commitment to protecting the rights of ordinary Americans," and a "record of commitment to the progress made on civil rights, women's rights and individual liberties."

Given what is at stake, and given the unprecedented situation created by the six-year blockade of the appellate courts, it is our right and our obligation as citizens to examine carefully this nominee's record against these criteria and to express any legitimate concerns about that record to the public and to the Senate. Indeed, history shows that People For the American Way and others who exposed the right wing judicial philosophies of such Supreme Court nominees as Robert Bork and Clarence Thomas were guilty, if anything, of understatement.

The Journal editorial considers our opposition to Judge Pickering's confirmation as "borking," propagating the right-wing's use of that word as a verb meaning an unfair personal attack on a nominee. But the Bork nomination was not about Robert Bork's personal life or politics. Robert Bork's confirmation to the Supreme Court was opposed by millions of Americans and rejected by the largest bipartisan vote in Senate history because his record of extremism in opposition to civil and constitutional rights demonstrated that he was unqualified to sit on our nation's highest court. Our report examining Charles Pickering's long public record is precisely that, an examination of his record. Space does not permit a full recitation of everything overlooked by the Journal in Judge Pickering's record. We commend your readers to our full report, available on our web site, www.pfaw.org, for the details that the Journal ignored.

We believe strongly in the Senate's constitutional obligation to scrutinize carefully the record of every nominee for a lifetime appointment to the federal judiciary, particularly a nominee to the Supreme Court or the Courts of Appeals. While we cannot know what is in Judge Pickering's heart, we can know what is in his record. And that record makes him unworthy of a lifetime appointment to one of the most powerful courts in the country.

Sorry, I should have been more clear last night. I was confusing two different conversations that I had with Jacque. Actually, only site costs have increased which would not affect the political travel costs since those only include hotel, per diem, rental cars, etc. So, this would not be factored into the deposit costs and you can disregard my suggestion about increasing the deposit. However, each individual city should be evaluated somewhat when asking for the deposit...hotels in NYC will obviously be more expensive than in Boise.

As for why site costs have increased, there's no real clear explanation other than the economy. Apparently, since September 11th, vendors have increased their prices and, therefore, site costs have gone up. Luckily, hotels, rental cars, etc. have not had much of a price change. So, the political costs on this end won't be affected that much but the hosts site costs will be higher (but we don't need to worry about that.)

This should give you a good idea of the average costs. However, according to Jacque in FMD, expenses for trips after September 11th (eg. Orlando) have increased significantly. So, we may want to consider increasing the deposit request. I can give you an update on trip costs as soon as the bills are processed for the trip summaries you signed today.

Regarding process going forward on tort reform, the working group has had a couple of meetings and we are getting close to what appears to be a set of consensus proposals. Before I try to set up a briefing for principals, which would include on this issue at the very least, Karl, the Judge, Josh and Karen, I plan to set up a DPC deputies meeting at which any additional policy suggestions or concerns about the working group product can be raised. Tim, as well, as Brett and Courtney would obviously be invited to participate in that meeting. The main reason to tee it up at the Deputies level is simply to make sure that the key agencies (DOJ, HHS, and a couple of others) are heard from with respect to the policy.

Please let me know if you have any suggestions on process or substance.

thanks -- Jay

We had a couple of questions: Rebecca mentioned that the memo she has been preparing will be presented to the "deputies meeting" in the next week or two. What is the "deputies meeting"? Who attends? Will it then be presented to the principals, including Judge Gonzales to reach a final decision on recommendations to be presented to the President?

As you know, representatives of Citizens for Civil Justice Reform asked to meet with the Judge about these issues. The Judge will not be meeting with the group. Obviously you all are welcome to reach out to them if you like.

The White House Counsel's office requests that you and/or a designated high-level attorney in your office attend a meeting next Wednesday the 20th at
3:00 in Room 180 of the EEOB. At the meeting, we will review political activity rules and issues, as well as answer any questions you may have. The meeting should last less than an hour.

Please let me know by reply e-mail who from your office will attend.
Clearance information should be provided to Lori Lorenzi at 456-7900.

Ken Mehlman of the White House Office of Political Affairs also will be in contact with the Chiefs of Staffs of your departments about this meeting.

I commend to all of you the survey of conflicts of interest prosecutions.
It provides insight into various pitfalls and, to an extent, the arbitrary nature of enforcement. The first one, for example, does not on its face meet the elements of section 208 because it does not establish the employee's financial interest in the matter he handled officially (having a business relationship is not enough.) Also, look at 2,3,4,5, 7, 10.
This is an annual publication of OGE.

2000 Conflict of Interest Prosecution Survey

1. United States v. Douglas J. Blake -- Blake was an employee of the United States Department of the Air Force.

Blake had business relationships with Champion Construction Company whereby he and Champion Construction Company shared profits as business partners in a series of ongoing business ventures. At various times, Blake used the equipment and resources in his Government office to advance some of their joint business interests.

In or about April and May 1998, Blake advised principals of Champion Construction Company that there would be a bid process initiated to award a contract to renovate office space being prepared for the Government office for which he served as supervisory special agent and recommended that Champion Construction Company bid on the project. Prior to making the bid, principals of Champion Construction Company asked Blake whether there was any problem with Champion Construction Company bidding on the project because of the Company's and the principals' relationship with him. Blake assured them that there would be no conflict because he would not participate in the bidding process or the selection of the contractor.

In or about May and June 1998, Blake recommended to the entity conducting the bidding process on behalf of the Government that Champion Construction Company be given the opportunity to bid on the contract to renovate office space being prepared for the Government. In or about June and July 1998, Blake provided advice to the Contracting Officer's Technical Representative at Blake's agency in Northern Virginia in the Eastern District of Virginia that Champion Construction Company should be selected to perform the work on the construction project. On or about July 8, 1998, Blake personally selected Champion Construction Company for the construction project. He did so after being delegated the responsibility to make the decision but without ever disclosing to anyone within the agency that he knew he should not participate because of his relationship with Champion Construction Company. In or about July 1998 through October 1998, Blake continued to participate personally and substantially in change orders to the original contract and in the oversight of Champion Construction Company's work on the construction project, for which Champion Construction Company was paid approximately $303,000 out of money belonging to the United States.

Blake pled guilty on July 11, 2000, to a felony count of violating 18 U.S.C. § 208. Blake was sentenced on September 22, 2000, to one-year probation and a $2,000 fine. Blake resigned from his position with the Air Force in March 2000, during the investigation.

Prosecution handled by the Public Integrity Section of the Department of Justice's Criminal Division.

2. United States v. Mark A. Boster -- Boster served as the Deputy Assistant Attorney General of the Information Resources Management office within the Department of Justice from 1995 until January 30, 1999, when he left Government service. In that position, Boster managed the various functions of the Information Resources Management office, including computer systems. The Information Resources Management office is responsible for maintaining, assessing, designing, and procuring the information systems and telecommunications for the Department of Justice.

At all pertinent times, Boster was paid at the rate of level 5 of the Executive Service pay scale while employed by the Government. In January 1999, Boster left the position of Deputy Assistant Attorney General and joined Science Applications International Corporation (SAIC) in McLean, Virginia. On or about April 7, 1999, after Boster had left Government service and was working for SAIC, he telephoned the Acting Deputy Assistant Attorney General of Information Resources Management, the position Boster previously held before leaving the Department of Justice. Boster told the official that he knew that the Department of Justice was considering not using SAIC on a new contract and stated that such action might require a payment to SAIC, which could, in turn, trigger the Anti-Deficiency Act because budgeted funds would have been exceeded.

The Government maintained that Boster's conduct violated 18 U.S.C. § 207(c), a one-year post-employment restriction that prohibits a former "senior employee" from communicating to or appearing before his former department or agency, on behalf of another person or entity other than the United States, with the intent to influence official action. Boster denied the allegations. Pursuant to a civil settlement agreement signed by the parties in August 2000, Boster paid the Government $30,000, and the Government released Boster from its claims.

Prosecution handled by the Public Integrity Section of the Department of Justice's Criminal Division.

3. United States v. Francis DeGeorge -- During the relevant period, DeGeorge served as the Inspector General of the United States Department of Commerce.

During the same time period, Litton/PRC, Inc., was a company conducting business with the Department of Commerce and one of its components, the National Weather Service. Litton/PRC had a contract known as the "Advanced Weather Interactive Processing System" with the National Weather Service. That contract involved the updating of the National Weather Service's automated system. Litton/PRC had a financial interest in the outcome of the contract, which DeGeorge knew.

As the Inspector General of the Department of Commerce, DeGeorge was responsible for oversight of Litton/PRC's contract with the National Weather Service, and he participated personally and substantially in that contract by making recommendations and rendering advice thereon. From on or about November 1995 through July 1996, while still employed with the Department of Commerce and participating personally and substantially in Litton/PRC's contract with the National Weather Service, DeGeorge negotiated with a representative of Litton/PRC for prospective employment. DeGeorge also met with the president of Litton/PRC and other Litton/PRC personnel in connection with prospective employment. DeGeorge's meetings and negotiations with Litton/PRC's representatives took place within the Eastern District of Virginia.

DeGeorge pled guilty on May 25, 2000, to a misdemeanor count of violating 18 U.S.C. § 208, for participating personally and substantially as a Government employee in a particular matter in which, to his knowledge, an organization with whom he is negotiating prospective employment has a financial interest. DeGeorge was sentenced on June 22, 2000, to one-year probation.

Prosecution handled by the Public Integrity Section of the Department of Justice's Criminal Division.

4. United States v. Michael P. Filchock -- Filchock was employed by the Export-Import Bank of the United States (Ex-Im Bank) from September 1994 until June 1998. Ex-Im Bank is a wholly owned Government corporation and independent agency of the United States. Ex-Im Bank provides a variety of financing to foreign buyers of United States goods. For the period of November 1996 through September 1997, Filchock served as a loan officer. In that position, Filchock was responsible for reviewing loan applications and presenting his financial analysis to his superiors. Based on Filchock's recommendation and analysis, Ex-Im Bank would decide whether to make a loan.

First National Bank of New England (First National Bank) was among the financial institutions that requested the services of Ex-
Im Bank. While a loan officer at Ex-Im Bank, Filchock had frequent, almost daily, contact with First National Bank regarding the various guarantees sought by the bank.

On July 30, 1997, Filchock sent his resume to First National Bank. On August 8, 1997, Filchock interviewed with First National Bank, and he sent a follow-up thank-you letter to First National Bank on August 13, 1997. By a letter dated August 12, 1997, First National Bank offered Filchock a position with First National Bank. Filchock eventually declined the offer by a letter dated August 26, 1997.

While negotiating employment with First National Bank, Filchock authored two memoranda recommending the approval of guarantees requested by First National Bank. On August 12, 1997, Filchock wrote a memorandum recommending the approval of First National Bank's request for a guarantee in the amount of $266,567. On August 13, 1997, Filchock authored a memorandum recommending approval for First National Bank's request for a comprehensive guarantee in the amount of $774,451.

The Government maintained that Filchock's conduct violated 18 U.S.C. § 208, for participating personally and substantially as a Government employee in a particular matter in which, to his knowledge, an organization with whom he is negotiating prospective employment has a financial interest. Pursuant to a civil settlement agreement signed by the parties in August 2000, Filchock paid the Government $5,000, and the Government released Filchock from its claims.

Prosecution handled by the Public Integrity Section of the Department of Justice's Criminal Division.

5. United States v. Jean Kennedy Smith -- From June 1993 to October 1998, Smith served as United States Ambassador to Ireland. By letter to the President of the United States dated April 20, 1998, Smith advised of her decision to resign as Ambassador, although she subsequently agreed to stay on in that capacity until conclusion of the President's trip to Ireland in the Fall of 1998.

On August 5, 1998, while serving as Ambassador, Smith sent a letter on official State Department letterhead to Irish Prime Minister Bertie Ahern requesting a one million dollar donation from the Irish Government to help underwrite costs related to the year 2000 Irish Festival to be sponsored by and held at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts (the Kennedy Center). At the time she sent the letter, Smith was also serving on the Board of Trustees of the Kennedy Center. The Kennedy Center is a non-profit cultural and charitable organization located in Washington, D.C. In addition to hosting performances of music and dance, the Kennedy Center also sponsors numerous cultural events. Smith was aware of the relevant prohibitions on fundraising activities. In May 1993, before being confirmed by the United States Senate as Ambassador, Smith wrote in a letter to the Department of State's Deputy Legal Advisor and Designated Agency Ethics Official that she would not personally participate in any solicitation of funds involving the Kennedy Center. Smith asserted that she understood she had received approval to send the letter in question. There was no allegation that Smith gained personally in the matter.

The Government maintained that Smith's conduct violated 18 U.S.C. § 208, for participating personally and substantially as a Government employee in a particular matter in which, to her knowledge, an organization in which she is serving as an officer, director, or trustee has a financial interest. Smith denied that she violated section 208 and asserted affirmatively that as Ambassador to Ireland she sought to conduct herself in accord with the highest ethical standards. Pursuant to a civil settlement agreement signed by the parties in September 2000, Smith paid the Government $5,000, and the Government released Smith from its claims.

Prosecution handled by the Public Integrity Section of the Department of Justice's Criminal Division.

6. United States v. Matthew Norouz -- 18 U.S.C. § 209, which bars the unlawful supplementation of salary, applies to officers and employees of the District of Columbia and non-Government sources who compensate any such officers and employees for their Government services. Several inspectors employed by the District of Columbia Department of Consumer and Regulatory Affairs were accepting bribes and gratuities in exchange for the issuance of construction, plumbing, and electrical permits. Norouz is a private architect who paid "tips" to one of these inspectors in exchange for speedy and favorable inspections on his renovation projects.

Norouz was allowed to plead guilty on April 10, 2000, to a misdemeanor count of section 209. On July 10, 2000, Norouz was sentenced to one-year probation and a $1,000 fine. [The inspectors were convicted on charges of violating 18 U.S.C. § 201.]

Prosecution handled by the U.S. Attorney's office, District of Columbia.

7. United States v. Donald Rappaport -- Rappaport served as Chief Financial Officer and Chief Information Officer of the United States Department of Education.

During such period, Rappaport's wife owned 600 shares of Compaq computer stock that she had inherited from her mother. During this period, Rappaport was involved in his official capacity in issues concerning Compaq computers.

The Government contended that Rappaport violated 18 U.S.C. § 208, for participating personally and substantially as a Government officer in a particular matter in which, to his knowledge, he and/or his spouse has a financial interest. Rappaport denied the claims. Pursuant to a civil settlement and release in October 2000, Rappaport paid the Government $20,000, and the Government released Rappaport from its claims.

8. United States v. Lugman Sabour, United States v. Kittim Simpson -- 18 U.S.C. § 209, which bars the unlawful supplementation of salary, applies to officers and employees of the District of Columbia and non-Government sources who compensate any such officers and employees for their Government services. Richard Greenblat, an employee of the District of Columbia Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV), was accepting bribes in exchange for altering DMV computer records in order to "clean up" the driving records of individuals who had outstanding traffic tickets or past violations that might prevent them from obtaining a driver's license. These bribe transactions were arranged through a middleman named James Bevineau. Sabour and Simpson were private individuals who paid Bevineau in order to have their driving records "cleaned up." Bevineau then passed a portion of the money on to Greenblat.

Sabour and Simpson were allowed to plead guilty on January 5, 2000, and April 13, 2000, respectively, to a misdemeanor count of aiding and abetting a violation of section 209. On April 5, 2000, Sabour was sentenced to two-years probation and a $200 fine. On July 12, 2000, Simpson was sentenced to one-year probation and a $250 fine. [Greenblat and Bevineau were convicted of violating 18 U.S.C. § 201.]

9. United States v. Arnett Smith -- 18 U.S.C. § 208, which bars taking official action in matters affecting personal financial interests, is applicable to officers and employees of the District of Columbia. Smith was the Chief of the Day Programs Branch of the District of Columbia Mental Retardation and Developmentally Disabled Administration.

Smith's duties included assigning patients to various day treatment facilities for mentally disabled adults. He was involved in a series of financial dealings with the operator of one of these day treatment centers, Denise Braxtonbrown-Smith.

These dealings included making loans to Braxtonbrown-Smith, which were repaid at exorbitant interest rates, and engaging in secret real estate transactions with Braxtonbrown-Smith that resulted in financial gains for Smith. During the same time period, Smith was personally involved in the assignment of clients to Braxtonbrown-Smith's day treatment center, which directly resulted in substantial monetary benefits to Braxtonbrown-Smith.

On November 5, 1999, Smith was indicted on charges of violating section 208; 18 U.S.C. § 371 (conspiracy); and 18 U.S.C. § 201. Following trial, he was found guilty on May 16, 2000, of section 371 (conspiracy) and two felony counts of section 208. On December 12, 2000, Smith was sentenced to forty-six months incarceration, a $25,000 fine, and 100 hours of community service.

10. United States v. Glenn R. Hodges -- Hodges was Chief of Staff at the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Kansas City, Missouri.

During the same time period he was employed in this capacity at the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center, Hodges was also employed as a physician by the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kansas. In his official Governmental capacity, Hodges approved a contract dated May 5, 1995, for cardiocath services to the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center by the University of Kansas Medical Center.

On March 8, 2000, Hodges pled guilty to a misdemeanor violation of 18 U.S.C. § 208, which bars taking official action in matters affecting personal financial interests. On August 7, 2000, Hodges was sentenced to pay a $250 fine and a special assessment of twenty-five dollars.

Prosecution handled by the Western District of Missouri.

11. United States v. Timothy A. Anderson -- Anderson was an employee of the United States Government.

REV_00140333

According to the Government's factual allegations in a civil complaint, Anderson was employed as a chemist by the United States Food and Drug Administration (FDA) in the Office of Generic Drugs (OGD) from February 9, 1992, through March 25, 1994. In that capacity, he performed reviews of Abbreviated New Drug Applications (ANDAs) submitted by pharmaceutical companies seeking to gain approval to manufacture and market generic versions of innovator drugs. Shortly before leaving employment with the FDA, in March 1994, Anderson completed the first-level chemistry review of Taro Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ANDA #74-444 for Miconazole Nitrate Vaginal Creme 2%, an alleged generic equivalent to the prescription innovator drug Monistat-7. His review consisted of an extensive analysis of the chemical components, manufacturing process, testing methods, and labeling requirements of the product.

On or about July 1996, Anderson commenced employment as Vice President of Regulatory Affairs and United States Agent for Taro Pharmaceuticals, Inc., in its Hawthorne, New York office. In 1996 and early 1997, Anderson contacted OGD officials on numerous occasions in an effort to obtain approval of Taro Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ANDA #74-444 for Miconazole Nitrate Vaginal Creme 2%, which was still pending before OGD. Anderson's contacts consisted of status calls in which he urged OGD representatives to speed up the process of approval of the application and substantive discussions concerning problems with the application. Throughout his contacts with OGD officials, Anderson was aggressive in seeking the approval of ANDA #74-444. Further, Anderson used his acquaintance with supervisory-level OGD officials from his tenure as an OGD employee in an attempt to get special treatment for ANDA #74-444 based on his relationships with these officials. Anderson made a number of calls to these supervisory-level officials regarding ANDA #74-444 urging them to speed up the process of its approval. ANDA #74-444 was approved in January 1997.

In the complaint, the Government alleged that Anderson's actions violated 18 U.S.C. § 207(a)(1), which prohibits a former Government employee from communicating to or appearing before the Government, on behalf of another person or entity other than the United States, in connection with a matter in which he participated personally and substantially as a Government employee. Anderson denied the allegations of the complaint. Pursuant to a settlement agreement signed by the parties in June 2000, Anderson agreed to pay the Government $15,000, and the Government released Anderson from its claims.

Prosecution handled by the Southern District of New York.

12. United States v. Annette Johnson -- Johnson was a clerical employee of the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) who took money in exchange for assisting in processing INS employment authorization documents.

Johnson pled guilty to a misdemeanor violation of 18 U.S.C. § 203(a)(1), for receiving compensation for representational services rendered in a particular matter before a department or agency of the United States. On December 12, 2000, Johnson was sentenced to two-years probation and a $1,000 fine.

Prosecution handled by the Southern District of New York.

13. United States v. Gilford Moss -- Moss was an Internal Revenue Service (IRS) Revenue/Settlement Officer.

Moss was assigned to an IRS collection matter which gave him inside information concerning a proposed stock exchange. After his role in the case was substantially over, Moss purchased approximately $2,000 in the stock subject to the proposed exchange based in part upon information he had learned during the course of his duties as a Revenue Officer. After his stock purchase, on several occasions Moss had minor contact on the case with the parties before the IRS. He eventually went to his supervisor, disclosed his interest in the stock, and was removed from further participation in the case. Moss lost money on the stock transaction.

Moss was prosecuted pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 208, for participating personally and substantially as a Government officer or employee in a particular matter in which, to his knowledge, he has a financial interest, and 18 U.S.C. § 216(a)(1). Moss was placed on pretrial diversion for six months on the condition that he resign from the IRS and perform 120 hours of community service.

Prosecution handled by the District of Oregon.

14. United States v. Carlos Colina-Vargas -- Colina-Vargas was a grant writer for city and county governments. Raymundo Ramirez was an employee of the Department of Commerce. Colina-Vargas agreed to give a fee to Ramirez in exchange for getting a grant application approved.

Though originally charged with violating 18 U.S.C. § 201, Colina-Vargas was permitted to plead guilty on April 20, 2000, to a misdemeanor violation of 18 U.S.C. § 203(a)(2), promising compensation to a Government employee for representational services rendered in a particular matter before a department or agency of the United States. On June 20, 2000, the District Judge sentenced Colina-Vargas to two-years probation. [Ramirez pled guilty to violating 18 U.S.C. § 201.]

Prosecution handled by the Western District of Texas.

15. United States v. Genaro M. Suarez -- Suarez, who was a private citizen, attempted to bribe an Internal Revenue Service (IRS) employee by paying him $250 for favorable treatment regarding an IRS matter.

On August 17, 2000, Suarez pled guilty to a misdemeanor violation of 18 U.S.C. § 209, which prohibits the payment of supplementation to a Government employee's salary. On the same date, Suarez was sentenced to one-year probation and a special assessment of $25.

Prosecution handled by the Western District of Texas.

Very good piece on Pickering in New York Times.

Blacks at Home Support a Judge Liberals Assail
By DAVID FIRESTONE

LAUREL, Miss., Feb. 15 ? Back in Washington, his opponents have depicted Judge Charles W. Pickering as the personification of white Mississippi's oppressive past, a man so hostile to civil rights and black progress that he is unfit for promotion to a federal appeals court.

But here on the streets of his small and largely black hometown, far from the bitterness of partisan agendas and position papers, Charles Pickering is a widely admired figure of a very different present.

In funeral parlors and pharmacies, used-car lots and the City Council chambers, the city's black establishment overwhelmingly supports his nomination to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, which is heading toward a contentious vote in the Senate in the first major judicial battle of the Bush administration.

Though few black residents here subscribe to Judge Pickering's staunchly Republican politics, many say they admire his efforts at racial reconciliation, which they describe as highly unusual for a white Republican in the state.

"I have never seen Trent Lott open his arms to the black community the way Charles Pickering has," said Larry E. Thomas, owner of Thomas Pharmacy, referring to the Senate minority leader, who is Judge Pickering's friend and patron. "Over the years I've seen him work with black leaders and really try to make an effort to understand and help the community. That's a progressiveness that we need to see more of in this state."

Progressive is not exactly the description used by the national black officials who are making an intense effort to prevent the judge's appointment. "A vote for Pickering is a vote against civil rights," said Julian Bond, the national chairman of the N.A.A.C.P. Representative Robert C. Scott, Democrat of Virginia, speaking against the nomination with other members of the Congressional Black Caucus, said, "It's hard to imagine a person who is more hostile to civil rights." Judge Pickering has also been condemned by a variety of big-city newspaper editorial boards and columnists.

But such comments carry little weight among those who actually know the man personally here in Laurel, in southeast Mississippi. Judge Pickering, now a federal district judge in the nearby city of Hattiesburg, was praised by black city officials for helping to set up after- school youth programs here, and for directing federal money to medical clinics in low-income areas when he was a state senator. Black business leaders say he was influential in persuading white-owned banks to lend money to black entrepreneurs, helping to strengthen the city's black middle class.

"I can't believe the man they're describing in Washington is the same one I've known for years," said Thaddeus Edmonson, a former local president of the N.A.A.C.P. who is now president of the seven-member Laurel City Council and one of its five black members. "If those people who are voting against him because of some press release would just come down here and talk to the people who know him, I think they would have a very different opinion."

The judge's widespread popularity in his hometown has been frustrating to the many civil rights and abortion rights groups that have worked to portray him as an ideological relic of the Old South.

Several opponents of his nomination have tried unsuccessfully to get his supporters to change their minds, and their inability to do so reflects the distance between national liberal groups and many Southern blacks in small towns. In a city like Laurel, with a population of 18,393, one's personality and faith are often more important than a judicial paper trail or an adherence to an agenda.

People for the American Way, a liberal organization based in Washington, has criticized Judge Pickering for disregarding the separation of church and state by promoting religious programs from the bench. But many prominent blacks here say it is precisely his religious background ? he was president of the Mississippi Baptist Convention in the 1980's ? that they admire.

"I know Judge Pickering is a fair and impartial person grounded with Christian ethics and beliefs, who ought to be given this chance," said the Rev. Arthur Logan, the black pastor of the Union Baptist Church and a member of the City Council. "There are many people in Mississippi who made these same mistakes early in life, but their strong Christian character brought them closer to God and helped them change."

Four of the five black council members, in fact, said they enthusiastically supported Judge Pickering's appointment. The fifth, Manuel Jones, said he opposed the nomination, largely because he differed with Judge Pickering's efforts in the late 1980's to integrate the largely black city schools with the largely white county schools.

Judge Pickering, then in private practice in Laurel, was one of several white city leaders who argued that the city could not attract economic development with an effectively segregated school system. At the time, Mr. Jones was president of the Laurel-Jones County branch of the N.A.A.C.P., which maintained that consolidation would dilute black administrative power over the city schools. The consolidation plan was eventually overturned by a federal judge, who said it was not justified.

Mr. Jones said he rebuffed a recent telephone request by Judge Pickering that he write the Senate a letter of support. (He had publicly opposed the judge's original appointment to the federal bench in 1990.) Several other council members did agree to the judge's request, however, and their letters are on file with the Senate Judiciary Committee.

"It's hard to go against a sitting federal judge," said Mr. Jones, searching for an explanation of why his colleagues have taken a position that differs so sharply from his.

Many of the judge's critics have cited actions or statements he made in the 1960's and 70's. They have pointed to an article he wrote in 1959 that appeared to support strengthening the state's law against interracial marriages, and to his votes in the state senate that appeared to dilute black voting strength.

But his many black supporters here ? all lifelong Democrats ? say they are more interested in his journey than his starting point. They say Judge Pickering, like many white Mississippians, has moved beyond his all-too-common origins.

"He grew up like a lot of white people here," said the Rev. George L. Barnes, a black minister who is pastor at two Missionary Baptist churches and owns a used-car lot. "But his daddy and my daddy used to swim together down in the creek, and I've never heard him say a racist thing. I would say, of people in his age bracket, he's probably come further than any white man I know of."

Local leaders' support for Judge Pickering has put them at odds with several black state officials and the Mississippi conference of the N.A.A.C.P., which oppose his appointment. Bennie Thompson, a Democrat who represents the Delta region on the opposite side of the state in Congress, has called the judge's black supporters "Judases." State N.A.A.C.P. officials say the judge's supporters in Laurel have succumbed to an effort to cover up his feelings with small acts of kindness. This alternately angers and amuses local residents, who say no such masquerade can last for decades.

"If he's been putting on a show for us, it's the greatest show on earth," said Mr. Thomas, who runs the city's only black-owned pharmacy and who served with Mr. Pickering on the local economic development board in the 1980's.

Ralph Neas, president of People for the American Way, which is leading the opposition to the appointment, said many of the judge's supporters in Laurel simply did not know the full details of his record.

"We don't dispute that he has support from a number of African- Americans at the local level, and we have never said he is a racist," Mr. Neas said. "He may be a decent person on a one-to-one basis, but that's not the issue. It's his actions as a public official that demonstrate insensitivity and hostility toward basic civil rights principles."

People for the American Way said that as a state senator in the 1970's, Mr. Pickering voted for measures to reduce black voting strength and approved giving state money to the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission, which became notorious for opposing the civil rights movement. On the federal bench, the group said, he has strongly criticized the creation of largely black political districts as a remedy for past discrimination.

Many local residents said they were not familiar with such statements. But they do remember that in 1967, Judge Pickering testified against Sam Bowers, a Ku Klux Klan leader based in Laurel who was on trial for the firebombing death of a black civil rights worker. Several said that just as the judge broke with prevailing white opinion in the state to do so, they have no trouble differing with black opinion.

"What blacks have fought for is freedom, and that means the freedom of expression to differ among ourselves," said Johnny Magee, a black councilman who supports the judge. "So many people are still angry about the past. But if the judge has moved beyond his past, I think we should all try to do the same."

Funny thing is that, according to my watch (and, it turns out the "844" number), I did arrive at 8:43 today. I know that because I didn't leave my desk here in the EEOB until 8:40, and thought I was going to be late.
So I noticed the time today.

And my previous response was responsive. I said that I agree (as I think we all do) with the principle you stated in your first e-mail -- don't be too early. The problem we have is agreeing on the actual time -- not the time of arrival -- but the actual time of day. Perhaps we should simply synchronize our watches.

They always say the best defense is a good if non-responsive attack! My watch is fine (but thank you for asking). Today's meeting (where two people other than I missed out on part of a discussion of one of their important issues even though they were on time) sparked my e-mail, and today I was the second one over there (after you, naturally).
Anyway, just for fun, why don't you try not to arrive before 8:13 (or 8:43 for this week)? That may well solve the problem. Alternatively, I suggest everyone show up at 8:05 (or 8:35 this week) to try to keep up with what one of our colleagues previously termed "the eager-beaver brigade."

Subject: Re: 202-844-1111

It doesn't really matter what time the "844" number says, if the Judge's clocks are different. In any event, however, I just checked the "844" number, and it said the same time that is on my watch and on the computers -- the times I go by, and which are consistent with the Judge's phone clock. So I think we all agree on the principle (don't get there early); and it may be, Brett, as simple as you needing to adjust your watch.

ok, gang, I suggest that when necessary, we call the phone number above to get the exact time; it's starting to get a little ridiculous again with the staff meeting starting earlier and earlier because a few eager-beavers get to the waiting area many, many minutes before the official 8:15 start (8:45 start this week); if anyone is that eager to start at 8:00 or 8:10, let's do that explicitly so that all have fair notice. (Note that the clocks on our computers appear to be synchronized to the correct time.)

Just a reminder that all White House staff tour information should be forwarded to the Admin contact (Libby or me) for proper processing. We will need all clearance information to reserve a spot (up to 4 per badge holder) and need the information 10 before scheduled tour. The badge holder is also required to attend the tours and tours are held T-Sat. at 10 am.

April 1 is the Easter Egg Roll. Information is forthcoming and volunteers are needed (especially for the Saturday before as well as on Monday). Let me know if you are interested in volunteering.

We are still not receiving courier packages. We are receiving Fed Ex (not the same as Priority Mail which gets processed like US Mail) flat paper packages with a minimum of a 24-hour delay.

Political Activity Overview
(February 20, 2002)

General Principle

- In general, Executive Office of the President political appointees (EOP)[1] and Senate-confirmed officials (PAS) may engage in a wide variety of political activity (other than expressly soliciting contributions) including while on duty and in the office. The government must be reimbursed for additional costs associated with that activity -- that is, the costs beyond what the government otherwise would have incurred.
    - Certain investigative and national security agencies have more restrictive rules and policies; each such agency is responsible for appropriate guidance.

The Major Rules for EOP and PAS Officials

- Fundraisers
    - may appear and speak at fundraisers, but no explicit fundraising

- Use of Title
    - no use of actual title in invitations to political events
      (attempt to review invitations in advance)
    - may use "The Honorable" if applicable; former political titles appropriate
    - the official title may be used in a biography distributed at the event itself, in the introduction of the speaker, and in other similar ways at event

- Travel Costs
    - appropriate political entity pays costs associated with political travel
    - mixed trips: reimbursement determined by "total activity time"
    - security-related costs are official costs
    - corporate aircraft policy (do not use absent extraordinary circumstances)
    - Events in government buildings
        - no fundraising events on government property
        - appearance issues with donors qua donors

- Equipment
    - generally permissible for EOP and PAS officials to use equipment such as computers, printers, telephones, and FAXes for reasonable political activity because there are no additional costs incurred by government except incidental costs of paper
        - appearance issues from excessive use

[1] Such officials ordinarily work beyond normal work hours and outside the normal duty post as contemplated by the regulations.

Official versus Political

- Few bright-line rules; often a case-by-case judgment (1982 OLC opinion)
- The definitional issue is relevant primarily for use of title and travel purposes.
- Political activity is activity primarily related to an election, a campaign, a political party event, or a political party's operations.
    - Speaking at or attending an event held by a political party or political organization is ordinarily considered "political" unless the speaker is speaking only on official policy matters; if the event is a fundraiser or a campaign event, however, it ordinarily should be considered political regardless of content.
    - An otherwise official event is official notwithstanding that it may somehow incidentally assist the popularity of a political party or candidate (for example, if the event is in a district of a political candidate or if a political candidate such as a House member attends the event).
        - Speakers at an official event should avoid expressly advocating the election of a candidate.
    - Being knowledgeable about the political environment and the status of particular races can be relevant to one's official duties, for it is all but impossible to understand Congress or state or local government without being knowledgeable about the overall political/electoral environment in Congress and the states. Therefore, a briefing on the political environment and the status of particular races can be considered official activity depending on the overall context of the briefing.
    - Being knowledgeable about public opinion and public approval similarly can be relevant to one's official duties, and briefings on such issues ordinarily should be considered official activity depending on the overall context of the briefing.
- Informing the public about public policy issues, about the official and ceremonial activities of the President and the Administration, about activities in Congress, and about the Administration's legislative strategy is official activity (and indeed can be an official responsibility).

Principle for non-EOP, non-PAS employees

- Other Executive Branch officers and employees (again, except those in certain investigative and national security agencies) may engage in a wide variety of political activity, but they may do so only while off duty and not on government property.

- The law also recognizes, however, that certain Executive Branch employees who are not themselves White House or PAS officials may be required in the performance of their official duties to accompany or assist White House or PAS officials engaging in political activity (for example, ordinary duties related to security, scheduling, or typing). Such assistance is permissible, and the government need not be reimbursed for the compensation and expenses associated with such assistance.

Specific Rules

- Except for those in certain investigative and national security agencies, the permissible range of political activities includes:

    - participation in political organizations, which includes:

        - being a member of a political party;
        - serving as an officer of a political party;
        - attending and participating in nominating caucuses;
        - organizing a political party;
        - participating in a political convention or rally; and
        - serving as a delegate to a political convention.

    - participation in political campaigns, which includes:

        - displaying political pictures, signs, stickers, or buttons (although employees other than White House and PAS appointees cannot do so while on duty or in their offices);
        - circulating a nominating petition;
        - canvassing for votes;
        - endorsing or opposing a candidate in an advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material (so long as one's official title is not used, except for that of the President and Vice President);
        - addressing a convention, caucus, rally, or similar gathering of a political party or political group; and
        - actively managing the political campaign of a partisan political candidate or candidate for political party office.

    - participation in elections, including:

        - voting;
        - acting as officer or watcher at a polling place;
        - serving as election judge or clerk; and
        - driving voters to polling places.

    - participation in fundraising:

Other than the President or Vice President, Executive Branch officers and employees may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions. However, Executive Branch officers and employees (other than those in certain investigative and national security agencies) may:

- make political contributions;
- attend political fundraisers;
- manage or organize political fundraisers behind the scenes;
- speak at political fundraisers, so long as one's official title is not used (the term of address "The Honorable" may be used);
- be listed as a guest speaker on the invitation for a fundraiser, so long as the invitation does not use one's official title (again, the term of address "the Honorable" may be used);
- solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services from any individual, without using one's official title (however, a superior may not ask his or her subordinate employee to provide such services, nor may he or she ask a company or entity with official matters pending before the agency to provide such services).

- As the above summary reveals, certain kinds of political activities are forbidden:
  - no soliciting, accepting, or receiving political contributions, except by President and Vice President (but officials may organize, manage, appear at, and speak at fundraisers)
  - no fundraising on government property
  - official's name cannot appear on an invitation as a "sponsor" of a fundraiser, but can be identified as a guest speaker
  - official's title cannot be used in connection with political events, but can use "The Honorable"
  - general misuse of official authority
    - cannot ask regulated entities or those under investigation to engage in political activities; however, one can speak to a diverse group that includes individuals within those categories
    - cannot ask subordinates to engage in political activity; however, superiors and subordinates may interact on political matters when both are involved in same political activity or organization
  - other than President and Vice President, cannot run as a candidate in a partisan election except under specified circumstances

Meeting on Political Activity
(February 20, 2002)

1. Goals of Meeting
   - provide overview of rules and policies
   - explain need for consistency of application for relevant EOP and PAS officials
   - ask for feedback from departments on difficult or recurring issues (either at or after meeting or in future)
   - will circulate memo for comment before distribution

2. Overview of Rules

3. Explain roles of Office of Special Counsel, White House Counsel, and DOJ Office of Legal Counsel as to EOP and PAS officials (or on issues that may affect those officials)

Subject: Concurrent Receipt Letter

The White House has received a large number of letters recently from veterans regarding the issue of concurrent receipt of certain benefits. In early January, Harriet asked Cabinet Affairs to coordinate a response and we have done so by enlisting resources from VA, DOD, and DPC. In her memo, however, Harriet also included NSC, OMB, OPL, and Counsel as interested parties. Therefore, I'm running the draft response by the appropriate person in each office to ensure there are no further concerns.

NSC and OPL have already given it the thumbs-up and OMB is still reviewing. We're looking to have this closed by COB today, so if you have feedback send it by then. If I don't get anything today, I'll assume you didn't see anything that caused concern. Thanks.

This is in response to your inquiry to President George W. Bush concerning concurrent payments of Department of Veterans Affairs' (VA) disability compensation and military retirement pay. Your letter was referred to me for reply and I am pleased to do so.

Many veterans have served this country long and faithfully, and subsequently suffered from illness or injury. Those who retired from the service have given much to this country, and we appreciate their service and sacrifice. I can fully understand why you believe that they should be able to receive both their retired pay and compensation benefits.

VA has been prohibited by law (title 38 U.S.C. §5304(a)(1)) from paying compensation to a military retiree unless and until the retiree had waived a portion of his or her retirement pay equal to the amount of VA compensation. This prohibition has been the law since 1891, a period of more than 110 years.

The principle behind the prohibition is the idea that no one should be able to receive concurrent retirement benefits and disability benefits based upon the same service. A retired civil servant, for example, may not receive civil service disability benefits or workers compensation benefits in addition to civil service retirement benefits. A similar ban exists against concurrent payment of retirement and disability benefits by the Social Security Administration.

In recent years, Congress has considered various legislative proposals that would permit concurrent payment of compensation benefits and service retired pay. On December 28, 2001, President George W. Bush signed into law the National Defense Authorization Act, 2002 (Public Law 107-107), which contained a provision removing one of the barriers prohibiting concurrent receipt of military retired pay and VA disability compensation benefits. However, the new law did not provide the additional funding needed to begin the concurrent payments, and it specifically requires additional legislative action that must be taken before any concurrent payments can be made. This ~~additional legislative action~~ would require either increasing tax revenues or decreasing spending in other program areas in amounts equal to the extra costs of the concurrent payments. ~~before any concurrent payments could be authorized.~~ No additional legislative action has yet been taken.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide this information to you. We appreciate your concern on this issue and hope this information has been helpful.

Sincerely yours,

NAACP Denounces Pickering Confirmation During Press Conference at Annual Meeting

U.S. Newswire
Sunday, February 17, 2002

Kweisi Mfume, president & CEO, of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) said yesterday that the association stands firm in its absolute opposition to the confirmation of Judge Charles Pickering to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit at a press conference held here during the Annual Meeting.

Mfume said, "We will continue to demand fairness on the part of those empowered to interpret the laws of our nation. We are opposed to the Pickering confirmation because we decry a judicial nomination process where civil rights and civil liberties, and equal protection under the law are forced to take a back seat to partisan politics and political affiliations." Mfume added, "Accordingly and rightfully so, we stand firm as an organization in our absolute opposition to the Senate confirmation of Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, and we stand united against all others whose judicial records give rise to suspicion about their ability to render impartial judgment and fair interpretation of federal law."

Julian Bond, chairman, NAACP Board of Directors said, "The NAACP was created to fight for freedom and justice in a nation dedicated to those goals. We must continue to fight now with renewed determination. Each of has a role to play as guardians of our nation's liberty, and that is the role history has assigned to us."

Mfume called on the Congress to join the association in the fight to defeat the Pickering confirmation, and challenged the members to help fight against hate crimes and racial profiling. He also urged them not to ignore the AIDS epidemic both in Africa and at home.

"These are wrongs that must be confronted," Mfume said. "We are compelled to act responsibly before the world to better humanity, and ultimately, to better ourselves."

In light of the Sept. 11 tragedies, Mfume said, "By moving our Annual Meeting back to New York, the NAACP honors the world's leading city and its residents along with the scores of Americans who are resolved to defend the ideals of a free and open society. This is the city of our birth, and we stand in solidarity with New Yorkers."

The NAACP was founded in New York City on the 100th anniversary of President Abraham Lincoln's birthday, which was Feb. 12, 1909. The Association last held its annual meeting in New York in 1998. The meetings were held in Washington, D.C. between 1999-2001.

Bush Reaffirms Support for Pickering; White House Says Democrats Stall on Judges

By James Brosnan
Saturday, February 16, 2002

The White House on Friday reiterated President Bush's support for the troubled nomination of U.S. Dist. Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi to the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

"The President believes in and will fight for the nomination of Mr. Pickering," said White House spokesman Ari Fleischer. Fleischer's comment on Pickering was not prompted by a question, but came instead as Fleischer opened his daily briefing with an attack on Senate Democrats for holding up action on judicial nominations from the Republican administration.

Fleischer complained that the Senate has voted on only 37 of Bush's 90 judicial nominations and that there has been "enhanced lag" for the Circuit Court nominees, with votes on only seven of 29 nominees.

The 12 regional appellate courts have 30 vacancies, a vacancy rate of 18 percent, said Fleischer.

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) noted that many of the vacancies exist because when Republicans controlled the Senate they refused to act on many of President Clinton's nominees.

"During the last six years of the Clinton administration it took an average of about 150 days to move a district court nominee to confirmation. I am proud that we have been able to do better since last July," said Leahy.

The committee held a second hearing on Pickering's nomination last week and Friday members submitted additional questions to the Justice Department for Pickering to answer.

A vote is expected in March. Pickering needs at least one of the 10 committee Democrats to vote to send his nomination to the Senate, but all have expressed concerns either about his civil rights record in the state or rulings on the bench.

Internal Justice Department documents claim Pickering lobbied to reduce jail time for a man convicted of burning a cross on an interracial couple's lawn in 1994.

NAACP Decries Judicial Nominee

By Christopher Lawton
Newsday
Sunday, February 17, 2002

NAACP leaders Kweisi Mfume and Julian Bond voiced staunch opposition yesterday to Senate confirmation of a federal judge's nomination to the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, saying it is an affront to "civil rights, civil liberties and equal protection under the law."

U.S. District Court Judge Charles Pickering, a conservative Mississippi judge, "really represents most of the things that this organization opposes," Mfume, NAACP president and chief executive, said at a news conference at the New York Hilton and Towers Hotel, where the group's board of directors and trustees were having their annual meeting. Pickering, 64, whom President George W. Bush nominated to the appeals court, defended his past actions as a prosecutor and politician on Feb. 7 before the Senate Judiciary Committee. The committee has not scheduled a vote on his nomination.

Pickering told senators that he took stands against racists in Mississippi in the 1960s and 1970s, endured threats against his family and lost re-election as a county prosecutor due to his views.

But he had to concede that he misled senators in 1990 during the Judiciary Committee's hearing on his nomination as a federal district court judge, when he said he never had contact with the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission, a state agency dedicated to maintaining segregation.

On that point, Bond yesterday was heated, saying Pickering "lied to the United States Senate about his associations with the terrorist group ... a state-funded organization which helped to do all it could to stop democracy in the state of Mississippi."

NAACP Asks Congress to Oppose Judicial Nominee

By Zach Howard
The Orlando Sentinel
Sunday, February 17, 2002

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on Saturday asked Congress to support its opposition to President Bush's nomination of a Mississippi judge.

"We challenge every member of the Congress . . . to stand with our association," NAACP President and CEO Kweisi Mfume told hundreds of members of the nation's oldest and largest U.S. civil-rights organization at an annual meeting in New York. The group, which has about 500,000 members nationwide, has said it opposes Senate confirmation of Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, nominated to serve on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

It is one of a coalition of more than 50 organizations acting in opposition to the Pickering nomination since January.

White House officials were not available for comment on the NAACP's action. Efforts to reach Pickering were unsuccessful.

Pickering, a district-court judge since 1990 in Jackson, Miss., has been attacked by national groups for his record as a federal judge and earlier as state senator on matters including women's rights, abortion and voting rights.

"Judge Pickering, in most instances, really represents most of the things that this association is opposed to, and, in most of his rulings, continues to raise suspicions about whether or not he will be able to interpret . .. and administer fairness as he interprets the federal law," Mfume said.

Review Backs Nominee

By Audrey Hudson
The Washington Times

Friday, February 15, 2002

A legal-ethics expert asked by Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee to review a cross-burning case says that District Court Judge Charles W. Pickering's behavior in the matter deserves praise, not criticism.

Democrats charged that the judicial nominee for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit behaved unethically in determining a crime sentence in the case involving the burning of a cross in the yard of a racially mixed couple.

Michael Krauss, a professor of legal ethics at George Mason University School of Law, reviewed the 1994 Mississippi case at the request of Senate Judiciary Committee Republican staffers.
Mr. Krauss sits on the Board of Governors of the Virginia state bar's education section and said he is frequently called on to discuss ethical issues with members of the bar and bench.

Judge Pickering's judicial behavior "is not unethical or in any way unbecoming of a member of the judiciary," Mr. Krauss said in a written review.

Liberal organizations oppose the nomination of Judge Pickering and are attempting to label him a racist. Democrats attacked Judge Pickering during his second confirmation hearing last week and said he engaged in unofficial communication to reduce the maximum sentence in the case.

Judge Pickering said he objected to the prosecution's sentencing recommendations on the grounds that it was disproportionate, and redacted documents released yesterday by the Judiciary Committee seem to back his assertion.

A 1994 Justice Department memo said Judge Pickering "immediately took issue with the 'severe disparities'" in the sentencing.

Three men were accused of the federal offense, but the prosecutor cut a deal with two offenders, who were then put on probation and sentenced to community service — one had a history of racism and had fired a gun into the home on a previous occasion, and the second had "low mental capacity," according to the memo.

The third suspect was a first-time offender, but the prosecution recommended more than seven years in prison. Judge Pickering instead sentenced him to 39 months in jail and called his actions "heinous," "reprehensible," "despicable," and "dastardly."

Judge Pickering asked federal prosecutors to inform their superiors at the Justice Department of the discrepancy in their sentencing recommendations. He also complained about the sentencing to a friend in a different branch of the department, but there is no evidence that confidential information was revealed, the review said.

"Judge Pickering was clearly concerned that no rational basis had been demonstrated for the widely disparate sentencing recommendations ... ," the review said.

Judge Pickering's actions are described as a "determined effort" to "discharge, faithfully and competently, his judicial duties under our Constitution. I believe Judge Pickering deserves praise for his efforts," the review said.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican, did not specifically identify Mr. Krauss' review, but said the Senate is receiving letters that should address Democrats' concerns.

"I believe any questions about him will be properly and sufficiently answered and we will get him out of committee," Mr. Lott said.

Sen. Charles E. Schumer, New York Democrat, is the only member of the Judiciary Committee to make public his intention to vote against Judge Pickering. Mr. Schumer cited the cross-burning case as the primary reason for his opposition.

A senior Republican aide said Democrats are underestimating the political consequences of derailing the nomination.

"It will be a political boomerang with a razor-blade tip that will come back at them very hard," said the aide, who refused to detail what Republicans are plotting.

Meanwhile, Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., Delaware Democrat, is blocking two Transportation Department appointees responsible for enforcing airline-security regulations, in exchange for getting support for an Amtrak security bill.

The nominees are Emil H. Frankel, for assistant secretary for transportation policy and Jeffrey Shane, for associate deputy secretary.

Blacks at Home Support a Judge Liberals Assail

By David Firestone
The New York Times
Sunday, February 17, 2002

Back in Washington, his opponents have depicted Judge Charles W. Pickering as the personification of white Mississippi's oppressive past, a man so hostile to civil rights and black progress that he is unfit for promotion to a federal appeals court.

But here on the streets of his small and largely black hometown, far from the bitterness of partisan agendas and position papers, Charles Pickering is a widely admired figure of a very different present.

In funeral parlors and pharmacies, used-car lots and the City Council chambers, the city's black establishment overwhelmingly supports his nomination to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, which is heading toward a contentious vote in the Senate in the first major judicial battle of the Bush administration.

Though few black residents here subscribe to Judge Pickering's staunchly Republican politics, many say they admire his efforts at racial reconciliation, which they describe as highly unusual for a white Republican in the state.

"I have never seen Trent Lott open his arms to the black community the way Charles Pickering has," said Larry E. Thomas, owner of Thomas Pharmacy, referring to the Senate minority leader, who is Judge Pickering's friend and patron. "Over the years I've seen him work with black leaders and really try to make an effort to understand and help the community. That's a progressiveness that we need to see more of in this state."

Progressive is not exactly the description used by the national black officials who are making an intense effort to prevent the judge's appointment. "A vote for Pickering is a vote against civil rights," said Julian Bond, the national chairman of the N.A.A.C.P. Representative Robert C. Scott, Democrat of Virginia, speaking against the nomination with other members of the Congressional Black Caucus, said, "It's hard to imagine a person who is more hostile to civil rights." Judge Pickering has also been condemned by a variety of big-city newspaper editorial boards and columnists.

But such comments carry little weight among those who actually know the man personally here in Laurel, in southeast Mississippi. Judge Pickering, now a federal district judge in the nearby city of Hattiesburg, was praised by black city officials for helping to set up after- school youth programs here, and for directing federal money to medical clinics in low-income areas when he was a state senator. Black business leaders say he was influential in persuading white-owned banks to lend money to black entrepreneurs, helping to strengthen the city's black middle class.

"I can't believe the man they're describing in Washington is the same one I've known for years," said Thaddeus Edmonson, a former local president of the N.A.A.C.P. who is now president of the seven-member Laurel City Council and one of its five black members. "If those people who are voting against him because of some press release would just come down here and talk to the people who know him, I think they would have a very different opinion."

The judge's widespread popularity in his hometown has been frustrating to the many civil rights and abortion rights groups that have worked to portray him as an ideological relic of the Old South.

Several opponents of his nomination have tried unsuccessfully to get his supporters to change their minds, and their inability to do so reflects the distance between national liberal groups and many Southern blacks in small towns. In a city like Laurel, with a population of 18,393, one's personality and faith are often more important than a judicial paper trail or an adherence to an agenda.

People for the American Way, a liberal organization based in Washington, has criticized Judge

Pickering for disregarding the separation of church and state by promoting religious programs from the bench. But many prominent blacks here say it is precisely his religious background — he was president of the Mississippi Baptist Convention in the 1980's — that they admire.

"I know Judge Pickering is a fair and impartial person grounded with Christian ethics and beliefs, who ought to be given this chance," said the Rev. Arthur Logan, the black pastor of the Union Baptist Church and a member of the City Council. "There are many people in Mississippi who made these same mistakes early in life, but their strong Christian character brought them closer to God and helped them change."

Four of the five black council members, in fact, said they enthusiastically supported Judge Pickering's appointment. The fifth, Manuel Jones, said he opposed the nomination, largely because he differed with Judge Pickering's efforts in the late 1980's to integrate the largely black city schools with the largely white county schools.

Judge Pickering, then in private practice in Laurel, was one of several white city leaders who argued that the city could not attract economic development with an effectively segregated school system. At the time, Mr. Jones was president of the Laurel-Jones County branch of the N.A.A.C.P., which maintained that consolidation would dilute black administrative power over the city schools. The consolidation plan was eventually overturned by a federal judge, who said it was not justified.

Mr. Jones said he rebuffed a recent telephone request by Judge Pickering that he write the Senate a letter of support. (He had publicly opposed the judge's original appointment to the federal bench in 1990.) Several other council members did agree to the judge's request, however, and their letters are on file with the Senate Judiciary Committee.

"It's hard to go against a sitting federal judge," said Mr. Jones, searching for an explanation of why his colleagues have taken a position that differs so sharply from his.

Many of the judge's critics have cited actions or statements he made in the 1960's and 70's. They have pointed to an article he wrote in 1959 that appeared to support strengthening the state's law against interracial marriages, and to his votes in the state senate that appeared to dilute black voting strength.

The Battle Escalates; New Fighting Over the Charles Pickering Nomination

By Byron York
National Review Online
Friday, February 15, 2002

In a move to escalate the already-intense battle over the nomination of Charles W. Pickering Sr. to a place on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, some Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee are now suggesting that Pickering may have misled the committee at hearings held February 7. Pickering strongly denies the allegation.

At issue are statements Pickering made in response to questions from Democrat John Edwards about a 1994 cross-burning case (see "Behind the Democrats' Attack"). At the time, Pickering, a judge on the federal district court in southern Mississippi, questioned the Clinton Justice Department Civil Rights Division's decision to make no-jail plea bargains with two of the three defendants in the case, while recommending that the third defendant, a man named Daniel Swan, be sentenced to seven and a half years in prison. Evidence that emerged during the trial suggested that one of the defendants who got off with no jail had a significant history of racial hatred, which is an important factor in sentencing defendants convicted under the federal hate crimes statute. There was far less evidence of racial animus on Swan's part; in fact, seven witnesses, both black and white, testified that they were not aware of any racial animus he might have held against black people. While Pickering did not object to sending Swan to prison — he was clearly guilty of taking part in the cross burning — the judge believed that the seven and a half year sentence was too severe, given that a more culpable co-defendant was given no jail time at all.

At last week's hearing, Edwards questioned Pickering about a conversation Pickering had with defense lawyers and prosecutors from the Civil Rights Division. Swan had already been found guilty, and Pickering had told both sides that he was unhappy with the government sentencing recommendation. In the Senate questioning, Edwards alleged that Pickering was so unhappy with the sentence that he threatened to order a new trial for Swan.

"You told the government lawyers that you would on your own motion order a new trial, and when the government lawyer asked you, and I'm quoting now, 'What would be the basis for such a motion?' your answer was, 'Any basis you choose.' First of all, judge...did you say that you would order a new trial, even though no motion for a new trial had been made?"

"I did not," Pickering answered.

"So you deny that?"

"I've reviewed the transcript — "

"So you deny having said that?" Edwards pressed.

"I did not say that," Pickering said.

"So if the lawyers who were involved in that case have said that that's a statement you made to them, that would be a lie?"

"Senator, on the record, I mentioned — "

"Excuse me, judge," Edwards interrupted. "According to documents that we've been provided, this took place in a private meeting you had with the lawyers, when you told the lawyers you would order a new trial on your own motion, and when they asked you, and I'm quoting now, 'What would be the basis for such a motion for a new trial?' you said, 'Any basis you choose.' Do you deny having said that?"

"I have no recollection of having said that," Pickering answered, "and I do not believe that I said that. Now, I have not seen the document that you are referring to. The Justice Department did not show me the files that they had."

"Did you have private meetings with the lawyers off the record about this case?"

"The response that I gave to Senator Leahy on this indicated that after — "

"I'm not asking about Senator Leahy," Edwards interrupted. "Did you have private meetings with the lawyers?"

"With both the defense counsel and the [government] counsel, I had a meeting, yes."

"So private meetings did take place?"

"A private meeting took place."

"And you deny having any discussion in that meeting about ordering a new trial on your own motion? You deny having done that?"

"There was a discussion on the record of a new trial on the basis of the [jury] instructions, but I don't have a recollection of any indication that I would do that on my own motion," Pickering said.

The documents to which Edwards referred — and which Pickering had not seen at the time of the hearing — were two internal Justice Department Civil Rights Division memos. One of the memos, dated November 29, 1994, concerned the private meeting between Pickering, government lawyers, and defense attorneys. As he had in open court, Pickering expressed great unhappiness with the Civil Rights Division's jail recommendation for Swan. "He said that Swan clearly must do some time behind bars, but seven years is just too much," prosecutor Brad Berry wrote in the memo. "Pickering said he has carefully examined his conscience in this case, and is confident that his discomfort with the sentence is not the product of racism."

Then Berry addressed the issue of a new trial. Much of the conversation centered on what was called the "844 charge," which was the part of the charges against Swan that carried a five-year mandatory minimum sentence (other charges against Swan made up the rest of the seven and a half year sentencing recommendation). Pickering, according to Berry's memo, asked whether the Department would agree not to oppose a motion for a new trial on the 844 charge...if Swan received the maximum on the other two charges. Pickering expressed a willingness to sentence Swan to 36 months on the other two charges if he could find a way to do it. He said that if the Department does not agree to do this, he might well write a nasty opinion from our perspective, emphasizing the sentencing disparities and the injustice of applying Section 844 in this case. He said that given his strong feelings about applying 844 in this case, he might well leave the task to the Fifth Circuit. After further discussion, I asked Pickering what would be the basis for the motion for a new trial. Pickering responded, "Any basis you choose."

The paragraph is unclear on where the motion for a new trial might come from, but it does not say, as Edwards alleged, that Pickering threatened to call for a new trial on his own motion. Pickering's defenders suggest that a more reasonable reading of the paragraph would be that Pickering was assuming that the defense, as is common in such cases, would ask for a new trial for Swan. In addition, a later memo, by another Justice Department lawyer, suggests that Pickering never bullied or threatened government lawyers in any way, contrary to Edwards's allegation. "He [Pickering] thinks the sentence facing Swan is draconian, and he wants a way out," prosecutor Jack Lacy wrote,

He has been careful to phrase his concern in such terms as, "I wish you could suggest some way that this harsh sentence could be avoided." He has never directly [italics in the original] asked us to do anything...

In the same memo, Lacy wrote that he "personally agreed with the judge that the sentence is draconian."

Meanwhile, in his first statement since the confirmation hearings, Pickering has offered his own account of the issue. In a letter to Judiciary Committee ranking Republican Orrin Hatch, Pickering writes that he had doubts whether the five-year mandatory-minimum sentence was applicable to the case:

In chambers, I discussed with counsel for both parties (1) the possibility of a motion for a new trial based on the lack of specificity of the jury instruction on racial animus, if the government insisted on applying the five-year mandatory minimum charge, or (2) the possibility of a motion to set aside the verdict or dismiss the charge of the count which carried the mandatory five-year minimum sentence. When counsel for the government asked how this would be accomplished, I recollect responding to him that the government could elect the grounds. I never indicated I would grant a motion for a new trial, sua sponte [on his own motion], and I never indicated I would do so on whatever ground I chose.

Finally, in his letter, Pickering cites a portion of the trial transcript in which a lawyer for the Civil Rights Division appears to admit that the government indeed went too easy on one of the defendants who received a no-jail plea bargain. "The lesson that I take from that, your honor," the lawyer said, "is that perhaps the government should have been more tough — should have asked for a more stringent or stronger or longer sentence for the other defendants in this case."

Speculation Builds Over Chief Justice Successor

By Jan Crawford Greenburg

REV_00140468

Sunday, February 17, 2002

When Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy walked into a District of Columbia magnet school last month to talk to students about concepts of freedom, he said he was hoping they would gain a greater understanding of democracy.

But his key role in unveiling the "Dialogue on Freedom" initiative, with help from the American Bar Association and First Lady Laura Bush, prompted some court watchers to suggest he also may have something else on his mind.

"I'm sure he wants to be chief justice," one court observer said.

Chief Justice William Rehnquist has not announced his retirement, but most agree he is likely to do so this summer or next. With such a closely divided court, the magnitude of that prospect already has public interest groups, lawyers and law professors quick to speculate on even the sincerest intentions of possible nominees and anxious over what all predict will be a colossal confirmation battle.

"This is going to be one of the most dramatic moments in American history," Ralph Neas, president of People for the American Way, said of the confirmation hearings for the next Supreme Court justice.

Indeed, the bitter battle that Neas' group has spearheaded over Charles Pickering, one of President Bush's federal appeals court nominees, is only a hint of what's to come when the administration seeks to fill a vacancy on the high court, observers say. The current court generally is divided 5-4 on contentious issues such as race, religion and the role of government, and Bush is poised to nominate up to three justices, including the chief justice, as aging ones retire.

Rehnquist, 77, is a likely candidate for retirement this year or next, as is Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, although she said recently she would not step down this year. Justice John Paul Stevens, the court's most liberal member and, at 81, its most senior, also could retire this term--particularly because Democrats control the Senate and, Neas vows, would not confirm an ardent conservative to replace him.

But the chief's spot has grabbed the interest of many. To be sure, the chief justice has just one vote, but he also assigns opinions when he is in the majority. That can help shape how broadly or narrowly a decision is written. What's more, the chief is the administrator of a branch of government.

As such, filling that post could present the biggest problem for Bush, particularly if Rehnquist is the only justice to step down. The Senate historically has placed greater emphasis on confirming the chief justice than associate justices, and Democratic leaders already have indicated they will not make it easy for Bush to fill a vacancy.

Conservative groups, aware of the looming battle, are becoming increasingly critical of the administration's approach. They say the administration is not doing enough to get ready for the fight and are particularly upset at Bush's refusal, despite requests, to mention the issue of judicial appointments in his State of the Union address.

Further complicating matters is that there is no obvious choice to take Rehnquist's place. Opponents on the left and the right have raised flags about several of those believed to be contenders, including Kennedy and the current White House counsel, Alberto Gonzales. Groups such as Neas' say they would love to take on two other possible nominees, conservative federal appeals court Judges J. Harvie Wilkinson III and J. Michael Luttig.

Some have said Kennedy's statesmanlike behavior in recent weeks has the cast of a potential chief justice candidate.

That's not to question his sincerity in the "Dialogue on Freedom" initiative. Kennedy, 65, has had a long-standing interest in promoting the virtues of the legal system to young people.

"I would think if an opening occurs, he certainly is one of the people who would be considered seriously," said Jesse Choper, a law professor at the University of California at Berkeley. Of the Democratic-controlled Senate, Choper said: "They'd be hard-pressed to beat him."

Elevating a current justice could siphon attention from the nominee who would take his place as associate justice. That's what happened in 1986, when President Ronald Reagan sought to elevate Rehnquist as chief and nominated Antonin Scalia as associate justice. The Senate spent all its time on the chief's nomination, while Scalia- -one of the court's most ardent conservatives--skated through unanimously.

That said, "Chief Justice Kennedy" is an extremely unlikely scenario. His nomination would infuriate the far right, which was outraged by his refusal in 1992 to overturn Roe vs. Wade, as well as other decisions it perceives as liberal, such as one that blocked clergy from praying at school graduation ceremonies.

"A lot of the president's conservative base would strongly oppose elevating Kennedy," said Tom Jipping, director of the Center for Law and Democracy at the Free Congress Foundation.

Moreover, elevating Kennedy to chief would give the left ample fodder as well. He joined the court's three most conservative members two years ago, for example, in dissenting from a decision that struck down state efforts to ban certain late-term abortions.

Bush vs. Gore role damaging

But his role in Bush vs. Gore could be the most damaging for his prospects. Any confirmation hearing for Kennedy (or O'Connor, if she were tapped for the chief's post) would resurrect the 2000 presidential election. Kennedy and O'Connor are considered the architects of the 5-4 opinion that stopped the vote recounts in Florida and handed the election to Bush over Al Gore.

O'Connor, who will be 72 next month, would have those problems as well as her age working against her, said David Yalof, a political science professor at the University of Connecticut. Bush probably would prefer a younger nominee who would serve for more than a few years, he said.

The other two conservatives on the court, Scalia and Clarence Thomas, are considered simply too conservative--both would overturn Roe vs. Wade, for example--to be confirmed by a Democratic- controlled Senate, Neas, Yalof, Choper and others said.

As such, most observers predict Bush will have little choice but to look outside the court for its next chief, just as President Dwight Eisenhower did in 1953 with Earl Warren, then governor of California, and President Richard Nixon did in 1969 with Warren Burger, then on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

"We're looking at a moment where the current president's best prospects for chief justice lie outside the court," Yalof said.

Yalof and other court watchers, such as Choper, say they believe Bush would like to name the first Hispanic to the court. Most say White House Counsel Gonzales is the front-runner, certainly for associate justice, because he has the confidence of Bush and may not have the damaging paper trails of other potential nominees.

The latter likely would do in the other leading Hispanic candidate, Emilio Garza, a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit. Garza has openly suggested his opposition to Roe vs. Wade, a decision he said is "inimical to the Constitution."

Gonzales could raise brows

Gonzales could be a controversial choice, however, particularly for chief. He served on the Texas Supreme Court just 23 months before assuming his current position, and he could be viewed as too political, Neas and others said. Moreover, the far right views him suspiciously, noting that while on the Texas Supreme Court he joined a majority decision allowing some minors to get abortions without parental notification.

But Yalof said he thought Gonzales "had a lot to offer for chief" because it is an administrative post.

"He's currently in the administration and is someone the president would feel comfortable with, not simply rendering decisions but running a branch of government," Yalof said.

Bush may believe he could get a more predictable conservative as chief, because the appointment would not move the court to the right. Rehnquist, one of the court's most conservative members, would overturn Roe and has led the court in scaling back congressional power and handing it to the states.

If so, Bush could turn to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit, where Wilkinson and Luttig have established solid conservative reputations. Wilkinson, who turns 58 this year, is a former law professor at the University of Virginia and the chief judge of the circuit.

Luttig is a former Scalia clerk who worked to help get Thomas confirmed while working in the Justice Department. Philosophically, he is closer to Scalia and Thomas--the justices Bush said during the campaign he most admired--than Wilkinson. He wrote the high-profile opinion, which the Supreme Court upheld, striking down a section of the Violence Against Women Act as beyond Congress' power.

Recently, however, the two have parted ways dramatically in several high-profile cases, with Luttig, 47, all but accusing Wilkinson of being a faux conservative.

"Many people think Luttig has blessed Wilkinson by making him seem like a moderate statesman," one court observer said.

Ruled with liberal colleagues

In a recent high-profile school desegregation case, Wilkinson joined with more liberal judges in refusing to hold a North Carolina school system liable for running a race-conscious magnet school. Wilkinson said the school district could not be held liable because it had been under a court order to end segregation. But Luttig, in dissent, said Wilkinson "variously ignored and misunderstood" the law.

They also split ways in a high-profile case over the breadth of Congress' power to protect endangered species. Wilkinson wrote for the majority that the federal government had power to limit the taking of red wolves on private lands, a decision Luttig harshly criticized in dissent.

Wilkinson is more in the mold of the gentle conservative, whereas Luttig is more in-your-face," said one lawyer who frequently practices in the 4th Circuit. "I think Wilkinson tries to be more scholarly, whereas Luttig has much more of a rubber-hits-the-road kind of approach."

That's not to say Wilkinson is not conservative. He wrote a majority opinion upholding the Clinton administration's "don't ask, don't tell" policy that excluded acknowledged homosexuals from the military.

"I would guess if either Luttig or Wilkinson is on the Supreme Court, their voting patterns would not be that different," said A.E. Dick Howard, a law professor at the University of Virginia.

Conservative groups acknowledge that either could be difficult to confirm, which could prompt Bush to name a stealth candidate, such as Judge Samuel Alito Jr. of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 3rd Circuit. They put the blame partly on Bush and suggest the administration has ceded control of the debate on the issue to the Democrats.

REV_00140472

"I believe the president, before any Supreme Court vacancy, needs to provide sustained public leadership on judicial appointments, generally," said Jipping of the Center for Law and Democracy. "If the administration is going to wait until there's a Supreme Court vacancy, they're going to lose. Or they're going to feel compelled to nominate someone who won't be worth it."

The O'Connor Factor

By Charles Lane
The Washington Post
Monday, February 18, 2002

When word got out that Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor would be giving a public lecture last fall in Lincoln, Neb., 500 people snapped up every available seat, leaving 100 others to be turned away. The University of Nebraska gave her a medal. Female law students presented a corsage.

"If it hadn't been for you paving the road, we wouldn't be here today," Lisa Rasmussen told O'Connor, according to the Daily Nebraskan.

More than two decades after President Ronald Reagan made her the first woman on the Supreme Court, O'Connor, 71, may be a bigger celebrity -- and a more powerful influence on American law and society -- than ever before.

She has weathered what she has called the "difficult" 2000 election case in which she was one of five Republican-appointed justices to join a much-criticized ruling that sealed President Bush's victory. She has added her voice to those expressing concern that innocent people may be sentenced to death. Favorable reviews are coming in for her much-publicized new memoir, co-written with her brother, H. Alan Day, about growing up on a remote desert ranch during the 1930s and '40s.

And on the most contentious social issues facing American society, she continues to cast what is frequently the deciding vote on a nine-member court often split between liberals and conservatives.

On Wednesday, the court hears oral arguments on two such issues -- state-funded vouchers for private and parochial school tuition, and a possible ban on the death penalty for mentally retarded capital offenders. And once again, attorneys for both sides will be pitching much of their argument to the tall, silver-haired woman sitting just to Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist's left.

So pivotal -- and familiar -- is O'Connor's role that it has become difficult to imagine the court without her, despite rumors, denied by the justice, that she may retire soon. Lately speculation has run in the opposite direction -- that O'Connor could ascend to chief justice if Rehnquist, 77, steps down -- a scenario she also dismisses.

O'Connor's power has been accumulated not by asserting an ironclad doctrine for others to follow, but by remaining as noncommittal as possible: Time and again, she has signed on to narrow rulings crafted according to the facts of a particular case, leaving open the option of another incremental holding later on.

"The rule of law must also be flexible enough to adapt to different circumstances," she told her Nebraska audience, expressing a precept she had articulated many times in her opinions.

"Hers is the power of the median voter," said University of California at Los Angeles law professor Eugene Volokh, a former O'Connor law clerk. "Lawyers target her for the same reason both sides in a political campaign target the center."

The question hovering over O'Connor's 21-year career on the court, though, is whether her approach is too much like the political art of compromise she once practiced as majority leader of the Arizona state Senate.

By providing only sketchy constitutional guidance to legislatures and lower courts, some lawyers, legal academics and judges say, her restrained jurisprudence lays the basis for legal instability that ultimately must be sorted out by the Supreme Court -- and, in many cases, by O'Connor herself.

O'Connor's fellow justice, Antonin Scalia, has published opinions blasting her mode of reasoning, including a 1988 gibe at her "Solomonic" answer to a death penalty case: "Solomon," Scalia wrote, "was not subject to the constitutional constraints of the judicial department of a national government in a federal, democratic system."

O'Connor's admirers describe her method as "judicial minimalism."

"Clear rules are better; they make the court's own judgments more transparent," Volokh said. "But if a justice is not persuaded the Constitution demands a clear rule, it's her duty to vote for a more fact-sensitive one."

O'Connor, a lifelong Republican, votes more than 80 percent of the time with Rehnquist, a Nixon appointee. She has joined him, Scalia and other conservatives in the court's recent effort to bolster states' rights.

But on social issues, she has muted the court's rightward tendencies. Most famously, she voted to uphold the right to abortion enshrined in Roe v. Wade, co-writing the 1992 opinion that barred state laws that impose an "undue burden" on the right to choose. In 2000, she provided the fifth vote for a ruling that struck down Nebraska's ban on what opponents call "partial birth" abortions.

Abortion, she recently told NBC's Katie Couric, "is an issue about which people feel passionately, and I'm very much aware of that when we have a case in that area."

Certainly, there is little evidence of ideological fervor in O'Connor's personal story. Her childhood was spent among some of the last real cowboys in the West, on the 300-square-mile Lazy B Ranch. Straddling Arizona and New Mexico, the Lazy B had no electricity or running water; as depicted in her memoir, it was a place where individual adaptability and common sense were at a premium, and the social changes linked to the New Deal and World War II made little direct impact.

Graduating third in her class (Rehnquist was first) from Stanford Law School in 1952, O'Connor was stunned by law firms' refusal to hire her, but made a career in local government and the Arizona Republican Party. She was appointed to the state Senate in 1969, became majority leader in 1972 and later ran successfully for state trial judge before being elevated to the state appeals court by a Democrat, then-Gov. Bruce Babbitt in 1979.

When Reagan offered her the Supreme Court job in 1981, antiabortion groups tried to derail her nomination, citing her opposition as a state senator to certain laws restricting abortion. O'Connor herself has admitted she felt uncertain about her own modest judicial experience.

But she was fortified by lessons learned on the Lazy B. It gave her, she recently told C-SPAN interviewer Brain Lamb, "a certain amount of self-confidence in your ability to work things out and not be afraid to tackle something."

Today she regularly recruits law clerks who have served both liberal and conservative lower-court judges, relying on them for detailed briefings, oral and written, on each case -- and occasionally treating them to her homemade Tex-Mex cuisine.

Both cases before the court on Wednesday show how O'Connor's past rulings set the stage for future cases in which she again plays the potentially deciding role.

In the school voucher case, opponents of the program will try to persuade the court that, as practiced in Cleveland, the voucher subsidy gives families no real choice but to spend government money at religious schools, an issue framed in O'Connor's past opinions on the church-state balance.

In the death penalty case, Daryl Atkins, convicted of murder in Virginia, asserts that he has an IQ of 65, which qualifies him as moderately retarded under current psychiatric guidelines.

His attorneys argue that a national consensus has formed against the death penalty for persons with very limited intellectual abilities, so Atkins's execution would be "cruel and unusual punishment" prohibited by the Eighth Amendment.

In 1989, a Texas death-row inmate, Johnny Paul Penry, sought and was denied such a ruling from the Supreme Court. O'Connor's role was decisive.

Wrestling with Penry's claim that mentally retarded persons are less able to reason and hence less culpable for their crimes than others, O'Connor wrote that states must give juries a genuine chance to consider mental retardation as a factor weighing against the death penalty. It was an argument repeated by Atkins.

This section of O'Connor's opinion, which ordered a new trial for Penry, was joined by liberals such as the late Justices William J. Brennan Jr., Thurgood Marshall and Harry A. Blackmun and John Paul Stevens, who is still on the court.

O'Connor, however, concluded that it was not yet clear that all mentally retarded people lacked the reasoning ability ever to warrant capital punishment. And there was insufficient evidence of a national consensus against executing them, she wrote. Only two states with the death penalty had outlawed it.

This portion of her opinion was joined by conservatives Rehnquist, Scalia, Anthony M. Kennedy and Byron R. White, who has since retired.

Still, O'Connor left the door open. A national consensus, she wrote, "may ultimately find expression in legislation, which is an objective indicator of contemporary values upon which we can rely."

"That day has arrived," Atkins's attorneys argue in their brief for the case to be argued Wednesday. They noted that 18 of the 38 states that permit capital punishment now have laws outlawing death sentences for the mentally retarded. When you add the 12 states that do not allow capital punishment at all, they argue, 30 states -- 60 percent of the total -- plus the federal government, forbid the death penalty for retarded offenders.

Is 60 percent enough to make for a national consensus? O'Connor's past opinions are suggestive but, characteristically, not definitive on how she might rule.

In 1988, when the court voted to strike down the death penalty for 15-year-old murderers, O'Connor supplied the fifth vote -- but did so for reasons that were all her own.

In a separate opinion, she noted that 32 of 50 states -- 64 percent -- either had no death penalty or had limited it to perpetrators 16 or older. This, she said, created a strong presumption that a national consensus against executing those younger than 16 existed. But more state legislation would be needed to know for sure, because a large minority of states that set no minimum age for the death penalty appeared to permit executing 15-year-olds.

O'Connor explained her vote as limited only to situations in which states had specified no minimum age for death penalty.

Just a year later, she joined four conservatives in holding that executions for 16- and 17-year-old perpetrators were constitutional. There, she assented to a national-consensus calculus that focused only on the rules in the 37 states that had the death penalty at the time, noting that "a majority of states authorizing capital punishment permit it for defendants 16 and above." And today, a majority of death penalty states still allow sentencing retarded offenders to death.

Five of the death penalty states that have banned capital punishment for the retarded passed their laws in the last year, after the Supreme Court's surprising announcement in March 2001 that it would revisit the 1989 Penry ruling in the case of North Carolina death row inmate Ernest McCarver.

Legal analysts say that the mere fact that the court agreed to reconsider the subject suggests that change is afoot at the court. O'Connor herself has made two public statements -- to a Minnesota women's lawyers' group in July and again on her October visit to Nebraska -- that seemed to capture national anxiety about administration of the death penalty.

"More often than we want to recognize," she said in Nebraska, "some innocent defendants have been convicted and sentenced to death."

Edwards' Tactics Draw Ire

By Paul Kane
Roll Call
Monday, February 18, 2002

With a blistering cross-examination of a controversial judicial nominee, Sen. John Edwards (D-N.C.) has landed in hot water with the nation's leading anti-tobacco lawyer.

Dickie Scruggs, the trial lawyer from Pascagoula, Miss., who recently led the legal assault on the tobacco industry, has vowed to never again support Edwards and plans to rally other trial lawyers to his anti-Edwards campaign.

If Scruggs follows through on his stated mission, it would deal a serious financial blow to Edwards, himself a former trial lawyer who has relied heavily on the legal industry to underwrite his burgeoning national ambitions.

The bone of Scruggs' contention is Edwards' treatment of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, who is seeking a lifetime appointment to a seat on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. "I'm really mad about it," Scruggs said of the questioning Edwards subjected Pickering to at a Feb. 7 hearing and the North Carolina Senator's apparent lack of respect for Scruggs' opinion of the judge. "It wasn't the manly thing to do."

Scruggs has a family stake in the Pickering nomination: He's married to Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott's (R-Miss.) sister-in-law. Lott, who has known Pickering for more than 30 years, has made this confirmation a personal crusade and has threatened to retaliate against Democrats if they block Pickering, whose son, Rep. Chip Pickering Jr. (R-Miss.), used to work for Lott.

Scruggs said his efforts to reach out to Edwards, a personal-injury trial lawyer before unseating Sen. Lauch Faircloth (R) in 1998, were part of a broader effort to lobby Democrats he bonded with during the "tobacco wars."

Scruggs has tried to make the case that liberal interest groups in Washington are inaccurately portraying Pickering, 64, as a southern segregationist in retaliation for the way Republicans treated Clinton administration nominees in the 1990s.

"He's getting a bum rap," Scruggs said.

Scruggs, who has known Pickering for more than 20 years, called him a "fine judge." A lifelong Democrat who has given and helped raise thousands of dollars for the party's candidates, Scruggs said Democrats are wrong - personally, politically and legally - to oppose Pickering.

If he gets rejected, Scruggs said, Pickering's replacement will in all likelihood pose a greater threat to Democratic interests as a younger and more stridently conservative jurist, and one without decades of rulings and political activity to use in opposition to the nomination at Senate hearings.

Scruggs' ire, however, is currently focused on fellow trial lawyer Edwards, who ignored a series of calls the Mississippi attorney made to Edwards office in advance of the tension-filled Feb. 7 hearing.

"I started calling him on Tuesday [Feb. 5] and left messages all over for him," Scruggs said in an interview last week.

Noting trial lawyers' past financial support for Edwards, Scruggs said: "Not that he owes me a vote, but he owes me a phone call."

Scruggs attended Pickering's hearing, where he spoke with Democratic Sens. Edward Kennedy (Mass.), Russ Feingold (Wis.) and Dianne Feinstein (Calif.) about the nomination. He said he also spoke with top aides to Sen. Joseph Biden (D-Del.), but couldn't get a return call from Edwards.

Other trial lawyers from Mississippi also tried to reach Edwards and were rebuffed, Scruggs said.

At the hearing, Edwards was relentless in his questioning, focusing on a 1994 cross- burning case Pickering oversaw. Frequently cutting Pickering off and forcing him into one-word and yes-or-no answers, Edwards prompted Pickering to admit he had "ex parte" conversations with Justice Department officials regarding the case.

Biden told Roll Call last week that Pickering's answers to Edwards will play a key role in whether he supports the judge and questioned his truthfulness in responding to committee members' inquiries. One senior Democratic aide called Edwards "brilliant," noting that the cross-burning case was the "perfect metaphor" for Democratic opposition. A top GOP aide admitted the line of questioning was hurting the judge's case.

Pickering's explanation - that he felt prosecutors had gone soft on the main culprit, who received no jail time in exchange for a guilty plea, and were coming down hard on a bit player in the case - barely registered. Scruggs said Pickering's family was furious: "They felt very humiliated about it."

A few days after the hearing, the judge's son said he was in "remarkably good spirits."

But, Rep. Pickering added, "They're trying to use Mississippi's reputation and history to smear a good man."

Scruggs said he left the hearing disgusted with Edwards, who he felt was twisting the facts of the case and playing the role of "the heavy" at the behest of other Democrats.

Not expecting to have his calls returned, Scruggs said he got another trial lawyer to get in touch with Edwards. "I sent a message through another trial lawyer: He can forget my support and that of anybody I have influence with," Scruggs recalled.

Early last week, Edwards finally called Scruggs, who characterized the conversation as "cordial."

Edwards' office did not confirm or deny Scruggs' account. In a statement released by his office, Edwards said, "I will make an independent evaluation on the merits with regard to the nomination of Judge Pickering. At this stage, I have very serious reservations."

On Saturday, Edwards was one of three potential Democratic White House hopefuls, along with Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (S.D.) and Sen. John Kerry (Mass.), to speak at the state Democratic convention in California.

While Scruggs himself has not been a direct financial backer of Edwards, lawyers have been the Senator's single largest backer, and many of Scruggs' friends are among Edwards' supporters. In the 1998 election cycle he received $905,280 from lawyers and law firms, the fourth most of any candidate in that cycle, according to the Center for Responsive Politics. That's all the more impressive considering Edwards does not take PAC money.

Up for re-election in 2004, Edwards campaign committee has already collected at least $218,686 from the legal industry, more than all but three other Senators - and each of those three faces re-election this fall.

To finance his national ambitions, Edwards opened a leadership political action committee, New American Optimists, last fall, raising $731,850 in November and December.

More than $650,000 of that total came from lawyers, their family members or employees of law firms, according to a Roll Call analysis of the PAC's donors.

Of that, $167,000 came from Mississippi attorneys, legal employees or their family members -

many of whom work at firms, such as Minor & Associates and Langston Law Firm, whose principals are also supporting Pickering.

Asked if he could see himself ever supporting Edwards, or encouraging his friends in the legal community to back him, Scruggs said the Pickering nomination will be decisive. "I guess I ought to see how he votes," he said.

Group in Judge Seminars Denies Slanted View Point

By Ann McFeatters
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Saturday, February 16, 2002

A foundation that sponsors seminars on environmental economics for federal judges says its work is being mischaracterized by a land-use group seeking to derail the nomination of Western Pennsylvania U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Community Rights Counsel, an organization that provides legal aid to local governments and environmentalists in land-use cases, is one of 27 environmental, women's rights and civil rights groups that are raising questions about Smith's nomination by President Bush.

In a letter to members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, which holds confirmation hearings for nominees to the federal bench, the group claims that between 1992 and 2000 Smith spent "nearly three months at luxury resorts and dude ranches on trips funded by corporations and special interests with a stake in federal court litigation," including expenses-paid visits to seminars hosted by the Foundation for Research on Economics and the Environment, or FREE, which is based in Bozeman, Mont. FREE Chairman John Baden said that while his group receives corporate money, only money from tax-exempt foundations is used to conduct the seminars for judges. Baden also said Community Rights Counsel wrongly portrays FREE as "right-wing."

"While FREE's programs are explicitly pro-environment, they explain why ecological values are not the only important ones. We stress that tradeoffs among competing values are inescapable. We show why it is ethically and materially irresponsible to pretend such choices can be avoided."

In a letter explaining his group's orientation, Baden went on to say, "The intellectually naive confuse FREE's classical liberal, incentive-based orientation with that advocated by those who support subsidized exploitation of the environment (e.g., below-cost timber sales on the national forests)."

Doug Kendall, a lawyer with Community Rights Counsel, says his group stands by its characterization of FREE as supported by "corporations that litigate in federal courts." He said, "Ninety percent of the speakers at their programs are right-wingers from think tanks or academia and one or two token environmentalists, some of whom say awful things about FREE and some of whom say good things."

FREE's Web site identifies its corporate funders in 2001 as the American Chemistry Council, Caterpillar, Exxon Mobil, General Electric, General Motors, Georgia Pacific, Merck, Shell and Tindall. Foundation supporters include the Ajax Foundation, the Chase Foundation of Virginia, the John M. Olin Foundation, the Sarah Scaife Foundation and the True Foundation.

Pickering's Actions Questioned in Cross Burning Case

Internal Justice Department documents claim U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering lobbied to reduce jail time for a man convicted of burning a cross on an interracial couple's lawn in 1994.

At one point in the lobbying effort, according to a written report by a government attorney, the appellate court nominee from Mississippi even threatened to retry the case.

Whether the federal judge acted in good faith in seeking a just punishment for the defendant or attempted to sidestep the law is the question Senate Judiciary Committee members are examining as they contemplate Pickering's nomination to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. After a burning cross was placed on an interracial couple's lawn near Improve in Walthall County, charges were filed against three individuals.

Two males, ages 17 and 25, were sentenced to probation and home confinement in exchange for guilty pleas. A third person, Daniel Swan, then age 20, turned down the plea offer and was convicted in a trial.

The Justice Department sought a seven-year sentence for Swan. One of the charges Swan faced carried a five-year minimum sentence. He eventually received a 27-month sentence.

Government lawyer Brad Berry, in a 1994 internal Justice Department memo, said Pickering called Berry into his chambers and told the attorney he had problems with the seven-year sentence and the disparities in the sentencing for the three defendants.

Berry's memo was made public by the Democratic-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee. Pickering is a Republican.

Berry wrote that Pickering felt the Justice Department "is probably right on the law, but the result in this case would clearly be unjust."

The memos claimed Pickering had several off-the-record conversations with government attorneys in an attempt to get around the minimum sentencing requirement.

Berry also wrote that Pickering threatened to order a new trial on "any basis you choose."

Democrats have alleged Pickering privately contacted the Justice Department to manipulate the sentence.

Pickering has told Judiciary Committee members the only contact he had with the agency outside of court was a telephone call to a friend. Pickering said the contact was not improper because he did not discuss the case's specifics, but rather simply voiced frustration at the situation.

Pickering said Friday he cannot comment on issues surrounding his nomination. U.S. Rep. Chip Pickering, R-Miss., the judge's son, recently said that Swan was pulled into taking part in the cross burning, while the leaders of the act got off with the lighter plea sentences.

Republicans, led by Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., accuse the Democrats of holding Pickering up as a test case for future conservative Supreme Court nominees.

The Judiciary Committee is expected to vote on Pickering's nomination by mid-March.

On Thursday, Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said he would not support Pickering due to the cross burning information.

Marty Wiseman, director of Mississippi State University's John C. Stennis Institute of Government, said it appears Pickering's aim was not to subvert the law but to be just in his sentencing.

"This was what Judge Pickering was wrestling with and discussing with the various folks with the Justice Department," Wiseman said.

Republicans on the committee requested a review of the cross burning affair from George Mason University law professor Michael Krauss.

Krauss, in a Feb. 11 letter to Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, ranking Republican on the committee, concluded that Pickering's judicial behavior was proper and the just "deserves praise for his efforts."

Krauss wrote that no rational basis had been established for the disparate sentencing among the three accused males.

What Judges Do. The Founders Saw that Laws Are Often Murky, So Judicial Beliefs Matter

By Mark Kozlowski
New Jersey Law Journal

Should the Senate be concerned with the personal ideological views of federal judicial nominees? Conservatives say no. A proper judge qua judge, they assert, has no personal ideological views. A legislator may have such views, but not a judge. Thus, when President George W. Bush announced his initial batch of judicial nominees last May, he vowed: "Every judge I appoint will be a person who clearly understands the role of a judge is to interpret the law, not to legislate from the bench."

Whenever conservatives talk about the courts, the prohibition against "legislating from the bench" gets mentioned sooner or later. The idea is that, although judges must determine the meaning of statutes, the only legitimate elements to be considered are the words of the statute and the intent of the legislature in employing those words. Similarly, when called upon to interpret a provision of the Constitution, conservatives contend that the only proper guide, beyond the text itself, is the intention of those who composed and ratified the provision. To do otherwise, conservatives assert, turns the judge into a creator of law. With regard to ordinary statutes, so the argument goes, this violates the principle of separation of powers. As for the Constitution, when interpretation looks beyond text and intent, the meaning of our fundamental law comes to depend upon the will of individual judges.

What is more, conservatives frequently declare that this stark distinction between proper interpretation and "legislating from the bench" is precisely the way our Founders viewed the task of judging. Consider the testimony of Douglas Kmiec, law school dean at the Catholic University of America, during last year's Senate Judiciary Committee hearings on whether a judicial nominee's political ideology should play any role in the Senate's confirmation decision.

Kmiec noted that the Anti-Federalists, who opposed ratifying the Constitution, were very concerned about how much discretion judges might exercise. Kmiec asserted that Alexander Hamilton "responded to this criticism by emphasizing that it was not the job of judges to make law, that their role under the Constitution was simply to enforce the Constitution and laws as they were written." Under the principle of separation of powers, "lawmaking was left to the legislature and the people themselves."

To remain true to the Founders' vision, Kmiec declared, the Senate should not endeavor to discern a nominee's ideology. On the contrary, any nominee who suggested that ideology may influence the work of statutory or constitutional adjudication should be rejected. Kmiec concluded that, after determining that a nominee possesses the requisite professional qualifications, Senate inquiry should be limited to discerning "whether the nominees coming before you are willing to abide by the text of statutory law as you have authored it."

But did the Founders actually believe that statutory and constitutional interpretation could be reduced to a nondiscretionary exercise of following text and discerning intent? As is usually the case when one fully engages the thought of those men, things turn out to be a good deal more complex.

A Cloudy Medium

Begin with language itself. If you read only our most prominent journals of conservative thought, you might conclude that the idea that "meaning" is often indeterminate is a recent invention of deconstructionist literary critics. In fact, the Founders embraced the very same notion. Here is James Madison writing in The Federalist:

"[N]o language is so copious as to supply words and phrases for every complex idea, or so correct as not to include many equivocally denoting different ideas. Hence it must happen that however accurately the objects may be discriminated in themselves, and however accurately the discrimination may be considered, the definition may be rendered inaccurate by an inaccuracy of the terms in which it is delivered. ... When the Almighty himself condescends to address mankind in their own language, his meaning, luminous as it must be, is rendered dim and doubtful through the cloudy medium through which it is communicated."

During the constitutional ratification debates, future Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth made the same point more succinctly: "The charge of being ambiguous and indefinite may be brought against every human composition, and necessarily arises from the imperfection of language."

'More or Less Obscure'

Take first the case of statutory interpretation. Within proper bounds, the Founders believed that judicial interpretation was an extension of the legislative process itself. Madison made the point thus: "All new laws, though penned with the greatest technical skill and passed on the fullest and most mature deliberation, are considered more or less obscure and equivocal, until their meaning be liquidated and ascertained by a series of particular discussions and adjudications." And Hamilton wrote: "Laws are a dead letter without courts to expound and define their true meaning and operation."

What is more, the Founders explicitly asserted that sometimes a judge would be justified in ignoring legislative intent. They fully expected that there would be occasions when a legislature, yielding to the passions of the moment or corrupt influence, would pass unjust laws. Then it would be proper for a judge to disregard legislative intent in favor of equity.

Thus, Hamilton said in The Federalist, legislatures might enact constitutional laws that were nevertheless "unjust and partial" in operation. In such cases, "the firmness of the judicial magistracy is of vast importance in mitigating the severity and confining the operation of such laws." Even some Anti-Federalists spoke highly of this practice. One writer praised New York judges for their willingness to construe an unjust statute in a manner that "I will not say evaded the law, but so limited it in its operation as to work the least possible injustice."

Ambiguity Embraced

With regard to the Constitution itself, the Founders were emphatic that its language was necessarily broad and indeterminate. Why, the Anti-Federalists wanted to know, did the Constitution not list precisely every act that Congress could perform? This would be most unwise, Hamilton replied:

"Nothing ... can be more fallacious than to infer the extent of any power proper to be lodged in the national government from an estimate of immediate necessities. There ought to be a CAPACITY to provide for future contingencies as they may happen; and as these are illimitable in their nature, so it is impossible safely to limit that capacity."

But if the powers of Congress cannot be precisely defined, how will we know when Congress has gone too far? Speaking specifically to the question of division of powers between Congress and the states, Madison said that there would be legitimate disagreement about the Constitution's meaning because judgments about the proper spheres of state and federal authority would not be "free from different constructions by different interests, or even from ambiguity in the judgment of the impartial." In other words, constitutional interpretation could not be reduced to an exact science.

In The Federalist itself, Hamilton noted that the Constitution's terms regarding the extent of federal court jurisdiction were subject to at least two interpretations. He then argued in favor of "the most natural and the most defensible construction." He pointedly did not assert that he was positing the single correct construction.

What does this mean for the debates over President Bush's judicial nominees? Contrary to Professor Kmiec, the Senate would be truer to the Founders if it expected more of judicial nominees than a pledge to interpret solely through text and intent. The Senate should understand, as did the Founders, that because of imprecise language, unclear intent, unforeseeable developments, and the capacity of legislatures to be swayed, the task of interpretation will inevitably demand a judge's discretion.

A Judge's Past and Present

Monday, February 18, 2002

The recent confirmation hearing for U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering, President Bush's controversial nominee for the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, left many wondering which Pickering to believe.

Was he the insensitive right-wing segregationist his critics painted him out to be? Or was he the man his supporters described, a real-life version of Harper Lee's Atticus Finch, who courageously fought the Ku Klux Klan and helped blacks to advance as a New South emerged in the late 1960s?

REV_00140485

You can find both Pickerings in his paper trail. As a law student in 1959, he wrote a technically impressive yet emotionally cold- blooded law journal recipe for Mississippi to revive its overturned ban on interracial marriages. His recommendation became law the following year.

Democrats, many of whom are seeking payback for the roadblocks Republicans threw up in front of President Bill Clinton's nominees to the bench, hounded Pickering over his past opposition to abortion, gay rights and laws boosting minority voting power.

Pickering has also been criticized for his handling of the 1994 case of Daniel Swan, who was convicted of burning a cross in front of the home of an interracial couple. Two other defendants pleaded guilty and received minimal sentences. Swan, because he had gone to trial, faced a mandatory minimum five years in prison.

Pickering called Frank Hunger, a friend at the Justice Department who also is a brother-in-law of former Vice President Al Gore, to suggest that prosecutors avoid the mandatory sentence by dropping one of the counts on which Swan was convicted. Prosecutors eventually did drop one count and Pickering sentenced the 20-year-old Swan to 27 months in jail.

Was the call a lapse in judgment? Perhaps, but Pickering's concern was one shared by many civil libertarians, that defendants sometimes pay a "trial tax," that is, receive harsher punishment simply for exercising their constitutional right to trial.

Pickering was also grilled over his association with Mississippi's notorious Sovereignty Commission, a secretive, state-funded body that from 1956 to 1973 devoted itself to resisting desegregation.

During his 1990 confirmation hearing for the district court, Pickering said he never had contact with the committee and denied that it was still in business in the 1970s when he was in the state Senate. When the commission's files were opened to the public in 1998, a document refuted those statements. In the early 1970s, according to the document, Pickering had asked a member of the commission to keep him informed of union activity in a Laurel, Miss., labor dispute.

If that was all there was to Pickering's story, the decision would be easy: He would not belong on the appellate court.

But it is not the end of the story. There is ample evidence that Pickering has, through words and deeds, made considerable efforts to restore his reputation and improve race relations in the south.

His courageous testimony against a Ku Klux Klan leader in 1967 cost Pickering his re-election as a local prosecutor in Mississippi. A decade later, he hired the first black staff member for the Mississippi Republican Party. As a private attorney, he successfully defended a 16-year-old African-American accused of robbery in a racially charged case. He has publicly promoted racial reconciliation in the South.

Perhaps most important, his record on the federal bench has been good. Charles Evers, brother of slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers, and other Mississippi African-Americans are among Pickering's strongest supporters.

Is there a statute of limitations on racism? Hugo Black, once a member of the Ku Klux Klan, joined the Supreme Court in 1937 and became one of its most persuasive advocates for civil liberties. Abraham Lincoln had some curious views about relations between the races, yet went on to free America from slavery.

That does not suggest that Charles Pickering is Lincolnesque. Bush could have made a better choice. But the choice he made should be confirmed.

Campaign to Smear Judicial Nominee Rooted in Ignorance

ONE CAN certainly understand why papers like the Atlanta Journal and Constitution ("Extremist Judge Unfit to Sit on Appeals Court") and the Los Angeles Times ("Say No to This Throwback") are so upset about Charles Pickering, President Bush's nominee for the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. After all, the man once testified as a character witness for the Grand Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan.

What's that, you say? He testified against the Grand Wizard? In Mississippi? In 1967? Putting himself at political and personal risk? Oh. You say he was a local prosecutor who lost his bid for re-election because he stood up to the Klan? Hmmm. You say this man Pickering, who has been a federal judge (confirmed by the Senate) for 11 years, was asked by Mississippi's governor to serve on the executive committee of the Institute of Racial Reconciliation at Ole Miss? What? He was the one who urged the state's governor and the chancellor of the university to create the institute in the first place?

Who's been feeding you this stuff? James Charles Evers? You mean the brother of slain civil-rights hero Medgar Evers? He's defending this "extremist" in the pages of The Wall Street Journal? Hmmm.

PEOPLE FOR the American Way, the Alliance for Justice and other members in good standing of the character assassination coalition have been faxing false accusations about Pickering far and wide. Some of those faxes landed on Evers' desk. Evers, who has known Pickering for decades, was "saddened and appalled to read many of the allegations that have been put forth about Judge Pickering ... made by groups with a Washington, D.C., address and a political agenda" and without real knowledge of "Pickering's long and distinguished record on civil rights."

Evers notes that Pickering did more than face down the Klan. While in private practice, he defended an African-American man accused of robbing a white 16-year-old at knifepoint. After two trials, the man was acquitted.

People for the American Way is making much of a 1990 denial by Pickering that he ever had contact with the racist Mississippi Sovereignty Commission. PAW has uncovered a phone call with a commission staffer dating to 1972. But that phone call dealt with Pickering's concern over a labor dispute in Jones County. According to reporting by National Review's Byron York, the KKK had been making trouble, and Pickering, then a state senator representing Jones County, was keeping tabs on the situation. That one phone call is the entirety of Pickering's "contact" with the Sovereignty Commission.

As a federal judge, Pickering once overturned a damage award in a civil case because he believed that the jury was biased against the plaintiffs, an interracial couple. He ordered that the matter of damages be retried and the award for the couple was thus increased.

WELL, SAY the liberal activists, Pickering joined a law firm one of whose partners was a former segregationist. How many Southern law firms in the 1970s did not contain former segregationists? The Supreme Court of the United States and the U.S. Senate both contain or have contained not just former segregationists but former members of the KKK. The key term is "former" -- "was blind but now I see." Besides, we are talking here of a law partner, not Pickering himself, who never was a segregationist. The very worst the mud-slingers on the left could find about the fellow was a 1959 law review article in which Pickering pointed out the poor wording of an anti-miscegenation statute. The 21-year-old Pickering did not, in the article, make the case against the law.

But in a four decade career in the law, Pickering has shown himself to be an eminently fair and reasonable jurist. He has recommended to some convicted felons that all was not lost; that they still might turn their lives around by participating in Chuck Colson's Prison Fellowship. Oops, another red flag. PAW says this is evidence of Pickering's "disregard for the separation of church and state."

THIS ATTACK on Pickering is so obviously malicious and in such bad faith that one wonders why anyone takes these liberal groups seriously anymore. They have cried wolf so many times about so many honorable men and women that they have brought shame on themselves. They have become the thing they claimed to detest: McCarthyites.

A Case Without Merit; The Nomination of a Broadly Admired Federal Judge in Pittsburgh is Being Challenged Because of Political Pique. Ken Gormley and Frederick W. Thieman Defend Judge D. Brooks Smith Against the Calumny

The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

Sunday, February 17, 2002

A Washington-based public interest coalition has launched an attack on Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith, a Republican sitting in Pittsburgh, who has been nominated by President Bush to fill a vacancy on the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The byzantine process of appointing federal judges usually does not grab public attention. But be assured that the outcome of this case will have a dramatic impact on every citizen in Western Pennsylvania.

Our federal court handles the most serious drug cases, white collar crimes, constitutional and environmental matters, and high-stakes suits involving out-of-state businesses. For years, though, it has been struggling to operate on two cylinders, due to insidious political warfare that has left our region with a growing number of unfilled vacancies. In the latest shot across the bow, the Community Rights Counsel (aligned with Democratic interests), has written a letter to key Senate Judiciary Committee members, seeking to sink Judge Smith's nomination.

Unfortunately, what is couched as a critique of Judge Smith's record is a stiff dose of political payback. It unfairly impugns the reputation of a sterling member of our federal bench -- and perpetuates a longstanding political grudge match that cannot possibly benefit the citizens here.

As Democratic members of the bar in Western Pennsylvania, we strongly urge the Community Rights Counsel to reconsider this dangerous political strategy.

It is no secret what events precipitated this assault on Judge Smith's nomination. For the past six years, during the Clinton administration, Republican Sen. Rick Santorum blocked every Democratic nominee to the federal court, based upon blatant, hardball political tactics that harmed our region. Now Democrats are prepared to give it back to the Republicans in spades.

We sympathize with the frustration of Democratic interest groups. We also agree that it is crucial to challenge any White House nominee who is not suited -- by virtue of temperament or extreme judicial philosophy -- to hold these influential federal appointments. But Judge D. Brooks Smith is not an extremist, by any stretch of that term. He received the highest rating (unanimously) from the American Bar Association and the top rating from the Allegheny County Bar Association. Since his appointment by President Reagan in 1988, Judge Smith has earned the universal respect of judges and lawyers in Western Pennsylvania, regardless of party affiliation.

Stacked up against one negative letter written by the Washington coalition, over a hundred letters have been written to the Judiciary Committee in support of Judge Smith's nomination by notable Western Pennsylvania lawyers, judges, public officials and organizations.

These include letters from six former U.S. attorneys (under Democratic and Republican presidents); numerous members of Congress of both parties; all 10 of Judge Smith's colleagues on the federal district court, seven of whom were appointed by Democratic presidents; the president of the Pennsylvania Bar Association; the deans of Duquesne and Pitt law schools; the Women's Bar Association; a former president of the local ACLU; dozens of members of the criminal defense bar; and judges from the Supreme Court Superior Court of Pennsylvania (both Democrats and Republicans).

Federal judges, unlike elected political officials, cannot respond when attacked in the arena of public opinion. Their positions bind them to silence. Their reputations are the only currency that they bring to the bench in resolving society's most difficult conflicts.

If the Democrats in Washington wish to take aim at objectionable candidates, this is the wrong target. Moreover, the charges leveled against Judge Smith by the Community Rights Counsel are misinformed at best:

* They assert that Judge Smith took "trips paid for by companies and interest groups," a claim that is overblown. The Judicial Conference of the United States has permitted the types of trips cited by the Community Rights Counsel, for the purposes of continuing education, so long as the judge determines there is no actual or potential conflict with pending cases. Most federal judges in the United States -- both Democrats and Republicans -- attend such seminars. Although there has been a recent movement to introduce legislation to limit such trips, it is still the subject of honest debate.

* They state that Judge Smith accepted a plea bargain in U.S. vs. Action Mining that was "too low." This is unsupportable. Judge Smith's fine of $50,000, after this small mining company had already been slapped with $625,000 in civil penalties, was considered within the normal range. Then-U.S. Attorney Harry Litman, whose office prosecuted the case, viewed Judge Smith's sentence as fair, reasonable and a victory for the U.S. government.

* They assert that Judge Smith spoke out against the Violence Against Women's Act, in 1994, which is true. Most of the federal judiciary in the United States, and many state judges, opposed this law. It shifted sensitive abuse cases from the state courts (which were arguably better equipped to handle such matters) to the federal judiciary (which was already overtaxed). Although many of us supported the Violence Against Women's Act, others thought there were better ways to accomplish its important policy goals.

As a lawyer, prosecutor and state judge, Judge Smith handled countless abuse cases involving female victims. It is unfair to oppose a nominee for expressing sincere views as to how best handle this sensitive body of cases.

Not a single judge or lawyer who has dealt with Judge Smith during his 14 years on the federal bench, to our knowledge, has seriously questioned his fairness, impartiality or absolute competence. Writing to Sen. Patrick Leahy, Amy J. Greer, president of the Allegheny County Bar Association, indicated the local bar association's "full support" for Judge Smith's nomination to the appellate bench.

The public interest demands that a first-rate federal appeals judge be appointed to fill a crucial vacancy on our court. Members of our bar have a tradition of respect for judges, of any political affiliation, who earn it. Judge Smith will be a credit to all lawyers, judges and citizens of Western Pennsylvania. That, rather than settling political scores, should be the guiding polestar.

NOTES:
Ken Gormley is a professor at Duquesne University School of Law. Frederick W. Thieman, a partner at Thieman & Kaufman, is a former U.S. attorney for the Western District of Pennsylvania.

The Role of Ideology in Judicial Selection: Test Case

By Stuart Taylor, Jr.
The National Journal
Saturday, February 16, 2002

Federal District Judge Charles Pickering Sr. of Mississippi has the misfortune of being the first Bush federal appeals court nominee openly targeted by liberal groups and Senators determined to block the President from transforming the lower courts-and, if he gets a chance, the Supreme Court-into conservative bastions.

So, poor Pickering finds himself trashed as "a throwback to the old, segregated South," in the words of Marcia Kuntz, of the liberal Alliance for Justice. That makes Kuntz a contender for the 2002 John D. Ashcroft award, given (by me) for the ugliest smear of a nominee in the tradition of then-Sen. Ashcroft's 1999 trashing of Missouri Supreme Court Judge Ronnie White as a "pro-criminal" jurist with "a tremendous bent toward criminal activity." (White's criminal activity consisted of voting to reverse death sentences and convictions in a fraction of his cases.) Pickering, 64, an anti-abortion conservative who would sit on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit-which covers Mississippi, Texas, and Louisiana-seems a decent man and a diligent, if often-reversed and undistinguished, judge. He may not be quite the paragon of courageous leadership in the struggle for racial equality his supporters portray. But he is hardly the racially insensitive "throwback" portrayed by some of his liberal opponents.

But this battle is not primarily about Pickering. And the major combatants are not animated by whether his heart is tainted by racism (there is no recent evidence it is), or whether he has seemed forthcoming about long-past, race-related episodes that have drawn criticism (he has not), or whether he seems a basically ethical person (he does), or whether his judicial opinions are well-crafted (they are not).

Although such issues are debating points, this is a battle about power-the power to shape the liberal-conservative balance on the federal appeals courts. Appellate judges get little media attention, but they exercise vast influence over national policy on virtually all controversial issues. They also have the last word in 99.7 percent of all federal cases. Bush would like to create conservative majorities on most or all of the 13 appeals courts. Liberals are desperate to avert such a shift.

Supreme Court confirmation battles have focused on the nominees' ideology since two decades before the climactic 1987 rejection of Judge Robert Bork. Until recently, the Senate tended to rubber-stamp any lower-court nominee equipped with a pulse, a law degree, and a clean criminal record. Deference to the President's choice was the norm.

But now, Republicans complain that Senate Democrats, their academic auxiliaries, and liberal groups are openly calling for an ideological litmus test to block strongly conservative Bush nominees to the appeals courts. Democrats have a pretty good rejoinder: The Republicans started it by mounting what People for the American Way President Ralph G. Neas calls "an unprecedented partisan and ideological blockade" to derail an unusually high 35 percent (or 24 candidates) of Clinton's appeals court nominees from 1995 to 2001 without even giving them hearings. In some cases, Republican Senators (apparently including Ashcroft) used anonymous "holds" to stall individual nominees-one lasted for a record-breaking four years. Even White House Counsel Alberto R. Gonzales admitted to CNN in August that this Republican stalling had been wrong.

The result of this stall was that Bush inherited an unusually large number of vacancies when he took office. And Senate Democrats are understandably reluctant to reward past Republican obstructionism by helping Bush fill these vacancies with conservatives. If all of Bush's current nominees are confirmed, Neas says, 11 of the 13 appeals courts (up from seven now) will be controlled by Republican-nominated judges.

Such partisan labeling of judges might have sounded strange two or three generations ago. But with the ever-greater politicization of the law over the past 50 or more years, the party registration of the nominating President has become the best rough predictor of how a federal appellate judge is likely to vote in the most-controversial cases. Small wonder that the confirmation process has degenerated into a downward spiral of partisan brawling.

What role should ideology play in the confirmation process for appellate nominees? It depends on where you sit. When Bill Clinton was President, Republicans infuriated Democrats by stalling or killing nominees they deemed to be too liberal. Now that Bush is President, Democrats endorse ideological vetoes (of conservatives) and Republicans are shocked-shocked!- to see the process politicized.

A more neutral principle might be this: In the interest of filling vacancies within a reasonable amount of time, and encouraging first-rate lawyers to accept nominations without fear of an ever-longer and more harrowing confirmation process, Senators should ordinarily give considerable deference to the President's choices. But deference has a limit.

The limit is that Senators can and should use their "advise and consent" power to keep the judiciary as a whole reasonably representative of the American people, rather than allowing the President to suddenly tilt the courts to the left or the right of center. While courts have not traditionally been seen as representative bodies, they have claimed many of the powers once exercised by those bodies. And Bush's hotly disputed victory in the freakishly close 2000 election gave him no mandate to make the third branch of government dramatically more conservative.

This does not mean that the Senate should indiscriminately block the most-conservative nominees. Indeed, the Democrats should stop stalling stellar conservatives such as John Roberts and Miguel Estrada, two leading appellate advocates, who would sit on the District of Columbia Circuit, and Michael McConnell, a widely respected constitutional scholar, who would sit on the 10th Circuit.

Democratic Senators would be justified, however, in temporarily blocking conservative Bush nominees to keep open vacancies that Senate Republicans unjustifiably prevented Clinton from filling, and in insisting that Bush either renominate the Clinton candidate (as he has done in one case) or choose someone else ideologically acceptable to Democrats.

Where would these criteria leave Judge Pickering-whose old friend and chief patron, Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., has said Pickering will be confirmed "or else"? Pickering is not without virtues. Even opponents who assail his civil-rights record acknowledge that he courageously testified against a Ku Klux Klan leader in a 1967 murder case, when that was a dangerous thing to do. He has long been a leader in organizations seeking to improve race relations in his state and has many admirers there, including some Democrats. Supporters, including James Charles Evers, the brother of slain civil-rights leader Medgar Evers, claim that he "has an admirable record on civil-rights issues."

Liberal groups, Democratic Senators, and the Mississippi NAACP vigorously disagree. In a 25-page report, People for the American Way asserts that Pickering's opinions "suggest a hostility to civil and constitutional rights" and faults him for a rigidly conservative ideology; for his high rate of reversal on appeal, including 15 cases in which the 5th Circuit found that he had misread "well-settled principles of law"; for his use of a judicial opinion as a forum to criticize (while construing narrowly) the Supreme Court's one-person-one-vote precedents; for disparaging comments about black job-discrimination plaintiffs whose claims he considered weak; and for his unconvincing explanations of several decades-old, disputed episodes, including his authorship of a law review note advising the Mississippi Legislature on how to fix a technical flaw in its anti- miscegenation law, the better to enforce it against interracial couples. (That was in 1959, when Pickering was a 21-year-old law student.) Critics also suggest that he violated an ethical rule when he phoned a high-level Justice Department official in 1994 to protest a prosecutor's insistence on a five-year mandatory prison term for a man convicted of burning a cross on an interracial couple's lawn.

As for Pickering's judicial opinions, a quick scanning calls to mind Sen. Roman Hruska's legendary 1970 encomium to Supreme Court nominee G. Harrold Carswell: "Mediocre judges and people and lawyers ... are entitled to a little representation, aren't they, and a little chance? We can't have all Brandeises, Cardozos, and Frankfurters, and stuff like that there."

Indeed we can't. None of Pickering's blemishes seems clearly disqualifying, and ordinarily deference to the President's (and the Minority Leader's) choice might argue for an unenthusiastic vote to confirm. But this is not an appropriate case for deference. The reason is that Senate Republicans kept three seats open on the 5th Circuit for Bush to fill by blocking three Clinton nominees from even getting votes. Until the Republicans rectify that obstructionism, maybe Pickering should wait.

Terry Eastland: Bush Not Fighting for Judicial Nominee

By Terry Eastland
The Dallas Morning News
Monday, February 18, 2002

In May, even as Vermont Sen. James Jeffords prepared to leave the Republican Party, President Bush decided to nominate federal District Judge Charles Pickering to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which encompasses Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi. Mr. Pickering has endured not one but two Senate Judiciary Committee hearings. Today, his nomination is in doubt. And the main reason it is can be traced to Mr. Jeffords' departure from the GOP.

Before he left, the two parties had the same number of senators: 50. But the GOP controlled the Senate on the strength of Vice President Dick Cheney's authority to cast tie-breaking votes. Mr. Jeffords' departure – he became an independent – reduced the GOP number to 49. The Democrats thus gained control, an event of predictable consequence for judicial appointments.

Most judicial nominees are confirmed regardless of who controls the White House or the Senate. But when, as now, there is divided government – with one party in control of the White House and the other the Senate – more nominations are likely to be contested and defeated than when the same party controls both.

Had Mr. Jeffords remained a Republican, Mr. Pickering would have been confirmed long ago. He was unanimously confirmed for the district court in 1990, and the American Bar Association has rated him "well qualified." Even now, if he could be voted out of committee, he would stand a good chance of winning confirmation, since two Democrats – Fritz Hollings and Zell Miller – have voiced their support.

Mr. Pickering's problem, however, is how to get from here to there – from the committee, where the Democrats hold a 10-to-9 edge, to the Senate floor. The Judiciary Committee is territory patrolled by Patrick Leahy (the chairman), Edward Kennedy, Joseph Biden, Herbert Kohl, Dianne Feinstein, Russell Feingold, Charles Schumer, Richard Durbin, Maria Cantwell and John Edwards, most of whom are exquisitely attuned to the imprecations of left-wing interest groups, such as People for the American Way and Alliance for Justice. Those groups have pushed hard, and so far successfully, against the nomination.

Mr. Pickering himself has the misfortune of having virtually invisible White House support. He was chosen largely out of deference to a senator, his longtime friend Trent Lott, who began pitching for the judge's elevation to the 5th Circuit when he was Senate majority leader.

Had Mr. Lott not lobbied for Mr. Pickering's nomination – announced on May 25, one day after Mr. Jeffords fled the GOP – Mr. Bush probably would have selected someone else. Mr. Pickering, after all, is a few months away from 65, the age a judge may take senior status. Nor, his ABA rating aside, is he a legal superstar, someone likely to shape the law of the 5th Circuit. "We did this solely to please the then majority leader," one White House official told me. "It's his guy, and it's up to him to get him confirmed." That task would be far easier were the "then majority leader" still the majority leader.

Rarely making headlines, the Pickering nomination has become a series of stories within a story. Some Democrats are motivated against the nomination because they don't like the way Mr. Lott ran the Senate. Others are inclined against the nomination as payback to Republicans for their sometimes slow processing of Clinton judicial nominees, including three for the 5th Circuit who failed even to get hearings.

Also, there are Clinton Justice Department lawyers who butted heads with Mr. Pickering over their sentencing recommendations in a cross-burning case and are laboring against him behind the scenes. And, of course, there are the liberal interest groups, back after eight years on the sidelines, picking at Mr. Pickering as a warm-up for the real battle – over a Bush nominee to the Supreme Court.

Substantively, the case against the nominee is unimpressive. He grew up in segregated Mississippi, but the left's effort to portray him as "insensitive" to civil rights is misguided and unfair: In 1967, as an elected county prosecutor, Mr. Pickering testified against the imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan, an act of moral courage that cost him his office. Mr. Pickering does hold conservative political views. But, contrary to concerns voiced by the law firm of Leahy, Kennedy, Biden, et al., his record on the bench isn't that of a judge who fails to distinguish between his own personal and political views and what the law says.

Of course, none of that may matter, since the Democrats have the power to defeat his nomination. This is the Jeffords effect, and the jury is out on whether Mr. Lott can overcome it. He might, but probably not, unless Mr. Bush, stingy with expenditures of his considerable political capital, finally decides to join the battle.

NAACP Denounces Pickering Confirmation During Press Conference at Annual Meeting

NAACP
Saturday, February 16, 2002

Kweisi Mfume, President & CEO, of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) said today that the Association stands firm in its absolute opposition to the confirmation of Judge Charles Pickering to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit at a press conference held here during the Annual Meeting.

Mfume said: "We will continue to demand fairness on the part of those empowered to interpret the laws of our nation. We are opposed to the Pickering confirmation because we decry a judicial nomination process where civil rights and civil liberties, and equal protection under the law are forced to take a back seat to partisan politics and political affiliations."

Mfume added: "Accordingly and rightfully so, we stand firm as an organization in our absolute opposition to the Senate confirmation of Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, and we stand united against all others whose judicial records give rise to suspicion about their ability to render impartial judgment and fair interpretation of federal law."

Julian Bond, Chairman, NAACP Board of Directors said: "The NAACP was created to fight for freedom and justice in a nation dedicated to those goals. We must continue to fight now with renewed determination. Each of has a role to play as guardians of our nation's liberty, and that is the role history has assigned to us."

Mfume called on the Congress to join the Association in the fight to defeat the Pickering confirmation, and challenged the members to help fight against hate crimes and racial profiling. He also urged them not to ignore the AIDS epidemic both in Africa and at home.

"These are wrongs that must be confronted," Mfume said. "We are compelled to act responsibly before the world to better humanity, and ultimately, to better ourselves."

In light of the September 11th tragedies, Mfume said: "By moving our Annual Meeting back to New York, the NAACP honors the world's leading city and its residents along with the scores of Americans who are resolved to defend the ideals of a free and open society. This is the city of our birth, and we stand in solidarity with New Yorkers."

The NAACP was founded in New York City on the 100th anniversary of President Abraham Lincoln's birthday, which was February 12, 1909. The Association last held its annual meeting in New York in 1998. The meetings were held in Washington, D.C. between 1999-2001.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) is the nation's oldest and largest civil rights organization. Its half-million adult and youth members throughout the United States and the world are the premier advocates for civil rights in their communities and monitor equal opportunity in the public and private sectors.

Bush Reaffirms Support for Pickering; White House Says Democrats Stall on Judges

By James Brosnan
Saturday, February 16, 2002

The White House on Friday reiterated President Bush's support for the troubled nomination of U.S. Dist. Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi to the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

"The President believes in and will fight for the nomination of Mr. Pickering," said White House spokesman Ari Fleischer. Fleischer's comment on Pickering was not prompted by a question, but came instead as Fleischer opened his daily briefing with an attack on Senate Democrats for holding up action on judicial nominations from the Republican administration.

Fleischer complained that the Senate has voted on only 37 of Bush's 90 judicial nominations and that there has been "enhanced lag" for the Circuit Court nominees, with votes on only seven of 29 nominees.

The 12 regional appellate courts have 30 vacancies, a vacancy rate of 18 percent, said Fleischer.

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) noted that many of the vacancies exist because when Republicans controlled the Senate they refused to act on many of President Clinton's nominees.

"During the last six years of the Clinton administration it took an average of about 150 days to move a district court nominee to confirmation. I am proud that we have been able to do better since last July," said Leahy.

The committee held a second hearing on Pickering's nomination last week and Friday members submitted additional questions to the Justice Department for Pickering to answer.

A vote is expected in March. Pickering needs at least one of the 10 committee Democrats to vote to send his nomination to the Senate, but all have expressed concerns either about his civil rights record in the state or rulings on the bench.

Internal Justice Department documents claim Pickering lobbied to reduce jail time for a man convicted of burning a cross on an interracial couple's lawn in 1994.

NAACP Decries Judicial Nominee

By Christopher Lawton
Newsday
Sunday, February 17, 2002

NAACP leaders Kweisi Mfume and Julian Bond voiced staunch opposition yesterday to Senate confirmation of a federal judge's nomination to the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, saying it is an affront to "civil rights, civil liberties and equal protection under the law."

U.S. District Court Judge Charles Pickering, a conservative Mississippi judge, "really represents most of the things that this organization opposes," Mfume, NAACP president and chief executive, said at a news conference at the New York Hilton and Towers Hotel, where the group's board of directors and trustees were having their annual meeting. Pickering, 64, whom President George W. Bush nominated to the appeals court, defended his past actions as a prosecutor and politician on Feb. 7 before the Senate Judiciary Committee. The committee has not scheduled a vote on his nomination.

Pickering told senators that he took stands against racists in Mississippi in the 1960s and 1970s, endured threats against his family and lost re-election as a county prosecutor due to his views.

But he had to concede that he misled senators in 1990 during the Judiciary Committee's hearing on his nomination as a federal district court judge, when he said he never had contact with the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission, a state agency dedicated to maintaining segregation.

On that point, Bond yesterday was heated, saying Pickering "lied to the United States Senate about his associations with the terrorist group ... a state-funded organization which helped to do all it could to stop democracy in the state of Mississippi."

NAACP Asks Congress to Oppose Judicial Nominee

By Zach Howard
The Orlando Sentinel
Sunday, February 17, 2002

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on Saturday asked Congress to support its opposition to President Bush's nomination of a Mississippi judge.

"We challenge every member of the Congress . . . to stand with our association," NAACP President and CEO Kweisi Mfume told hundreds of members of the nation's oldest and largest U.S. civil-rights organization at an annual meeting in New York. The group, which has about 500,000 members nationwide, has said it opposes Senate confirmation of Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, nominated to serve on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

It is one of a coalition of more than 50 organizations acting in opposition to the Pickering nomination since January.

White House officials were not available for comment on the NAACP's action. Efforts to reach Pickering were unsuccessful.

Pickering, a district-court judge since 1990 in Jackson, Miss., has been attacked by national groups for his record as a federal judge and earlier as state senator on matters including women's rights, abortion and voting rights.

"Judge Pickering, in most instances, really represents most of the things that this association is opposed to, and, in most of his rulings, continues to raise suspicions about whether or not he will be able to interpret . .. and administer fairness as he interprets the federal law," Mfume said.

Review Backs Nominee

By Audrey Hudson
The Washington Times

REV_00140504

Friday, February 15, 2002

A legal-ethics expert asked by Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee to review a cross-burning case says that District Court Judge Charles W. Pickering's behavior in the matter deserves praise, not criticism.

Democrats charged that the judicial nominee for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit behaved unethically in determining a crime sentence in the case involving the burning of a cross in the yard of a racially mixed couple.

Michael Krauss, a professor of legal ethics at George Mason University School of Law, reviewed the 1994 Mississippi case at the request of Senate Judiciary Committee Republican staffers.
Mr. Krauss sits on the Board of Governors of the Virginia state bar's education section and said he is frequently called on to discuss ethical issues with members of the bar and bench.

Judge Pickering's judicial behavior "is not unethical or in any way unbecoming of a member of the judiciary," Mr. Krauss said in a written review.

Liberal organizations oppose the nomination of Judge Pickering and are attempting to label him a racist. Democrats attacked Judge Pickering during his second confirmation hearing last week and said he engaged in unofficial communication to reduce the maximum sentence in the case.

Judge Pickering said he objected to the prosecution's sentencing recommendations on the grounds that it was disproportionate, and redacted documents released yesterday by the Judiciary Committee seem to back his assertion.

A 1994 Justice Department memo said Judge Pickering "immediately took issue with the 'severe disparities'" in the sentencing.

Three men were accused of the federal offense, but the prosecutor cut a deal with two offenders, who were then put on probation and sentenced to community service — one had a history of racism and had fired a gun into the home on a previous occasion, and the second had "low mental capacity," according to the memo.

The third suspect was a first-time offender, but the prosecution recommended more than seven years in prison. Judge Pickering instead sentenced him to 39 months in jail and called his actions "heinous," "reprehensible," "despicable," and "dastardly."

Judge Pickering asked federal prosecutors to inform their superiors at the Justice Department of the discrepancy in their sentencing recommendations. He also complained about the sentencing to a friend in a different branch of the department, but there is no evidence that confidential information was revealed, the review said.

"Judge Pickering was clearly concerned that no rational basis had been demonstrated for the widely disparate sentencing recommendations ... ," the review said.

Judge Pickering's actions are described as a "determined effort" to "discharge, faithfully and competently, his judicial duties under our Constitution. I believe Judge Pickering deserves praise for his efforts," the review said.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican, did not specifically identify Mr. Krauss' review, but said the Senate is receiving letters that should address Democrats' concerns.

"I believe any questions about him will be properly and sufficiently answered and we will get him out of committee," Mr. Lott said.

Sen. Charles E. Schumer, New York Democrat, is the only member of the Judiciary Committee to make public his intention to vote against Judge Pickering. Mr. Schumer cited the cross-burning case as the primary reason for his opposition.

A senior Republican aide said Democrats are underestimating the political consequences of derailing the nomination.

"It will be a political boomerang with a razor-blade tip that will come back at them very hard," said the aide, who refused to detail what Republicans are plotting.

Meanwhile, Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., Delaware Democrat, is blocking two Transportation Department appointees responsible for enforcing airline-security regulations, in exchange for getting support for an Amtrak security bill.

The nominees are Emil H. Frankel, for assistant secretary for transportation policy and Jeffrey Shane, for associate deputy secretary.

Blacks at Home Support a Judge Liberals Assail

By David Firestone
The New York Times
Sunday, February 17, 2002

Back in Washington, his opponents have depicted Judge Charles W. Pickering as the personification of white Mississippi's oppressive past, a man so hostile to civil rights and black progress that he is unfit for promotion to a federal appeals court.

But here on the streets of his small and largely black hometown, far from the bitterness of partisan agendas and position papers, Charles Pickering is a widely admired figure of a very different present.

In funeral parlors and pharmacies, used-car lots and the City Council chambers, the city's black establishment overwhelmingly supports his nomination to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, which is heading toward a contentious vote in the Senate in the first major judicial battle of the Bush administration.

Though few black residents here subscribe to Judge Pickering's staunchly Republican politics, many say they admire his efforts at racial reconciliation, which they describe as highly unusual for a white Republican in the state.

"I have never seen Trent Lott open his arms to the black community the way Charles Pickering has," said Larry E. Thomas, owner of Thomas Pharmacy, referring to the Senate minority leader, who is Judge Pickering's friend and patron. "Over the years I've seen him work with black leaders and really try to make an effort to understand and help the community. That's a progressiveness that we need to see more of in this state."

Progressive is not exactly the description used by the national black officials who are making an intense effort to prevent the judge's appointment. "A vote for Pickering is a vote against civil rights," said Julian Bond, the national chairman of the N.A.A.C.P. Representative Robert C. Scott, Democrat of Virginia, speaking against the nomination with other members of the Congressional Black Caucus, said, "It's hard to imagine a person who is more hostile to civil rights." Judge Pickering has also been condemned by a variety of big-city newspaper editorial boards and columnists.

But such comments carry little weight among those who actually know the man personally here in Laurel, in southeast Mississippi. Judge Pickering, now a federal district judge in the nearby city of Hattiesburg, was praised by black city officials for helping to set up after- school youth programs here, and for directing federal money to medical clinics in low-income areas when he was a state senator. Black business leaders say he was influential in persuading white-owned banks to lend money to black entrepreneurs, helping to strengthen the city's black middle class.

"I can't believe the man they're describing in Washington is the same one I've known for years," said Thaddeus Edmonson, a former local president of the N.A.A.C.P. who is now president of the seven-member Laurel City Council and one of its five black members. "If those people who are voting against him because of some press release would just come down here and talk to the people who know him, I think they would have a very different opinion."

The judge's widespread popularity in his hometown has been frustrating to the many civil rights and abortion rights groups that have worked to portray him as an ideological relic of the Old South.

Several opponents of his nomination have tried unsuccessfully to get his supporters to change their minds, and their inability to do so reflects the distance between national liberal groups and many Southern blacks in small towns. In a city like Laurel, with a population of 18,393, one's personality and faith are often more important than a judicial paper trail or an adherence to an agenda.

People for the American Way, a liberal organization based in Washington, has criticized Judge

Pickering for disregarding the separation of church and state by promoting religious programs from the bench. But many prominent blacks here say it is precisely his religious background — he was president of the Mississippi Baptist Convention in the 1980's — that they admire.

"I know Judge Pickering is a fair and impartial person grounded with Christian ethics and beliefs, who ought to be given this chance," said the Rev. Arthur Logan, the black pastor of the Union Baptist Church and a member of the City Council. "There are many people in Mississippi who made these same mistakes early in life, but their strong Christian character brought them closer to God and helped them change."

Four of the five black council members, in fact, said they enthusiastically supported Judge Pickering's appointment. The fifth, Manuel Jones, said he opposed the nomination, largely because he differed with Judge Pickering's efforts in the late 1980's to integrate the largely black city schools with the largely white county schools.

Judge Pickering, then in private practice in Laurel, was one of several white city leaders who argued that the city could not attract economic development with an effectively segregated school system. At the time, Mr. Jones was president of the Laurel-Jones County branch of the N.A.A.C.P., which maintained that consolidation would dilute black administrative power over the city schools. The consolidation plan was eventually overturned by a federal judge, who said it was not justified.

Mr. Jones said he rebuffed a recent telephone request by Judge Pickering that he write the Senate a letter of support. (He had publicly opposed the judge's original appointment to the federal bench in 1990.) Several other council members did agree to the judge's request, however, and their letters are on file with the Senate Judiciary Committee.

"It's hard to go against a sitting federal judge," said Mr. Jones, searching for an explanation of why his colleagues have taken a position that differs so sharply from his.

Many of the judge's critics have cited actions or statements he made in the 1960's and 70's. They have pointed to an article he wrote in 1959 that appeared to support strengthening the state's law against interracial marriages, and to his votes in the state senate that appeared to dilute black voting strength.

The Battle Escalates; New Fighting Over the Charles Pickering Nomination

By Byron York
National Review Online
Friday, February 15, 2002

In a move to escalate the already-intense battle over the nomination of Charles W. Pickering Sr. to a place on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, some Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee are now suggesting that Pickering may have misled the committee at hearings held February 7. Pickering strongly denies the allegation.

At issue are statements Pickering made in response to questions from Democrat John Edwards about a 1994 cross-burning case (see "Behind the Democrats' Attack"). At the time, Pickering, a judge on the federal district court in southern Mississippi, questioned the Clinton Justice Department Civil Rights Division's decision to make no-jail plea bargains with two of the three defendants in the case, while recommending that the third defendant, a man named Daniel Swan, be sentenced to seven and a half years in prison. Evidence that emerged during the trial suggested that one of the defendants who got off with no jail had a significant history of racial hatred, which is an important factor in sentencing defendants convicted under the federal hate crimes statute. There was far less evidence of racial animus on Swan's part; in fact, seven witnesses, both black and white, testified that they were not aware of any racial animus he might have held against black people. While Pickering did not object to sending Swan to prison — he was clearly guilty of taking part in the cross burning — the judge believed that the seven and a half year sentence was too severe, given that a more culpable co-defendant was given no jail time at all.

At last week's hearing, Edwards questioned Pickering about a conversation Pickering had with defense lawyers and prosecutors from the Civil Rights Division. Swan had already been found guilty, and Pickering had told both sides that he was unhappy with the government sentencing recommendation. In the Senate questioning, Edwards alleged that Pickering was so unhappy with the sentence that he threatened to order a new trial for Swan.

"You told the government lawyers that you would on your own motion order a new trial, and when the government lawyer asked you, and I'm quoting now, 'What would be the basis for such a motion?' your answer was, 'Any basis you choose.' First of all, judge...did you say that you would order a new trial, even though no motion for a new trial had been made?"

"I did not," Pickering answered.

"So you deny that?"

"I've reviewed the transcript — "

"So you deny having said that?" Edwards pressed.

"I did not say that," Pickering said.

"So if the lawyers who were involved in that case have said that that's a statement you made to them, that would be a lie?"

"Senator, on the record, I mentioned — "

"Excuse me, judge," Edwards interrupted. "According to documents that we've been provided, this took place in a private meeting you had with the lawyers, when you told the lawyers you would order a new trial on your own motion, and when they asked you, and I'm quoting now, 'What would be the basis for such a motion for a new trial?' you said, 'Any basis you choose.' Do you deny having said that?"

"I have no recollection of having said that," Pickering answered, "and I do not believe that I said that. Now, I have not seen the document that you are referring to. The Justice Department did not show me the files that they had."

"Did you have private meetings with the lawyers off the record about this case?"

"The response that I gave to Senator Leahy on this indicated that after — "

"I'm not asking about Senator Leahy," Edwards interrupted. "Did you have private meetings with the lawyers?"

"With both the defense counsel and the [government] counsel, I had a meeting, yes."

"So private meetings did take place?"

"A private meeting took place."

"And you deny having any discussion in that meeting about ordering a new trial on your own motion? You deny having done that?"

"There was a discussion on the record of a new trial on the basis of the [jury] instructions, but I don't have a recollection of any indication that I would do that on my own motion," Pickering said.

The documents to which Edwards referred — and which Pickering had not seen at the time of the hearing — were two internal Justice Department Civil Rights Division memos. One of the memos, dated November 29, 1994, concerned the private meeting between Pickering, government lawyers, and defense attorneys. As he had in open court, Pickering expressed great unhappiness with the Civil Rights Division's jail recommendation for Swan. "He said that Swan clearly must do some time behind bars, but seven years is just too much," prosecutor Brad Berry wrote in the memo. "Pickering said he has carefully examined his conscience in this case, and is confident that his discomfort with the sentence is not the product of racism."

Then Berry addressed the issue of a new trial. Much of the conversation centered on what was called the "844 charge," which was the part of the charges against Swan that carried a five-year mandatory minimum sentence (other charges against Swan made up the rest of the seven and a half year sentencing recommendation). Pickering, according to Berry's memo, asked whether the Department would agree not to oppose a motion for a new trial on the 844 charge...if Swan received the maximum on the other two charges. Pickering expressed a willingness to sentence Swan to 36 months on the other two charges if he could find a way to do it. He said that if the Department does not agree to do this, he might well write a nasty opinion from our perspective, emphasizing the sentencing disparities and the injustice of applying Section 844 in this case. He said that given his strong feelings about applying 844 in this case, he might well leave the task to the Fifth Circuit. After further discussion, I asked Pickering what would be the basis for the motion for a new trial. Pickering responded, "Any basis you choose."

The paragraph is unclear on where the motion for a new trial might come from, but it does not say, as Edwards alleged, that Pickering threatened to call for a new trial on his own motion. Pickering's defenders suggest that a more reasonable reading of the paragraph would be that Pickering was assuming that the defense, as is common in such cases, would ask for a new trial for Swan. In addition, a later memo, by another Justice Department lawyer, suggests that Pickering never bullied or threatened government lawyers in any way, contrary to Edwards's allegation. "He [Pickering] thinks the sentence facing Swan is draconian, and he wants a way out," prosecutor Jack Lacy wrote,

He has been careful to phrase his concern in such terms as, "I wish you could suggest some way that this harsh sentence could be avoided." He has never directly [italics in the original] asked us to do anything...

In the same memo, Lacy wrote that he "personally agreed with the judge that the sentence is draconian."

Meanwhile, in his first statement since the confirmation hearings, Pickering has offered his own account of the issue. In a letter to Judiciary Committee ranking Republican Orrin Hatch, Pickering writes that he had doubts whether the five-year mandatory-minimum sentence was applicable to the case:

In chambers, I discussed with counsel for both parties (1) the possibility of a motion for a new trial based on the lack of specificity of the jury instruction on racial animus, if the government insisted on applying the five-year mandatory minimum charge, or (2) the possibility of a motion to set aside the verdict or dismiss the charge of the count which carried the mandatory five-year minimum sentence. When counsel for the government asked how this would be accomplished, I recollect responding to him that the government could elect the grounds. I never indicated I would grant a motion for a new trial, sua sponte [on his own motion], and I never indicated I would do so on whatever ground I chose.

Finally, in his letter, Pickering cites a portion of the trial transcript in which a lawyer for the Civil Rights Division appears to admit that the government indeed went too easy on one of the defendants who received a no-jail plea bargain. "The lesson that I take from that, your honor," the lawyer said, "is that perhaps the government should have been more tough — should have asked for a more stringent or stronger or longer sentence for the other defendants in this case."

Speculation Builds Over Chief Justice Successor

By Jan Crawford Greenburg
The Chicago Tribune

Sunday, February 17, 2002

When Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy walked into a District of Columbia magnet school last month to talk to students about concepts of freedom, he said he was hoping they would gain a greater understanding of democracy.

But his key role in unveiling the "Dialogue on Freedom" initiative, with help from the American Bar Association and First Lady Laura Bush, prompted some court watchers to suggest he also may have something else on his mind.

"I'm sure he wants to be chief justice," one court observer said.

Chief Justice William Rehnquist has not announced his retirement, but most agree he is likely to do so this summer or next. With such a closely divided court, the magnitude of that prospect already has public interest groups, lawyers and law professors quick to speculate on even the sincerest intentions of possible nominees and anxious over what all predict will be a colossal confirmation battle.

"This is going to be one of the most dramatic moments in American history," Ralph Neas, president of People for the American Way, said of the confirmation hearings for the next Supreme Court justice.

Indeed, the bitter battle that Neas' group has spearheaded over Charles Pickering, one of President Bush's federal appeals court nominees, is only a hint of what's to come when the administration seeks to fill a vacancy on the high court, observers say. The current court generally is divided 5-4 on contentious issues such as race, religion and the role of government, and Bush is poised to nominate up to three justices, including the chief justice, as aging ones retire.

Rehnquist, 77, is a likely candidate for retirement this year or next, as is Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, although she said recently she would not step down this year. Justice John Paul Stevens, the court's most liberal member and, at 81, its most senior, also could retire this term--particularly because Democrats control the Senate and, Neas vows, would not confirm an ardent conservative to replace him.

But the chief's spot has grabbed the interest of many. To be sure, the chief justice has just one vote, but he also assigns opinions when he is in the majority. That can help shape how broadly or narrowly a decision is written. What's more, the chief is the administrator of a branch of government.

As such, filling that post could present the biggest problem for Bush, particularly if Rehnquist is the only justice to step down. The Senate historically has placed greater emphasis on confirming the chief justice than associate justices, and Democratic leaders already have indicated they will not make it easy for Bush to fill a vacancy.

Conservative groups, aware of the looming battle, are becoming increasingly critical of the administration's approach. They say the administration is not doing enough to get ready for the fight and are particularly upset at Bush's refusal, despite requests, to mention the issue of judicial appointments in his State of the Union address.

Further complicating matters is that there is no obvious choice to take Rehnquist's place. Opponents on the left and the right have raised flags about several of those believed to be contenders, including Kennedy and the current White House counsel, Alberto Gonzales. Groups such as Neas' say they would love to take on two other possible nominees, conservative federal appeals court Judges J. Harvie Wilkinson III and J. Michael Luttig.

Some have said Kennedy's statesmanlike behavior in recent weeks has the cast of a potential chief justice candidate.

That's not to question his sincerity in the "Dialogue on Freedom" initiative. Kennedy, 65, has had a long-standing interest in promoting the virtues of the legal system to young people.

"I would think if an opening occurs, he certainly is one of the people who would be considered seriously," said Jesse Choper, a law professor at the University of California at Berkeley. Of the Democratic-controlled Senate, Choper said: "They'd be hard-pressed to beat him."

Elevating a current justice could siphon attention from the nominee who would take his place as associate justice. That's what happened in 1986, when President Ronald Reagan sought to elevate Rehnquist as chief and nominated Antonin Scalia as associate justice. The Senate spent all its time on the chief's nomination, while Scalia- -one of the court's most ardent conservatives--skated through unanimously.

That said, "Chief Justice Kennedy" is an extremely unlikely scenario. His nomination would infuriate the far right, which was outraged by his refusal in 1992 to overturn Roe vs. Wade, as well as other decisions it perceives as liberal, such as one that blocked clergy from praying at school graduation ceremonies.

"A lot of the president's conservative base would strongly oppose elevating Kennedy," said Tom Jipping, director of the Center for Law and Democracy at the Free Congress Foundation.

Moreover, elevating Kennedy to chief would give the left ample fodder as well. He joined the court's three most conservative members two years ago, for example, in dissenting from a decision that struck down state efforts to ban certain late-term abortions.

Bush vs. Gore role damaging

But his role in Bush vs. Gore could be the most damaging for his prospects. Any confirmation hearing for Kennedy (or O'Connor, if she were tapped for the chief's post) would resurrect the 2000 presidential election. Kennedy and O'Connor are considered the architects of the 5-4 opinion that stopped the vote recounts in Florida and handed the election to Bush over Al Gore.

O'Connor, who will be 72 next month, would have those problems as well as her age working against her, said David Yalof, a political science professor at the University of Connecticut. Bush probably would prefer a younger nominee who would serve for more than a few years, he said.

The other two conservatives on the court, Scalia and Clarence Thomas, are considered simply too conservative--both would overturn Roe vs. Wade, for example--to be confirmed by a Democratic- controlled Senate, Neas, Yalof, Choper and others said.

As such, most observers predict Bush will have little choice but to look outside the court for its next chief, just as President Dwight Eisenhower did in 1953 with Earl Warren, then governor of California, and President Richard Nixon did in 1969 with Warren Burger, then on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

"We're looking at a moment where the current president's best prospects for chief justice lie outside the court," Yalof said.

Yalof and other court watchers, such as Choper, say they believe Bush would like to name the first Hispanic to the court. Most say White House Counsel Gonzales is the front-runner, certainly for associate justice, because he has the confidence of Bush and may not have the damaging paper trails of other potential nominees.

The latter likely would do in the other leading Hispanic candidate, Emilio Garza, a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit. Garza has openly suggested his opposition to Roe vs. Wade, a decision he said is "inimical to the Constitution."

Gonzales could raise brows

Gonzales could be a controversial choice, however, particularly for chief. He served on the Texas Supreme Court just 23 months before assuming his current position, and he could be viewed as too political, Neas and others said. Moreover, the far right views him suspiciously, noting that while on the Texas Supreme Court he joined a majority decision allowing some minors to get abortions without parental notification.

But Yalof said he thought Gonzales "had a lot to offer for chief" because it is an administrative post.

"He's currently in the administration and is someone the president would feel comfortable with, not simply rendering decisions but running a branch of government," Yalof said.

Bush may believe he could get a more predictable conservative as chief, because the appointment would not move the court to the right. Rehnquist, one of the court's most conservative members, would overturn Roe and has led the court in scaling back congressional power and handing it to the states.

If so, Bush could turn to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit, where Wilkinson and Luttig have established solid conservative reputations. Wilkinson, who turns 58 this year, is a former law professor at the University of Virginia and the chief judge of the circuit.

Luttig is a former Scalia clerk who worked to help get Thomas confirmed while working in the Justice Department. Philosophically, he is closer to Scalia and Thomas--the justices Bush said during the campaign he most admired--than Wilkinson. He wrote the high-profile opinion, which the Supreme Court upheld, striking down a section of the Violence Against Women Act as beyond Congress' power.

Recently, however, the two have parted ways dramatically in several high-profile cases, with Luttig, 47, all but accusing Wilkinson of being a faux conservative.

"Many people think Luttig has blessed Wilkinson by making him seem like a moderate statesman," one court observer said.

Ruled with liberal colleagues

In a recent high-profile school desegregation case, Wilkinson joined with more liberal judges in refusing to hold a North Carolina school system liable for running a race-conscious magnet school. Wilkinson said the school district could not be held liable because it had been under a court order to end segregation. But Luttig, in dissent, said Wilkinson "variously ignored and misunderstood" the law.

They also split ways in a high-profile case over the breadth of Congress' power to protect endangered species. Wilkinson wrote for the majority that the federal government had power to limit the taking of red wolves on private lands, a decision Luttig harshly criticized in dissent.

Wilkinson is more in the mold of the gentle conservative, whereas Luttig is more in-your-face," said one lawyer who frequently practices in the 4th Circuit. "I think Wilkinson tries to be more scholarly, whereas Luttig has much more of a rubber-hits-the-road kind of approach."

That's not to say Wilkinson is not conservative. He wrote a majority opinion upholding the Clinton administration's "don't ask, don't tell" policy that excluded acknowledged homosexuals from the military.

"I would guess if either Luttig or Wilkinson is on the Supreme Court, their voting patterns would not be that different," said A.E. Dick Howard, a law professor at the University of Virginia.

Conservative groups acknowledge that either could be difficult to confirm, which could prompt Bush to name a stealth candidate, such as Judge Samuel Alito Jr. of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 3rd Circuit. They put the blame partly on Bush and suggest the administration has ceded control of the debate on the issue to the Democrats.

REV_00140515

"I believe the president, before any Supreme Court vacancy, needs to provide sustained public leadership on judicial appointments, generally," said Jipping of the Center for Law and Democracy. "If the administration is going to wait until there's a Supreme Court vacancy, they're going to lose. Or they're going to feel compelled to nominate someone who won't be worth it."

The O'Connor Factor

By Charles Lane
The Washington Post
Monday, February 18, 2002

When word got out that Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor would be giving a public lecture last fall in Lincoln, Neb., 500 people snapped up every available seat, leaving 100 others to be turned away. The University of Nebraska gave her a medal. Female law students presented a corsage.

"If it hadn't been for you paving the road, we wouldn't be here today," Lisa Rasmussen told O'Connor, according to the Daily Nebraskan.

More than two decades after President Ronald Reagan made her the first woman on the Supreme Court, O'Connor, 71, may be a bigger celebrity -- and a more powerful influence on American law and society -- than ever before.

She has weathered what she has called the "difficult" 2000 election case in which she was one of five Republican-appointed justices to join a much-criticized ruling that sealed President Bush's victory. She has added her voice to those expressing concern that innocent people may be sentenced to death. Favorable reviews are coming in for her much-publicized new memoir, co-written with her brother, H. Alan Day, about growing up on a remote desert ranch during the 1930s and '40s.

And on the most contentious social issues facing American society, she continues to cast what is frequently the deciding vote on a nine-member court often split between liberals and conservatives.

On Wednesday, the court hears oral arguments on two such issues -- state-funded vouchers for private and parochial school tuition, and a possible ban on the death penalty for mentally retarded capital offenders. And once again, attorneys for both sides will be pitching much of their argument to the tall, silver-haired woman sitting just to Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist's left.

So pivotal -- and familiar -- is O'Connor's role that it has become difficult to imagine the court without her, despite rumors, denied by the justice, that she may retire soon. Lately speculation has run in the opposite direction -- that O'Connor could ascend to chief justice if Rehnquist, 77, steps down -- a scenario she also dismisses.

O'Connor's power has been accumulated not by asserting an ironclad doctrine for others to follow, but by remaining as noncommittal as possible: Time and again, she has signed on to narrow rulings crafted according to the facts of a particular case, leaving open the option of another incremental holding later on.

"The rule of law must also be flexible enough to adapt to different circumstances," she told her Nebraska audience, expressing a precept she had articulated many times in her opinions.

"Hers is the power of the median voter," said University of California at Los Angeles law professor Eugene Volokh, a former O'Connor law clerk. "Lawyers target her for the same reason both sides in a political campaign target the center."

The question hovering over O'Connor's 21-year career on the court, though, is whether her approach is too much like the political art of compromise she once practiced as majority leader of the Arizona state Senate.

By providing only sketchy constitutional guidance to legislatures and lower courts, some lawyers, legal academics and judges say, her restrained jurisprudence lays the basis for legal instability that ultimately must be sorted out by the Supreme Court -- and, in many cases, by O'Connor herself.

O'Connor's fellow justice, Antonin Scalia, has published opinions blasting her mode of reasoning, including a 1988 gibe at her "Solomonic" answer to a death penalty case: "Solomon," Scalia wrote, "was not subject to the constitutional constraints of the judicial department of a national government in a federal, democratic system."

O'Connor's admirers describe her method as "judicial minimalism."

"Clear rules are better; they make the court's own judgments more transparent," Volokh said. "But if a justice is not persuaded the Constitution demands a clear rule, it's her duty to vote for a more fact-sensitive one."

O'Connor, a lifelong Republican, votes more than 80 percent of the time with Rehnquist, a Nixon appointee. She has joined him, Scalia and other conservatives in the court's recent effort to bolster states' rights.

But on social issues, she has muted the court's rightward tendencies. Most famously, she voted to uphold the right to abortion enshrined in Roe v. Wade, co-writing the 1992 opinion that barred state laws that impose an "undue burden" on the right to choose. In 2000, she provided the fifth vote for a ruling that struck down Nebraska's ban on what opponents call "partial birth" abortions.

Abortion, she recently told NBC's Katie Couric, "is an issue about which people feel passionately, and I'm very much aware of that when we have a case in that area."

Certainly, there is little evidence of ideological fervor in O'Connor's personal story. Her childhood was spent among some of the last real cowboys in the West, on the 300-square-mile Lazy B Ranch. Straddling Arizona and New Mexico, the Lazy B had no electricity or running water; as depicted in her memoir, it was a place where individual adaptability and common sense were at a premium, and the social changes linked to the New Deal and World War II made little direct impact.

Graduating third in her class (Rehnquist was first) from Stanford Law School in 1952, O'Connor was stunned by law firms' refusal to hire her, but made a career in local government and the Arizona Republican Party. She was appointed to the state Senate in 1969, became majority leader in 1972 and later ran successfully for state trial judge before being elevated to the state appeals court by a Democrat, then-Gov. Bruce Babbitt in 1979.

When Reagan offered her the Supreme Court job in 1981, antiabortion groups tried to derail her nomination, citing her opposition as a state senator to certain laws restricting abortion. O'Connor herself has admitted she felt uncertain about her own modest judicial experience.

But she was fortified by lessons learned on the Lazy B. It gave her, she recently told C-SPAN interviewer Brain Lamb, "a certain amount of self-confidence in your ability to work things out and not be afraid to tackle something."

Today she regularly recruits law clerks who have served both liberal and conservative lower-court judges, relying on them for detailed briefings, oral and written, on each case -- and occasionally treating them to her homemade Tex-Mex cuisine.

Both cases before the court on Wednesday show how O'Connor's past rulings set the stage for future cases in which she again plays the potentially deciding role.

In the school voucher case, opponents of the program will try to persuade the court that, as practiced in Cleveland, the voucher subsidy gives families no real choice but to spend government money at religious schools, an issue framed in O'Connor's past opinions on the church-state balance.

In the death penalty case, Daryl Atkins, convicted of murder in Virginia, asserts that he has an IQ of 65, which qualifies him as moderately retarded under current psychiatric guidelines.

His attorneys argue that a national consensus has formed against the death penalty for persons with very limited intellectual abilities, so Atkins's execution would be "cruel and unusual punishment" prohibited by the Eighth Amendment.

In 1989, a Texas death-row inmate, Johnny Paul Penry, sought and was denied such a ruling from the Supreme Court. O'Connor's role was decisive.

Wrestling with Penry's claim that mentally retarded persons are less able to reason and hence less culpable for their crimes than others, O'Connor wrote that states must give juries a genuine chance to consider mental retardation as a factor weighing against the death penalty. It was an argument repeated by Atkins.

This section of O'Connor's opinion, which ordered a new trial for Penry, was joined by liberals such as the late Justices William J. Brennan Jr., Thurgood Marshall and Harry A. Blackmun and John Paul Stevens, who is still on the court.

O'Connor, however, concluded that it was not yet clear that all mentally retarded people lacked the reasoning ability ever to warrant capital punishment. And there was insufficient evidence of a national consensus against executing them, she wrote. Only two states with the death penalty had outlawed it.

This portion of her opinion was joined by conservatives Rehnquist, Scalia, Anthony M. Kennedy and Byron R. White, who has since retired.

Still, O'Connor left the door open. A national consensus, she wrote, "may ultimately find expression in legislation, which is an objective indicator of contemporary values upon which we can rely."

"That day has arrived," Atkins's attorneys argue in their brief for the case to be argued Wednesday. They noted that 18 of the 38 states that permit capital punishment now have laws outlawing death sentences for the mentally retarded. When you add the 12 states that do not allow capital punishment at all, they argue, 30 states -- 60 percent of the total -- plus the federal government, forbid the death penalty for retarded offenders.

Is 60 percent enough to make for a national consensus? O'Connor's past opinions are suggestive but, characteristically, not definitive on how she might rule.

In 1988, when the court voted to strike down the death penalty for 15-year-old murderers, O'Connor supplied the fifth vote -- but did so for reasons that were all her own.

In a separate opinion, she noted that 32 of 50 states -- 64 percent -- either had no death penalty or had limited it to perpetrators 16 or older. This, she said, created a strong presumption that a national consensus against executing those younger than 16 existed. But more state legislation would be needed to know for sure, because a large minority of states that set no minimum age for the death penalty appeared to permit executing 15-year-olds.

O'Connor explained her vote as limited only to situations in which states had specified no minimum age for death penalty.

Just a year later, she joined four conservatives in holding that executions for 16- and 17-year-old perpetrators were constitutional. There, she assented to a national-consensus calculus that focused only on the rules in the 37 states that had the death penalty at the time, noting that "a majority of states authorizing capital punishment permit it for defendants 16 and above." And today, a majority of death penalty states still allow sentencing retarded offenders to death.

Five of the death penalty states that have banned capital punishment for the retarded passed their laws in the last year, after the Supreme Court's surprising announcement in March 2001 that it would revisit the 1989 Penry ruling in the case of North Carolina death row inmate Ernest McCarver.

Legal analysts say that the mere fact that the court agreed to reconsider the subject suggests that change is afoot at the court. O'Connor herself has made two public statements -- to a Minnesota women's lawyers' group in July and again on her October visit to Nebraska -- that seemed to capture national anxiety about administration of the death penalty.

"More often than we want to recognize," she said in Nebraska, "some innocent defendants have been convicted and sentenced to death."

Edwards' Tactics Draw Ire

By Paul Kane
Roll Call
Monday, February 18, 2002

With a blistering cross-examination of a controversial judicial nominee, Sen. John Edwards (D-N.C.) has landed in hot water with the nation's leading anti-tobacco lawyer.

Dickie Scruggs, the trial lawyer from Pascagoula, Miss., who recently led the legal assault on the tobacco industry, has vowed to never again support Edwards and plans to rally other trial lawyers to his anti-Edwards campaign.

If Scruggs follows through on his stated mission, it would deal a serious financial blow to Edwards, himself a former trial lawyer who has relied heavily on the legal industry to underwrite his burgeoning national ambitions.

The bone of Scruggs' contention is Edwards' treatment of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, who is seeking a lifetime appointment to a seat on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. "I'm really mad about it," Scruggs said of the questioning Edwards subjected Pickering to at a Feb. 7 hearing and the North Carolina Senator's apparent lack of respect for Scruggs' opinion of the judge. "It wasn't the manly thing to do."

Scruggs has a family stake in the Pickering nomination: He's married to Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott's (R-Miss.) sister-in-law. Lott, who has known Pickering for more than 30 years, has made this confirmation a personal crusade and has threatened to retaliate against Democrats if they block Pickering, whose son, Rep. Chip Pickering Jr. (R-Miss.), used to work for Lott.

Scruggs said his efforts to reach out to Edwards, a personal-injury trial lawyer before unseating Sen. Lauch Faircloth (R) in 1998, were part of a broader effort to lobby Democrats he bonded with during the "tobacco wars."

Scruggs has tried to make the case that liberal interest groups in Washington are inaccurately portraying Pickering, 64, as a southern segregationist in retaliation for the way Republicans treated Clinton administration nominees in the 1990s.

"He's getting a bum rap," Scruggs said.

Scruggs, who has known Pickering for more than 20 years, called him a "fine judge." A lifelong Democrat who has given and helped raise thousands of dollars for the party's candidates, Scruggs said Democrats are wrong - personally, politically and legally - to oppose Pickering.

If he gets rejected, Scruggs said, Pickering's replacement will in all likelihood pose a greater threat to Democratic interests as a younger and more stridently conservative jurist, and one without decades of rulings and political activity to use in opposition to the nomination at Senate hearings.

Scruggs' ire, however, is currently focused on fellow trial lawyer Edwards, who ignored a series of calls the Mississippi attorney made to Edwards office in advance of the tension-filled Feb. 7 hearing.

"I started calling him on Tuesday [Feb. 5] and left messages all over for him," Scruggs said in an interview last week.

Noting trial lawyers' past financial support for Edwards, Scruggs said: "Not that he owes me a vote, but he owes me a phone call."

Scruggs attended Pickering's hearing, where he spoke with Democratic Sens. Edward Kennedy (Mass.), Russ Feingold (Wis.) and Dianne Feinstein (Calif.) about the nomination. He said he also spoke with top aides to Sen. Joseph Biden (D-Del.), but couldn't get a return call from Edwards.

Other trial lawyers from Mississippi also tried to reach Edwards and were rebuffed, Scruggs said.

At the hearing, Edwards was relentless in his questioning, focusing on a 1994 cross- burning case Pickering oversaw. Frequently cutting Pickering off and forcing him into one-word and yes-or-no answers, Edwards prompted Pickering to admit he had "ex parte" conversations with Justice Department officials regarding the case.

Biden told Roll Call last week that Pickering's answers to Edwards will play a key role in whether he supports the judge and questioned his truthfulness in responding to committee members' inquiries. One senior Democratic aide called Edwards "brilliant," noting that the cross-burning case was the "perfect metaphor" for Democratic opposition. A top GOP aide admitted the line of questioning was hurting the judge's case.

Pickering's explanation - that he felt prosecutors had gone soft on the main culprit, who received no jail time in exchange for a guilty plea, and were coming down hard on a bit player in the case - barely registered. Scruggs said Pickering's family was furious: "They felt very humiliated about it."

A few days after the hearing, the judge's son said he was in "remarkably good spirits."

But, Rep. Pickering added, "They're trying to use Mississippi's reputation and history to smear a good man."

Scruggs said he left the hearing disgusted with Edwards, who he felt was twisting the facts of the case and playing the role of "the heavy" at the behest of other Democrats.

Not expecting to have his calls returned, Scruggs said he got another trial lawyer to get in touch with Edwards. "I sent a message through another trial lawyer: He can forget my support and that of anybody I have influence with," Scruggs recalled.

Early last week, Edwards finally called Scruggs, who characterized the conversation as "cordial."

Edwards' office did not confirm or deny Scruggs' account. In a statement released by his office, Edwards said, "I will make an independent evaluation on the merits with regard to the nomination of Judge Pickering. At this stage, I have very serious reservations."

On Saturday, Edwards was one of three potential Democratic White House hopefuls, along with Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (S.D.) and Sen. John Kerry (Mass.), to speak at the state Democratic convention in California.

While Scruggs himself has not been a direct financial backer of Edwards, lawyers have been the Senator's single largest backer, and many of Scruggs' friends are among Edwards' supporters. In the 1998 election cycle he received $905,280 from lawyers and law firms, the fourth most of any candidate in that cycle, according to the Center for Responsive Politics. That's all the more impressive considering Edwards does not take PAC money.

Up for re-election in 2004, Edwards campaign committee has already collected at least $218,686 from the legal industry, more than all but three other Senators - and each of those three faces re-election this fall.

To finance his national ambitions, Edwards opened a leadership political action committee, New American Optimists, last fall, raising $731,850 in November and December.

More than $650,000 of that total came from lawyers, their family members or employees of law firms, according to a Roll Call analysis of the PAC's donors.

Of that, $167,000 came from Mississippi attorneys, legal employees or their family members -

many of whom work at firms, such as Minor & Associates and Langston Law Firm, whose principals are also supporting Pickering.

Asked if he could see himself ever supporting Edwards, or encouraging his friends in the legal community to back him, Scruggs said the Pickering nomination will be decisive. "I guess I ought to see how he votes," he said.

Group in Judge Seminars Denies Slanted View Point

By Ann McFeatters

A foundation that sponsors seminars on environmental economics for federal judges says its work is being mischaracterized by a land-use group seeking to derail the nomination of Western Pennsylvania U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Community Rights Counsel, an organization that provides legal aid to local governments and environmentalists in land-use cases, is one of 27 environmental, women's rights and civil rights groups that are raising questions about Smith's nomination by President Bush.

In a letter to members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, which holds confirmation hearings for nominees to the federal bench, the group claims that between 1992 and 2000 Smith spent "nearly three months at luxury resorts and dude ranches on trips funded by corporations and special interests with a stake in federal court litigation," including expenses-paid visits to seminars hosted by the Foundation for Research on Economics and the Environment, or FREE, which is based in Bozeman, Mont. FREE Chairman John Baden said that while his group receives corporate money, only money from tax-exempt foundations is used to conduct the seminars for judges. Baden also said Community Rights Counsel wrongly portrays FREE as "right-wing."

"While FREE's programs are explicitly pro-environment, they explain why ecological values are not the only important ones. We stress that tradeoffs among competing values are inescapable. We show why it is ethically and materially irresponsible to pretend such choices can be avoided."

In a letter explaining his group's orientation, Baden went on to say, "The intellectually naive confuse FREE's classical liberal, incentive-based orientation with that advocated by those who support subsidized exploitation of the environment (e.g., below-cost timber sales on the national forests)."

Doug Kendall, a lawyer with Community Rights Counsel, says his group stands by its characterization of FREE as supported by "corporations that litigate in federal courts." He said, "Ninety percent of the speakers at their programs are right-wingers from think tanks or academia and one or two token environmentalists, some of whom say awful things about FREE and some of whom say good things."

FREE's Web site identifies its corporate funders in 2001 as the American Chemistry Council, Caterpillar, Exxon Mobil, General Electric, General Motors, Georgia Pacific, Merck, Shell and Tindall. Foundation supporters include the Ajax Foundation, the Chase Foundation of Virginia, the John M. Olin Foundation, the Sarah Scaife Foundation and the True Foundation.

Pickering's Actions Questioned in Cross Burning Case

By Jason Straziuso
The Associated Press
Friday, February 15, 2002

Internal Justice Department documents claim U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering lobbied to reduce jail time for a man convicted of burning a cross on an interracial couple's lawn in 1994.

At one point in the lobbying effort, according to a written report by a government attorney, the appellate court nominee from Mississippi even threatened to retry the case.

Whether the federal judge acted in good faith in seeking a just punishment for the defendant or attempted to sidestep the law is the question Senate Judiciary Committee members are examining as they contemplate Pickering's nomination to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. After a burning cross was placed on an interracial couple's lawn near Improve in Walthall County, charges were filed against three individuals.

Two males, ages 17 and 25, were sentenced to probation and home confinement in exchange for guilty pleas. A third person, Daniel Swan, then age 20, turned down the plea offer and was convicted in a trial.

The Justice Department sought a seven-year sentence for Swan. One of the charges Swan faced carried a five-year minimum sentence. He eventually received a 27-month sentence.

Government lawyer Brad Berry, in a 1994 internal Justice Department memo, said Pickering called Berry into his chambers and told the attorney he had problems with the seven-year sentence and the disparities in the sentencing for the three defendants.

Berry's memo was made public by the Democratic-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee. Pickering is a Republican.

Berry wrote that Pickering felt the Justice Department "is probably right on the law, but the result in this case would clearly be unjust."

The memos claimed Pickering had several off-the-record conversations with government attorneys in an attempt to get around the minimum sentencing requirement.

Berry also wrote that Pickering threatened to order a new trial on "any basis you choose."

Democrats have alleged Pickering privately contacted the Justice Department to manipulate the sentence.

Pickering has told Judiciary Committee members the only contact he had with the agency outside of court was a telephone call to a friend. Pickering said the contact was not improper because he did not discuss the case's specifics, but rather simply voiced frustration at the situation.

Pickering said Friday he cannot comment on issues surrounding his nomination. U.S. Rep. Chip Pickering, R-Miss., the judge's son, recently said that Swan was pulled into taking part in the cross burning, while the leaders of the act got off with the lighter plea sentences.

Republicans, led by Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., accuse the Democrats of holding Pickering up as a test case for future conservative Supreme Court nominees.

The Judiciary Committee is expected to vote on Pickering's nomination by mid-March.

On Thursday, Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said he would not support Pickering due to the cross burning information.

Marty Wiseman, director of Mississippi State University's John C. Stennis Institute of Government, said it appears Pickering's aim was not to subvert the law but to be just in his sentencing.

"This was what Judge Pickering was wrestling with and discussing with the various folks with the Justice Department," Wiseman said.

Republicans on the committee requested a review of the cross burning affair from George Mason University law professor Michael Krauss.

Krauss, in a Feb. 11 letter to Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, ranking Republican on the committee, concluded that Pickering's judicial behavior was proper and the just "deserves praise for his efforts."

Krauss wrote that no rational basis had been established for the disparate sentencing among the three accused males.

What Judges Do. The Founders Saw that Laws Are Often Murky, So Judicial Beliefs Matter

By Mark Kozlowski
New Jersey Law Journal

REV_00140525

Monday, February 18, 2002

Mark Kozlowski is associate counsel at New York University School of Law's Brennan Center for Justice.

Should the Senate be concerned with the personal ideological views of federal judicial nominees? Conservatives say no. A proper judge qua judge, they assert, has no personal ideological views. A legislator may have such views, but not a judge. Thus, when President George W. Bush announced his initial batch of judicial nominees last May, he vowed: "Every judge I appoint will be a person who clearly understands the role of a judge is to interpret the law, not to legislate from the bench."

Whenever conservatives talk about the courts, the prohibition against "legislating from the bench" gets mentioned sooner or later. The idea is that, although judges must determine the meaning of statutes, the only legitimate elements to be considered are the words of the statute and the intent of the legislature in employing those words. Similarly, when called upon to interpret a provision of the Constitution, conservatives contend that the only proper guide, beyond the text itself, is the intention of those who composed and ratified the provision. To do otherwise, conservatives assert, turns the judge into a creator of law. With regard to ordinary statutes, so the argument goes, this violates the principle of separation of powers. As for the Constitution, when interpretation looks beyond text and intent, the meaning of our fundamental law comes to depend upon the will of individual judges.

What is more, conservatives frequently declare that this stark distinction between proper interpretation and "legislating from the bench" is precisely the way our Founders viewed the task of judging. Consider the testimony of Douglas Kmiec, law school dean at the Catholic University of America, during last year's Senate Judiciary Committee hearings on whether a judicial nominee's political ideology should play any role in the Senate's confirmation decision.

Kmiec noted that the Anti-Federalists, who opposed ratifying the Constitution, were very concerned about how much discretion judges might exercise. Kmiec asserted that Alexander Hamilton "responded to this criticism by emphasizing that it was not the job of judges to make law, that their role under the Constitution was simply to enforce the Constitution and laws as they were written." Under the principle of separation of powers, "lawmaking was left to the legislature and the people themselves."

To remain true to the Founders' vision, Kmiec declared, the Senate should not endeavor to discern a nominee's ideology. On the contrary, any nominee who suggested that ideology may influence the work of statutory or constitutional adjudication should be rejected. Kmiec concluded that, after determining that a nominee possesses the requisite professional qualifications, Senate inquiry should be limited to discerning "whether the nominees coming before you are willing to abide by the text of statutory law as you have authored it."

But did the Founders actually believe that statutory and constitutional interpretation could be reduced to a nondiscretionary exercise of following text and discerning intent? As is usually the case when one fully engages the thought of those men, things turn out to be a good deal more complex.

A Cloudy Medium

Begin with language itself. If you read only our most prominent journals of conservative thought, you might conclude that the idea that "meaning" is often indeterminate is a recent invention of deconstructionist literary critics. In fact, the Founders embraced the very same notion. Here is James Madison writing in The Federalist:

"[N]o language is so copious as to supply words and phrases for every complex idea, or so correct as not to include many equivocally denoting different ideas. Hence it must happen that however accurately the objects may be discriminated in themselves, and however accurately the discrimination may be considered, the definition may be rendered inaccurate by an inaccuracy of the terms in which it is delivered. ... When the Almighty himself condescends to address mankind in their own language, his meaning, luminous as it must be, is rendered dim and doubtful through the cloudy medium through which it is communicated."

During the constitutional ratification debates, future Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth made the same point more succinctly: "The charge of being ambiguous and indefinite may be brought against every human composition, and necessarily arises from the imperfection of language."

'More or Less Obscure'

Take first the case of statutory interpretation. Within proper bounds, the Founders believed that judicial interpretation was an extension of the legislative process itself. Madison made the point thus: "All new laws, though penned with the greatest technical skill and passed on the fullest and most mature deliberation, are considered more or less obscure and equivocal, until their meaning be liquidated and ascertained by a series of particular discussions and adjudications." And Hamilton wrote: "Laws are a dead letter without courts to expound and define their true meaning and operation."

What is more, the Founders explicitly asserted that sometimes a judge would be justified in ignoring legislative intent. They fully expected that there would be occasions when a legislature, yielding to the passions of the moment or corrupt influence, would pass unjust laws. Then it would be proper for a judge to disregard legislative intent in favor of equity.

Thus, Hamilton said in The Federalist, legislatures might enact constitutional laws that were nevertheless "unjust and partial" in operation. In such cases, "the firmness of the judicial magistracy is of vast importance in mitigating the severity and confining the operation of such laws." Even some Anti-Federalists spoke highly of this practice. One writer praised New York judges for their willingness to construe an unjust statute in a manner that "I will not say evaded the law, but so limited it in its operation as to work the least possible injustice."

Ambiguity Embraced

With regard to the Constitution itself, the Founders were emphatic that its language was necessarily broad and indeterminate. Why, the Anti-Federalists wanted to know, did the Constitution not list precisely every act that Congress could perform? This would be most unwise, Hamilton replied:

"Nothing ... can be more fallacious than to infer the extent of any power proper to be lodged in the national government from an estimate of immediate necessities. There ought to be a CAPACITY to provide for future contingencies as they may happen; and as these are illimitable in their nature, so it is impossible safely to limit that capacity."

But if the powers of Congress cannot be precisely defined, how will we know when Congress has gone too far? Speaking specifically to the question of division of powers between Congress and the states, Madison said that there would be legitimate disagreement about the Constitution's meaning because judgments about the proper spheres of state and federal authority would not be "free from different constructions by different interests, or even from ambiguity in the judgment of the impartial." In other words, constitutional interpretation could not be reduced to an exact science.

In The Federalist itself, Hamilton noted that the Constitution's terms regarding the extent of federal court jurisdiction were subject to at least two interpretations. He then argued in favor of "the most natural and the most defensible construction." He pointedly did not assert that he was positing the single correct construction.

What does this mean for the debates over President Bush's judicial nominees? Contrary to Professor Kmiec, the Senate would be truer to the Founders if it expected more of judicial nominees than a pledge to interpret solely through text and intent. The Senate should understand, as did the Founders, that because of imprecise language, unclear intent, unforeseeable developments, and the capacity of legislatures to be swayed, the task of interpretation will inevitably demand a judge's discretion.

A Judge's Past and Present

Monday, February 18, 2002

Was he the insensitive right-wing segregationist his critics painted him out to be? Or was he the man his supporters described, a real-life version of Harper Lee's Atticus Finch, who courageously fought the Ku Klux Klan and helped blacks to advance as a New South emerged in the late 1960s?

REV_00140528

You can find both Pickerings in his paper trail. As a law student in 1959, he wrote a technically impressive yet emotionally cold- blooded law journal recipe for Mississippi to revive its overturned ban on interracial marriages. His recommendation became law the following year.

Democrats, many of whom are seeking payback for the roadblocks Republicans threw up in front of President Bill Clinton's nominees to the bench, hounded Pickering over his past opposition to abortion, gay rights and laws boosting minority voting power.

Pickering has also been criticized for his handling of the 1994 case of Daniel Swan, who was convicted of burning a cross in front of the home of an interracial couple. Two other defendants pleaded guilty and received minimal sentences. Swan, because he had gone to trial, faced a mandatory minimum five years in prison.

Pickering called Frank Hunger, a friend at the Justice Department who also is a brother-in-law of former Vice President Al Gore, to suggest that prosecutors avoid the mandatory sentence by dropping one of the counts on which Swan was convicted. Prosecutors eventually did drop one count and Pickering sentenced the 20-year-old Swan to 27 months in jail.

Was the call a lapse in judgment? Perhaps, but Pickering's concern was one shared by many civil libertarians, that defendants sometimes pay a "trial tax," that is, receive harsher punishment simply for exercising their constitutional right to trial.

Pickering was also grilled over his association with Mississippi's notorious Sovereignty Commission, a secretive, state-funded body that from 1956 to 1973 devoted itself to resisting desegregation.

During his 1990 confirmation hearing for the district court, Pickering said he never had contact with the committee and denied that it was still in business in the 1970s when he was in the state Senate. When the commission's files were opened to the public in 1998, a document refuted those statements. In the early 1970s, according to the document, Pickering had asked a member of the commission to keep him informed of union activity in a Laurel, Miss., labor dispute.

If that was all there was to Pickering's story, the decision would be easy: He would not belong on the appellate court.

But it is not the end of the story. There is ample evidence that Pickering has, through words and deeds, made considerable efforts to restore his reputation and improve race relations in the south.

His courageous testimony against a Ku Klux Klan leader in 1967 cost Pickering his re-election as a local prosecutor in Mississippi. A decade later, he hired the first black staff member for the Mississippi Republican Party. As a private attorney, he successfully defended a 16-year-old African-American accused of robbery in a racially charged case. He has publicly promoted racial reconciliation in the South.

Perhaps most important, his record on the federal bench has been good. Charles Evers, brother of slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers, and other Mississippi African-Americans are among Pickering's strongest supporters.

Is there a statute of limitations on racism? Hugo Black, once a member of the Ku Klux Klan, joined the Supreme Court in 1937 and became one of its most persuasive advocates for civil liberties. Abraham Lincoln had some curious views about relations between the races, yet went on to free America from slavery.

That does not suggest that Charles Pickering is Lincolnesque. Bush could have made a better choice. But the choice he made should be confirmed.

Campaign to Smear Judicial Nominee Rooted in Ignorance

ONE CAN certainly understand why papers like the Atlanta Journal and Constitution ("Extremist Judge Unfit to Sit on Appeals Court") and the Los Angeles Times ("Say No to This Throwback") are so upset about Charles Pickering, President Bush's nominee for the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. After all, the man once testified as a character witness for the Grand Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan.

What's that, you say? He testified against the Grand Wizard? In Mississippi? In 1967? Putting himself at political and personal risk? Oh. You say he was a local prosecutor who lost his bid for re-election because he stood up to the Klan? Hmmm. You say this man Pickering, who has been a federal judge (confirmed by the Senate) for 11 years, was asked by Mississippi's governor to serve on the executive committee of the Institute of Racial Reconciliation at Ole Miss? What? He was the one who urged the state's governor and the chancellor of the university to create the institute in the first place?

Who's been feeding you this stuff? James Charles Evers? You mean the brother of slain civil-rights hero Medgar Evers? He's defending this "extremist" in the pages of The Wall Street Journal? Hmmm.

PEOPLE FOR the American Way, the Alliance for Justice and other members in good standing of the character assassination coalition have been faxing false accusations about Pickering far and wide. Some of those faxes landed on Evers' desk. Evers, who has known Pickering for decades, was "saddened and appalled to read many of the allegations that have been put forth about Judge Pickering ... made by groups with a Washington, D.C., address and a political agenda" and without real knowledge of "Pickering's long and distinguished record on civil rights."

Evers notes that Pickering did more than face down the Klan. While in private practice, he defended an African-American man accused of robbing a white 16-year-old at knifepoint. After two trials, the man was acquitted.

People for the American Way is making much of a 1990 denial by Pickering that he ever had contact with the racist Mississippi Sovereignty Commission. PAW has uncovered a phone call with a commission staffer dating to 1972. But that phone call dealt with Pickering's concern over a labor dispute in Jones County. According to reporting by National Review's Byron York, the KKK had been making trouble, and Pickering, then a state senator representing Jones County, was keeping tabs on the situation. That one phone call is the entirety of Pickering's "contact" with the Sovereignty Commission.

As a federal judge, Pickering once overturned a damage award in a civil case because he believed that the jury was biased against the plaintiffs, an interracial couple. He ordered that the matter of damages be retried and the award for the couple was thus increased.

WELL, SAY the liberal activists, Pickering joined a law firm one of whose partners was a former segregationist. How many Southern law firms in the 1970s did not contain former segregationists? The Supreme Court of the United States and the U.S. Senate both contain or have contained not just former segregationists but former members of the KKK. The key term is "former" -- "was blind but now I see." Besides, we are talking here of a law partner, not Pickering himself, who never was a segregationist. The very worst the mud-slingers on the left could find about the fellow was a 1959 law review article in which Pickering pointed out the poor wording of an anti-miscegenation statute. The 21-year-old Pickering did not, in the article, make the case against the law.

But in a four decade career in the law, Pickering has shown himself to be an eminently fair and reasonable jurist. He has recommended to some convicted felons that all was not lost; that they still might turn their lives around by participating in Chuck Colson's Prison Fellowship. Oops, another red flag. PAW says this is evidence of Pickering's "disregard for the separation of church and state."

THIS ATTACK on Pickering is so obviously malicious and in such bad faith that one wonders why anyone takes these liberal groups seriously anymore. They have cried wolf so many times about so many honorable men and women that they have brought shame on themselves. They have become the thing they claimed to detest: McCarthyites.

A Case Without Merit; The Nomination of a Broadly Admired Federal Judge in Pittsburgh is Being Challenged Because of Political Pique. Ken Gormley and Frederick W. Thieman Defend Judge D. Brooks Smith Against the Calumny

The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

Sunday, February 17, 2002

A Washington-based public interest coalition has launched an attack on Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith, a Republican sitting in Pittsburgh, who has been nominated by President Bush to fill a vacancy on the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The byzantine process of appointing federal judges usually does not grab public attention. But be assured that the outcome of this case will have a dramatic impact on every citizen in Western Pennsylvania.

Our federal court handles the most serious drug cases, white collar crimes, constitutional and environmental matters, and high-stakes suits involving out-of-state businesses. For years, though, it has been struggling to operate on two cylinders, due to insidious political warfare that has left our region with a growing number of unfilled vacancies. In the latest shot across the bow, the Community Rights Counsel (aligned with Democratic interests), has written a letter to key Senate Judiciary Committee members, seeking to sink Judge Smith's nomination.

Unfortunately, what is couched as a critique of Judge Smith's record is a stiff dose of political payback. It unfairly impugns the reputation of a sterling member of our federal bench -- and perpetuates a longstanding political grudge match that cannot possibly benefit the citizens here.

As Democratic members of the bar in Western Pennsylvania, we strongly urge the Community Rights Counsel to reconsider this dangerous political strategy.

It is no secret what events precipitated this assault on Judge Smith's nomination. For the past six years, during the Clinton administration, Republican Sen. Rick Santorum blocked every Democratic nominee to the federal court, based upon blatant, hardball political tactics that harmed our region. Now Democrats are prepared to give it back to the Republicans in spades.

We sympathize with the frustration of Democratic interest groups. We also agree that it is crucial to challenge any White House nominee who is not suited -- by virtue of temperament or extreme judicial philosophy -- to hold these influential federal appointments. But Judge D. Brooks Smith is not an extremist, by any stretch of that term. He received the highest rating (unanimously) from the American Bar Association and the top rating from the Allegheny County Bar Association. Since his appointment by President Reagan in 1988, Judge Smith has earned the universal respect of judges and lawyers in Western Pennsylvania, regardless of party affiliation.

Stacked up against one negative letter written by the Washington coalition, over a hundred letters have been written to the Judiciary Committee in support of Judge Smith's nomination by notable Western Pennsylvania lawyers, judges, public officials and organizations.

These include letters from six former U.S. attorneys (under Democratic and Republican presidents); numerous members of Congress of both parties; all 10 of Judge Smith's colleagues on the federal district court, seven of whom were appointed by Democratic presidents; the president of the Pennsylvania Bar Association; the deans of Duquesne and Pitt law schools; the Women's Bar Association; a former president of the local ACLU; dozens of members of the criminal defense bar; and judges from the Supreme Court Superior Court of Pennsylvania (both Democrats and Republicans).

Federal judges, unlike elected political officials, cannot respond when attacked in the arena of public opinion. Their positions bind them to silence. Their reputations are the only currency that they bring to the bench in resolving society's most difficult conflicts.

If the Democrats in Washington wish to take aim at objectionable candidates, this is the wrong target. Moreover, the charges leveled against Judge Smith by the Community Rights Counsel are misinformed at best:

* They assert that Judge Smith took "trips paid for by companies and interest groups," a claim that is overblown. The Judicial Conference of the United States has permitted the types of trips cited by the Community Rights Counsel, for the purposes of continuing education, so long as the judge determines there is no actual or potential conflict with pending cases. Most federal judges in the United States -- both Democrats and Republicans -- attend such seminars. Although there has been a recent movement to introduce legislation to limit such trips, it is still the subject of honest debate.

* They state that Judge Smith accepted a plea bargain in U.S. vs. Action Mining that was "too low." This is unsupportable. Judge Smith's fine of $50,000, after this small mining company had already been slapped with $625,000 in civil penalties, was considered within the normal range. Then-U.S. Attorney Harry Litman, whose office prosecuted the case, viewed Judge Smith's sentence as fair, reasonable and a victory for the U.S. government.

* They assert that Judge Smith spoke out against the Violence Against Women's Act, in 1994, which is true. Most of the federal judiciary in the United States, and many state judges, opposed this law. It shifted sensitive abuse cases from the state courts (which were arguably better equipped to handle such matters) to the federal judiciary (which was already overtaxed). Although many of us supported the Violence Against Women's Act, others thought there were better ways to accomplish its important policy goals.

As a lawyer, prosecutor and state judge, Judge Smith handled countless abuse cases involving female victims. It is unfair to oppose a nominee for expressing sincere views as to how best handle this sensitive body of cases.

Not a single judge or lawyer who has dealt with Judge Smith during his 14 years on the federal bench, to our knowledge, has seriously questioned his fairness, impartiality or absolute competence. Writing to Sen. Patrick Leahy, Amy J. Greer, president of the Allegheny County Bar Association, indicated the local bar association's "full support" for Judge Smith's nomination to the appellate bench.

The public interest demands that a first-rate federal appeals judge be appointed to fill a crucial vacancy on our court. Members of our bar have a tradition of respect for judges, of any political affiliation, who earn it. Judge Smith will be a credit to all lawyers, judges and citizens of Western Pennsylvania. That, rather than settling political scores, should be the guiding polestar.

NOTES:
Ken Gormley is a professor at Duquesne University School of Law. Frederick W. Thieman, a partner at Thieman & Kaufman, is a former U.S. attorney for the Western District of Pennsylvania.

The Role of Ideology in Judicial Selection: Test Case

By Stuart Taylor, Jr.
The National Journal
Saturday, February 16, 2002

Federal District Judge Charles Pickering Sr. of Mississippi has the misfortune of being the first Bush federal appeals court nominee openly targeted by liberal groups and Senators determined to block the President from transforming the lower courts-and, if he gets a chance, the Supreme Court-into conservative bastions.

So, poor Pickering finds himself trashed as "a throwback to the old, segregated South," in the words of Marcia Kuntz, of the liberal Alliance for Justice. That makes Kuntz a contender for the 2002 John D. Ashcroft award, given (by me) for the ugliest smear of a nominee in the tradition of then-Sen. Ashcroft's 1999 trashing of Missouri Supreme Court Judge Ronnie White as a "pro-criminal" jurist with "a tremendous bent toward criminal activity." (White's criminal activity consisted of voting to reverse death sentences and convictions in a fraction of his cases.) Pickering, 64, an anti-abortion conservative who would sit on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit-which covers Mississippi, Texas, and Louisiana-seems a decent man and a diligent, if often-reversed and undistinguished, judge. He may not be quite the paragon of courageous leadership in the struggle for racial equality his supporters portray. But he is hardly the racially insensitive "throwback" portrayed by some of his liberal opponents.

But this battle is not primarily about Pickering. And the major combatants are not animated by whether his heart is tainted by racism (there is no recent evidence it is), or whether he has seemed forthcoming about long-past, race-related episodes that have drawn criticism (he has not), or whether he seems a basically ethical person (he does), or whether his judicial opinions are well-crafted (they are not).

Although such issues are debating points, this is a battle about power-the power to shape the liberal-conservative balance on the federal appeals courts. Appellate judges get little media attention, but they exercise vast influence over national policy on virtually all controversial issues. They also have the last word in 99.7 percent of all federal cases. Bush would like to create conservative majorities on most or all of the 13 appeals courts. Liberals are desperate to avert such a shift.

Supreme Court confirmation battles have focused on the nominees' ideology since two decades before the climactic 1987 rejection of Judge Robert Bork. Until recently, the Senate tended to rubber-stamp any lower-court nominee equipped with a pulse, a law degree, and a clean criminal record. Deference to the President's choice was the norm.

But now, Republicans complain that Senate Democrats, their academic auxiliaries, and liberal groups are openly calling for an ideological litmus test to block strongly conservative Bush nominees to the appeals courts. Democrats have a pretty good rejoinder: The Republicans started it by mounting what People for the American Way President Ralph G. Neas calls "an unprecedented partisan and ideological blockade" to derail an unusually high 35 percent (or 24 candidates) of Clinton's appeals court nominees from 1995 to 2001 without even giving them hearings. In some cases, Republican Senators (apparently including Ashcroft) used anonymous "holds" to stall individual nominees-one lasted for a record-breaking four years. Even White House Counsel Alberto R. Gonzales admitted to CNN in August that this Republican stalling had been wrong.

The result of this stall was that Bush inherited an unusually large number of vacancies when he took office. And Senate Democrats are understandably reluctant to reward past Republican obstructionism by helping Bush fill these vacancies with conservatives. If all of Bush's current nominees are confirmed, Neas says, 11 of the 13 appeals courts (up from seven now) will be controlled by Republican-nominated judges.

Such partisan labeling of judges might have sounded strange two or three generations ago. But with the ever-greater politicization of the law over the past 50 or more years, the party registration of the nominating President has become the best rough predictor of how a federal appellate judge is likely to vote in the most-controversial cases. Small wonder that the confirmation process has degenerated into a downward spiral of partisan brawling.

What role should ideology play in the confirmation process for appellate nominees? It depends on where you sit. When Bill Clinton was President, Republicans infuriated Democrats by stalling or killing nominees they deemed to be too liberal. Now that Bush is President, Democrats endorse ideological vetoes (of conservatives) and Republicans are shocked-shocked!- to see the process politicized.

A more neutral principle might be this: In the interest of filling vacancies within a reasonable amount of time, and encouraging first-rate lawyers to accept nominations without fear of an ever-longer and more harrowing confirmation process, Senators should ordinarily give considerable deference to the President's choices. But deference has a limit.

The limit is that Senators can and should use their "advise and consent" power to keep the judiciary as a whole reasonably representative of the American people, rather than allowing the President to suddenly tilt the courts to the left or the right of center. While courts have not traditionally been seen as representative bodies, they have claimed many of the powers once exercised by those bodies. And Bush's hotly disputed victory in the freakishly close 2000 election gave him no mandate to make the third branch of government dramatically more conservative.

This does not mean that the Senate should indiscriminately block the most-conservative nominees. Indeed, the Democrats should stop stalling stellar conservatives such as John Roberts and Miguel Estrada, two leading appellate advocates, who would sit on the District of Columbia Circuit, and Michael McConnell, a widely respected constitutional scholar, who would sit on the 10th Circuit.

Democratic Senators would be justified, however, in temporarily blocking conservative Bush nominees to keep open vacancies that Senate Republicans unjustifiably prevented Clinton from filling, and in insisting that Bush either renominate the Clinton candidate (as he has done in one case) or choose someone else ideologically acceptable to Democrats.

Where would these criteria leave Judge Pickering-whose old friend and chief patron, Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., has said Pickering will be confirmed "or else"? Pickering is not without virtues. Even opponents who assail his civil-rights record acknowledge that he courageously testified against a Ku Klux Klan leader in a 1967 murder case, when that was a dangerous thing to do. He has long been a leader in organizations seeking to improve race relations in his state and has many admirers there, including some Democrats. Supporters, including James Charles Evers, the brother of slain civil-rights leader Medgar Evers, claim that he "has an admirable record on civil-rights issues."

Liberal groups, Democratic Senators, and the Mississippi NAACP vigorously disagree. In a 25-page report, People for the American Way asserts that Pickering's opinions "suggest a hostility to civil and constitutional rights" and faults him for a rigidly conservative ideology; for his high rate of reversal on appeal, including 15 cases in which the 5th Circuit found that he had misread "well-settled principles of law"; for his use of a judicial opinion as a forum to criticize (while construing narrowly) the Supreme Court's one-person-one-vote precedents; for disparaging comments about black job-discrimination plaintiffs whose claims he considered weak; and for his unconvincing explanations of several decades-old, disputed episodes, including his authorship of a law review note advising the Mississippi Legislature on how to fix a technical flaw in its anti- miscegenation law, the better to enforce it against interracial couples. (That was in 1959, when Pickering was a 21-year-old law student.) Critics also suggest that he violated an ethical rule when he phoned a high-level Justice Department official in 1994 to protest a prosecutor's insistence on a five-year mandatory prison term for a man convicted of burning a cross on an interracial couple's lawn.

As for Pickering's judicial opinions, a quick scanning calls to mind Sen. Roman Hruska's legendary 1970 encomium to Supreme Court nominee G. Harrold Carswell: "Mediocre judges and people and lawyers ... are entitled to a little representation, aren't they, and a little chance? We can't have all Brandeises, Cardozos, and Frankfurters, and stuff like that there."

Indeed we can't. None of Pickering's blemishes seems clearly disqualifying, and ordinarily deference to the President's (and the Minority Leader's) choice might argue for an unenthusiastic vote to confirm. But this is not an appropriate case for deference. The reason is that Senate Republicans kept three seats open on the 5th Circuit for Bush to fill by blocking three Clinton nominees from even getting votes. Until the Republicans rectify that obstructionism, maybe Pickering should wait.

Terry Eastland: Bush Not Fighting for Judicial Nominee

By Terry Eastland
The Dallas Morning News
Monday, February 18, 2002

In May, even as Vermont Sen. James Jeffords prepared to leave the Republican Party, President Bush decided to nominate federal District Judge Charles Pickering to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which encompasses Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi. Mr. Pickering has endured not one but two Senate Judiciary Committee hearings. Today, his nomination is in doubt. And the main reason it is can be traced to Mr. Jeffords' departure from the GOP.

Before he left, the two parties had the same number of senators: 50. But the GOP controlled the Senate on the strength of Vice President Dick Cheney's authority to cast tie-breaking votes. Mr. Jeffords' departure – he became an independent – reduced the GOP number to 49. The Democrats thus gained control, an event of predictable consequence for judicial appointments.

Most judicial nominees are confirmed regardless of who controls the White House or the Senate. But when, as now, there is divided government – with one party in control of the White House and the other the Senate – more nominations are likely to be contested and defeated than when the same party controls both.

Had Mr. Jeffords remained a Republican, Mr. Pickering would have been confirmed long ago. He was unanimously confirmed for the district court in 1990, and the American Bar Association has rated him "well qualified." Even now, if he could be voted out of committee, he would stand a good chance of winning confirmation, since two Democrats – Fritz Hollings and Zell Miller – have voiced their support.

Mr. Pickering's problem, however, is how to get from here to there – from the committee, where the Democrats hold a 10-to-9 edge, to the Senate floor. The Judiciary Committee is territory patrolled by Patrick Leahy (the chairman), Edward Kennedy, Joseph Biden, Herbert Kohl, Dianne Feinstein, Russell Feingold, Charles Schumer, Richard Durbin, Maria Cantwell and John Edwards, most of whom are exquisitely attuned to the imprecations of left-wing interest groups, such as People for the American Way and Alliance for Justice. Those groups have pushed hard, and so far successfully, against the nomination.

Mr. Pickering himself has the misfortune of having virtually invisible White House support. He was chosen largely out of deference to a senator, his longtime friend Trent Lott, who began pitching for the judge's elevation to the 5th Circuit when he was Senate majority leader.

Had Mr. Lott not lobbied for Mr. Pickering's nomination – announced on May 25, one day after Mr. Jeffords fled the GOP – Mr. Bush probably would have selected someone else. Mr. Pickering, after all, is a few months away from 65, the age a judge may take senior status. Nor, his ABA rating aside, is he a legal superstar, someone likely to shape the law of the 5th Circuit. "We did this solely to please the then majority leader," one White House official told me. "It's his guy, and it's up to him to get him confirmed." That task would be far easier were the "then majority leader" still the majority leader.

Rarely making headlines, the Pickering nomination has become a series of stories within a story. Some Democrats are motivated against the nomination because they don't like the way Mr. Lott ran the Senate. Others are inclined against the nomination as payback to Republicans for their sometimes slow processing of Clinton judicial nominees, including three for the 5th Circuit who failed even to get hearings.

Also, there are Clinton Justice Department lawyers who butted heads with Mr. Pickering over their sentencing recommendations in a cross-burning case and are laboring against him behind the scenes. And, of course, there are the liberal interest groups, back after eight years on the sidelines, picking at Mr. Pickering as a warm-up for the real battle – over a Bush nominee to the Supreme Court.

Substantively, the case against the nominee is unimpressive. He grew up in segregated Mississippi, but the left's effort to portray him as "insensitive" to civil rights is misguided and unfair: In 1967, as an elected county prosecutor, Mr. Pickering testified against the imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan, an act of moral courage that cost him his office. Mr. Pickering does hold conservative political views. But, contrary to concerns voiced by the law firm of Leahy, Kennedy, Biden, et al., his record on the bench isn't that of a judge who fails to distinguish between his own personal and political views and what the law says.

Of course, none of that may matter, since the Democrats have the power to defeat his nomination. This is the Jeffords effect, and the jury is out on whether Mr. Lott can overcome it. He might, but probably not, unless Mr. Bush, stingy with expenditures of his considerable political capital, finally decides to join the battle.

NAACP Denounces Pickering Confirmation During Press Conference at Annual Meeting

NAACP
Saturday, February 16, 2002

Kweisi Mfume, President & CEO, of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) said today that the Association stands firm in its absolute opposition to the confirmation of Judge Charles Pickering to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit at a press conference held here during the Annual Meeting.

Mfume said: "We will continue to demand fairness on the part of those empowered to interpret the laws of our nation. We are opposed to the Pickering confirmation because we decry a judicial nomination process where civil rights and civil liberties, and equal protection under the law are forced to take a back seat to partisan politics and political affiliations."

Mfume added: "Accordingly and rightfully so, we stand firm as an organization in our absolute opposition to the Senate confirmation of Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, and we stand united against all others whose judicial records give rise to suspicion about their ability to render impartial judgment and fair interpretation of federal law."

Julian Bond, Chairman, NAACP Board of Directors said: "The NAACP was created to fight for freedom and justice in a nation dedicated to those goals. We must continue to fight now with renewed determination. Each of has a role to play as guardians of our nation's liberty, and that is the role history has assigned to us."

Mfume called on the Congress to join the Association in the fight to defeat the Pickering confirmation, and challenged the members to help fight against hate crimes and racial profiling. He also urged them not to ignore the AIDS epidemic both in Africa and at home.

"These are wrongs that must be confronted," Mfume said. "We are compelled to act responsibly before the world to better humanity, and ultimately, to better ourselves."

In light of the September 11th tragedies, Mfume said: "By moving our Annual Meeting back to New York, the NAACP honors the world's leading city and its residents along with the scores of Americans who are resolved to defend the ideals of a free and open society. This is the city of our birth, and we stand in solidarity with New Yorkers."

The NAACP was founded in New York City on the 100th anniversary of President Abraham Lincoln's birthday, which was February 12, 1909. The Association last held its annual meeting in New York in 1998. The meetings were held in Washington, D.C. between 1999-2001.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) is the nation's oldest and largest civil rights organization. Its half-million adult and youth members throughout the United States and the world are the premier advocates for civil rights in their communities and monitor equal opportunity in the public and private sectors.

Political Activity Overview
(February 20, 2002)

General Principle

- In general, Executive Office of the President political appointees (EOP)[1] and Senate-confirmed officials (PAS) may engage in a wide variety of political activity (other than expressly soliciting contributions) including while on duty and in the office. The government must be reimbursed for additional costs associated with that activity -- that is, the costs beyond what the government otherwise would have incurred.
    - Certain investigative and national security agencies have more restrictive rules and policies; each such agency is responsible for appropriate guidance.

The Major Rules for EOP and PAS Officials

- Fundraisers
    - may appear and speak at fundraisers, but no explicit fundraising

- Use of Title
    - no use of actual title in invitations to political events
      (attempt to review invitations in advance)
    - may use "The Honorable" if applicable; former political titles appropriate
    - the official title may be used in a biography distributed at the event itself, in the introduction of the speaker, and in other similar ways at event

- Travel Costs
    - appropriate political entity pays costs associated with political travel
    - mixed trips: reimbursement determined by "total activity time"
    - security-related costs are official costs
    - corporate aircraft policy (do not use absent extraordinary circumstances)
    - Events in government buildings
        - no fundraising events on government property
        - appearance issues with donors qua donors

- Equipment
    - generally permissible for EOP and PAS officials to use equipment such as computers, printers, telephones, and FAXes for reasonable political activity because there are no additional costs incurred by government except incidental costs of paper
        - appearance issues from excessive use

[1] Such officials ordinarily work beyond normal work hours and outside the normal duty post as contemplated by the regulations.

Official versus Political

- Few bright-line rules; often a case-by-case judgment (1982 OLC opinion)
- The definitional issue is relevant primarily for use of title and travel purposes.
- Political activity is activity primarily related to an election, a campaign, a political party event, or a political party's operations.
    - Speaking at or attending an event held by a political party or political organization is ordinarily considered "political" unless the speaker is speaking only on official policy matters; if the event is a fundraiser or a campaign event, however, it ordinarily should be considered political regardless of content.
    - An otherwise official event is official notwithstanding that it may somehow incidentally assist the popularity of a political party or candidate (for example, if the event is in a district of a political candidate or if a political candidate such as a House member attends the event).
        - Speakers at an official event should avoid expressly advocating the election of a candidate.
    - Being knowledgeable about the political environment and the status of particular races can be relevant to one's official duties, for it is all but impossible to understand Congress or state or local government without being knowledgeable about the overall political/electoral environment in Congress and the states. Therefore, a briefing on the political environment and the status of particular races can be considered official activity depending on the overall context of the briefing.
    - Being knowledgeable about public opinion and public approval similarly can be relevant to one's official duties, and briefings on such issues ordinarily should be considered official activity depending on the overall context of the briefing.
- Informing the public about public policy issues, about the official and ceremonial activities of the President and the Administration, about activities in Congress, and about the Administration's legislative strategy is official activity (and indeed can be an official responsibility).

Principle for non-EOP, non-PAS employees

- Other Executive Branch officers and employees (again, except those in certain investigative and national security agencies) may engage in a wide variety of political activity, but they may do so only while off duty and not on government property.

- The law also recognizes, however, that certain Executive Branch employees who are not themselves White House or PAS officials may be required in the performance of their official duties to accompany or assist White House or PAS officials engaging in political activity (for example, ordinary duties related to security, scheduling, or typing). Such assistance is permissible, and the government need not be reimbursed for the compensation and expenses associated with such assistance.

Specific Rules

- Except for those in certain investigative and national security agencies, the permissible range of political activities includes:

    - participation in political organizations, which includes:

        - being a member of a political party;
        - serving as an officer of a political party;
        - attending and participating in nominating caucuses;
        - organizing a political party;
        - participating in a political convention or rally; and
        - serving as a delegate to a political convention.

    - participation in political campaigns, which includes:

        - displaying political pictures, signs, stickers, or buttons (although employees other than White House and PAS appointees cannot do so while on duty or in their offices);
        - circulating a nominating petition;
        - canvassing for votes;
        - endorsing or opposing a candidate in an advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material (so long as one's official title is not used, except for that of the President and Vice President);
        - addressing a convention, caucus, rally, or similar gathering of a political party or political group; and
        - actively managing the political campaign of a partisan political candidate or candidate for political party office.

    - participation in elections, including:

        - voting;
        - acting as officer or watcher at a polling place;
        - serving as election judge or clerk; and
        - driving voters to polling places.

    - participation in fundraising:

Other than the President or Vice President, Executive Branch officers and employees may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions. However, Executive Branch officers and employees (other than those in certain investigative and national security agencies) may:

- make political contributions;
- attend political fundraisers;
- manage or organize political fundraisers behind the scenes;
- speak at political fundraisers, so long as one's official title is not used (the term of address "The Honorable" may be used);
- be listed as a guest speaker on the invitation for a fundraiser, so long as the invitation does not use one's official title (again, the term of address "the Honorable" may be used);
- solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services from any individual, without using one's official title (however, a superior may not ask his or her subordinate employee to provide such services, nor may he or she ask a company or entity with official matters pending before the agency to provide such services).

- As the above summary reveals, certain kinds of political activities are forbidden:
  - no soliciting, accepting, or receiving political contributions, except by President and Vice President (but officials may organize, manage, appear at, and speak at fundraisers)
  - no fundraising on government property
  - official's name cannot appear on an invitation as a "sponsor" of a fundraiser, but can be identified as a guest speaker
  - official's title cannot be used in connection with political events, but can use "The Honorable"
  - general misuse of official authority
    - cannot ask regulated entities or those under investigation to engage in political activities; however, one can speak to a diverse group that includes individuals within those categories
    - cannot ask subordinates to engage in political activity; however, superiors and subordinates may interact on political matters when both are involved in same political activity or organization
  - other than President and Vice President, cannot run as a candidate in a partisan election except under specified circumstances

February 26, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: SUBPOENAS AND DOCUMENT REQUESTS

If the Executive Office of the President (EOP), or any component thereof, receives a document subpoena or document request from a congressional committee, court, grand jury, or other authorized investigating authority, the Counsel's Office will provide immediate notice and instructions to EOP officers and employees. Such instructions will explain the appropriate steps for you to follow in collecting and preserving relevant documents and submitting them to the Counsel's Office for production by the Counsel's Office to the investigating authorities.

Once an EOP officer or employee learns (whether by notice from the Counsel's Office or otherwise) of such a subpoena or document request -- or learns that such a subpoena or document request is approved or even contemplated -- the individual should take extraordinary care to preserve any and all documents in his or her possession, custody, or control that conceivably could be encompassed by such a subpoena or document request. The consequences of knowingly failing to do so can be severe, including criminal prosecution.

It is critical to understand that your obligations in response to a subpoena or document request often will be more onerous than the more limited day-to-day record preservation requirements of the Presidential Records Act or Federal Records Act. In particular, a subpoena or document request often will require production of all documents -- including notes, drafts, and potentially even your personal documents, personal e-mails, and personal diaries -- that refer or relate to a particular subject matter and that you possess or control at the time of the subpoena or document request (or that you thereafter create or receive).

Finally, it is possible that an EOP officer or employee may personally receive a subpoena or request from a congressional investigating committee, court, or grand jury -- that is, a subpoena or document request directed to him or her as an individual. In such a case, the employee must comply with that subpoena or request as required by law. To the extent the subpoena or document request calls for production of documents or testimony related to official work, however, the White House employee or his or her personal attorney should inform the Counsel's office immediately of the subpoena or document request so that appropriate procedures can be employed, and appropriate decisions made, about any governmental privileges that may apply. In that situation, the Counsel's Office will take appropriate steps, in consultation with the relevant investigating authorities, to ensure that any factual information communicated to the Counsel's Office in connection with the privilege determination is properly handled and not inappropriately shared with other EOP officers or employees (or their counsel).

It would cover GAO doc requests, but it doesn't cover GAO phone calls, requests for information other than documents, and requests for interviews (all of which have been a problem recently).

This does not look final, but must be close given the date at top (2-26-01). Looking it (at least this draft) over, why doesn't it already cover
GAO document requests?

February 26, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: SUBPOENAS AND DOCUMENT REQUESTS

If the Executive Office of the President (EOP), or any component thereof, receives a document subpoena or document request from a congressional committee, court, grand jury, or other authorized investigating authority, the Counsel's Office will provide immediate notice and instructions to EOP officers and employees. Such instructions will explain the appropriate steps for you to follow in collecting and preserving relevant documents and submitting them to the Counsel's Office for production by the Counsel's Office to the investigating authorities.

Once an EOP officer or employee learns (whether by notice from the Counsel's Office or otherwise) of such a subpoena or document request -- or learns that such a subpoena or document request is approved or even contemplated -- the individual should take extraordinary care to preserve any and all documents in his or her possession, custody, or control that conceivably could be encompassed by such a subpoena or document request. The consequences of knowingly failing to do so can be severe, including criminal prosecution.

It is critical to understand that your obligations in response to a subpoena or document request often will be more onerous than the more limited day-to-day record preservation requirements of the Presidential Records Act or Federal Records Act. In particular, a subpoena or document request often will require production of all documents -- including notes, drafts, and potentially even your personal documents, personal e-mails, and personal diaries -- that refer or relate to a particular subject matter and that you possess or control at the time of the subpoena or document request (or that you thereafter create or receive).

Finally, it is possible that an EOP officer or employee may personally receive a subpoena or request from a congressional investigating committee, court, or grand jury -- that is, a subpoena or document request directed to him or her as an individual. In such a case, the employee must comply with that subpoena or request as required by law. To the extent the subpoena or document request calls for production of documents or testimony related to official work, however, the White House employee or his or her personal attorney should inform the Counsel's office immediately of the subpoena or document request so that appropriate procedures can be employed, and appropriate decisions made, about any governmental privileges that may apply. In that situation, the Counsel's Office will take appropriate steps, in consultation with the relevant investigating authorities, to ensure that any factual information communicated to the Counsel's Office in connection with the privilege determination is properly handled and not inappropriately shared with other EOP officers or employees (or their counsel).

Coddy,

Attached is the printed program copy (in text format) for the North Carolina event in Charlotte on February 27 for White House review and approval.

It is the same format and nearly identical copy that was used for the Sessions-Birmingham event last summer.

We are confirming and completing the listing of contributors in conjunction with your review as we discussed.

Many thanks, Coddy. Please don't hesitate to call with any questions.

North Carolina's Salute to George W. Bush

Wednesday, February 27, 2002
Charlotte, North Carolina

REV_00140574

We are deeply honored to welcome you to North Carolina's Salute to George W. Bush. It appears as though this special event, on behalf of the Dole 2002 Committee, Hayes for Congress and the North Carolina Victory 2002 Committee, will be one of the most successful ever in the state of North Carolina.

This would not be possible without the loyal support and generous enthusiasm of our statewide Finance Committee members and everyone who took part in our Salute Leadership.

From Asheville to Wilmington and Concord to Salisbury, our capital city of Raleigh and our host city of Charlotte, thank you everyone for being here today to honor our president, George W. Bush.

Please accept our heartfelt thanks and gratitude for your continuing support and commitment to Elizabeth Dole, Robin Hayes and our get out the vote efforts for this fall.

Now on to victory in 2002!

It usually takes a week to 10 days, but DOJ is contacting the court reporter to get an expedited transcript. It may still take a few days. (In case you were wondering, there have been lots of stories written about the SCt's stone age media/communications structure, of which this is a prime example.)

I did send the letter to 305-2643, and our machine indicates that it went through at 6:19 p.m. Let me know if you need me to send another copy. (For most letters to the Attorney General, we are faxing one to the AG's office, and then faxing a copy to you at 305-2643. Please let me know if we should direct them to other or additional places.)

As far as the meeting goes, I anticipate that Monday or Tuesday works. What times are best for you all?

I have not yet seen the letter. (In fact, I'm not sure what fax # your folks have been using, but this has been an issue.) Could you please have them sent to 202/305-2643?

As to a meeting to discuss the documents, what times on Monday or Tuesday would work for you? We'd like to have the meeting down here. I'd expect AAG Chertoff and a few others from DOJ will be there.

Tim et al.:

Justice Thomas's opinion for the six-Justice majority in Tuesday's (2/19/2002) decision in Barnhart v. Sigmon Coal Company may warm your heart on the subject of statutory interpretation and legislative history. For example (internal citations all omitted):

"As in all statutory construction cases, we begin with the language of the statute. The first step 'is to determine whether the language at issue has a plain and unambiguous meaning with regard to the particular dispute in the case.' The inquiry ceases 'if the statutory language is unambiguous and "the statutory scheme is coherent and consistent."' With respect to the question presented in this case, this statute is unambiguous. The statutory text instructs that the Coal Act does not permit the Commissioner to assign beneficiaries to the successor in interest of a signatory operator." . . .

"We see no reason to give greater weight to the views of two Senators than to the collective votes of both Houses, which are memorialized in the unambiguous statutory text." . . .

FN 15 "Moreover, were we to adopt this form of statutory interpretation, we would be placing an obligation on Members of Congress not only to monitor their colleague's floor statements but to read every word of the Congressional Record including written explanations inserted in to the record. This we will not do. The only 'evidence' that we need rely on is the clear statutory text." . . .

"Dissatisfied with the text of the statute, the Commissioner attempts to search for an apply an overarching legislative purpose to each section of the statute. Dissatisfaction, however, is often the cost of legislative compromise. And negotations surrounding enactment of this bill tell a typical story of legislative battle among interest groups, Congress, and the President. Indeed, this legislation failed to ease tensions among many of the interested parties. The deals brokered during a Committee markup, on the floor of the two Houses, during a joint House and Senate Conference, or in negotiations with the President are not for us to judge or second-guess.""

Campaign To Block Nomination Gets Ugly

By Brit Hume
Fox News
Tuesday, February 19, 2002

And now the most absorbing two minutes in television, the latest from the wartime grapevine.

The campaign on the left to block the nomination of federal Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi to the U.S. Court of Appeals may have succeeded; not a single Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee seems willing to let the Pickering appointment reach the Senate floor. But the tactics of Pickering's opponents proved too much for even the reliably liberal Washington Post, which over the weekend called it "an ugly affair" and "the latest example of the degradation of confirmation process." The Post said Pickering's critics have focused not on his qualifications, but have "tried to portray him as a barely reconstructed segregationist."

And the New York Times reports that the opposition to Pickering from national liberal and civil rights groups is not shared bythe largely black residents of his hometown of Laurel, Miss. There, said the Times, "many say they admire his efforts at racial conciliation, which they describe as highly unusual for a white Republican in the state." The Times adds, "the city's black establishment overwhelmingly supports his nomination."

Nation; Inside Politics

EXCERPT

Unmanly behavior

Sen. John Edwards, a former trial lawyer, "has landed in hot water with the nation's leading anti-tobacco lawyer" because of the North Carolina Democrat's harsh questioning of federal appeals court nominee Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr., Roll Call reports.

Mr. Edwards, in a recent confirmation hearing for Judge Pickering, refused to let the judge respond fully to his questions, instead demanding "yes" and "no" answers about the sentencing of a man involved in a cross-burning on the lawn of an interracial couple. Although Mr. Edwards, in a speech last week before California Democrats, bragged about his treatment of Mr. Pickering, others have questioned Mr. Edwards' behavior and what The Washington Post on Sunday described as that and other "ugly" and misleading attempts to defame the judge.

Trial lawyer Dickie Scruggs "has vowed to rally other trial lawyers to his anti-Edwards campaign," reporter Paul Kane writes.

Mr. Edwards' disrespectful behavior toward the judge "wasn't the manly thing to do," Mr. Scruggs said.

Grotesque reminders

Northern Virginia's Dulles chapter of the National Organization for Women says it "was recently contacted by groups tied to the Democratic Party and asked to join the current nasty efforts" to derail the nomination of federal Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr.'s nomination to a U.S. appeals court.

"We refused," the group said in a prepared statement. "Instead, we are pleased to join the ranks of all those who support him."

The group added: "The vicious anti-Pickering smears have even less to do with women's rights, coming as they are from groups who unwaveringly supported sexual harassment and perjury in high office. They are but grotesque reminders of the discredited politics of personal destruction."

NEW CONFLICT ALLEGATION SURFACES AGAINST APPEALS COURT NOMINEE

By Ann McFeatters
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

REV_00140617

Thursday, February 21, 2002

A new allegation surfaced yesterday that U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith did not disqualify himself soon enough in yet another high-profile case in which he had a potential conflict of interest.

On Tuesday, the Senate Judiciary Committee plans to begin hearings to determine whether it should recommend Smith, 50, of Altoona, Pa., to the full Senate for confirmation to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia.

Smith, appointed to the District Court for Western Pennsylvania in 1988 by President Ronald Reagan, has been nominated to the Circuit Court by President Bush.

Senate investigators already are looking into whether Smith failed to disclose a substantial financial interest in a bank that was involved in the Securities and Exchange Commission's successful civil fraud lawsuit against John Gardner Black. Black is an investor who defrauded 75 Pennsylvania school districts of $69.5 million in the mid-1990s and is serving prison time. Smith recused himself after a month of sitting in judgment on the Black case, revealing that his wife was employed by Mid-State Bank, which was accused of complicity in Black's fraud and ultimately repaid districts $51 million to satisfy a court settlement.

A U.S. Justice Department official who shepherds administration judicial nominations looked into the conflict allegation and found none, saying Smith's recusal on Oct. 31, 1997, demonstrated an "excess of caution." But several legal ethicists say Smith's action raises questions that the Senate panel should consider, including whether rulings he made benefitted Mid-State, in which Smith also maintained a significant portion of his assets.

Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa., is "confident in his support of the judge's nomination. He understands this is part of the process of confirming such nominations," a spokeswoman said. Smith, she said, "is a sitting judge, and that attests to the caliber of nominee that he is. He has a lot of support in the legal community."

Yesterday, new documents provided by Doug Kendall, a lawyer and executive director of a land-use activism group, Community Resources Counsel, which has questioned Smith's nomination on ideological grounds, indicated that Smith again sat on the bench when federal authorities filed a criminal suit against Black in 1999. He said Smith continued to sit for five months on that second case, although he still had assets in the bank that Black had used, and that Smith's wife continued to work as an officer for the bank.

After Black's lawyers filed a motion that Smith recuse himself, the judge agreed to withdraw on Nov. 1, 1999, but still did not disclose his financial interest in Mid-State Bank. Smith wrote in a memo that some of Black's reasons for requesting his recusal were "nonsense" and "would not cause a reasonable person to question this judge's impartiality." He cited facts noted by Black that his family and the judge were friends, that they had lived in the same town, that Smith attended school in a district Black was accused of defrauding and that Smith had questioned

Black's credibility in the civil case.

But Smith said that, despite having recused himself from Black's civil case because of the likelihood that the bank which employed his wife would "figure prominently" in it, he didn't believe when he met the criminal case lawyers in July 1999 that he should withdraw again.

When Black's lawyers eventually did ask for his recusal, Smith said, their probable evidence convinced him that Mid-State would "figure substantially" in the case, and that bank officials might be critical witnesses, so "recusal is the only appropriate course."

Federal law and the American Bar Association Code of Ethics require a judge to disclose all possible conflicts of interest to lawyers involved in a case, even if he or she thinks there is no reason for disqualification.

Supporters of Smith's nomination said they were satisfied that he had indicated at the start of the criminal case that there was no reason to anticipate a conflict and that he withdrew when he saw one.

Although 27 environmental, civil rights and women's groups say they are troubled by what they view as the conservative nature of Smith's prior court opinions, they haven't called upon the Senate to reject his nomination.

Nor is Kendall yet asking for that, but he did say: "It's hard to fathom how Judge Smith could sit on the second case for even a day. It clearly violates federal recusal law and raises serious questions about Judge Smith's fitness for a seat on the appellate bench."

Group asks Senate Judiciary Committee to investigate Bush nominee

The Associated Press State & Local Wire
Thursday, February 21, 2002

An activist organization asked the Senate Judiciary Committee Wednesday for an investigation into improper behavior by U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith, a nominee for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 3rd Circuit.

The Community Rights Counsel said in a letter hand delivered to the offices of Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., and Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, that Smith made significant court rulings regarding a company in which he had a "very substantial financial interest."

Leahy is the chairman on the committee and Hatch is the ranking member. The rulings in question have been investigated by the Department of Justice, which cleared Smith of any wrongdoing.

At issue is the trial of John Gardner Black, who pleaded guilty in 2000 to defrauding dozens of Pennsylvania schools and municipalities.

REV_00140619

Court records show Black sent bogus statements to the schools to cover losses as high-risk investments went sour and tanked. The Securities and Exchange Commission discovered $69.5 million in losses after a surprise inspection.

Smith presided over the trial for a month and issued several rulings before recusing himself.

Smith's wife, Karen Smith, was the vice president of the lending department at Mid-State Bank at the time, which was accused of complicity in the scheme. Mid-State Bank, through its parent company Keystone Financial Services Inc., paid $51 million to the schools to satisfy a court settlement.

Smith recused himself on Oct. 31, 1997, but critics say he should have disclosed his wife's position with the bank immediately.

Smith held $100,000 to $250,000 in Mid-State stock and his wife had the same amount invested in a 401(k) fund with the bank. He did not disclose the investments when he recused himself, but they were listed on a financial disclosure statement required of all federal judges.

Those records were brought to light by Doug Kendall, a lawyer with Community Rights Counsel.

"This is information we stumbled into when we were looking at judges who were accepting privately funded trips by companies," Kendall said.

Smith presided over another trial for five months involving Mid-State Bank two years later before recusing himself at the request of a defense attorney, Kendall said.

"Judge Smith again failed to disclose his large financial stake in the bank," a letter to the committee states.

David Carle, a spokesman for the Senate Judiciary Committee, would not comment on committee investigations. But he did say investigators review all submitted information.

"The committee doesn't turn away new information, but the majority and minority staff review them to determine whether any further investigation is warranted."

Federal law requires judges to recuse themselves if their impartiality might "reasonably be questioned."

"There is no doubt Judge Smith should have disqualified himself and done it much sooner," said Steven Lubet, a professor of legal ethics at Northwestern University School of Law. "This comes squarely within the statute. It is not ambiguous."

REV_00140620

Other legal ethicists say Smith's behavior was improper, but it should not be the sole determining factor in his appointment to the bench.

"The fact the judge has made a mistake of this kind is a fact the Senate should consider," said Stephen Gillers, a professor of legal ethics at New York University School of Law. "But there are other factors that go on the scale."

Smith is barred by the White House from speaking in his own defense during the nomination process. But supporters point out Smith has received the highest ratings from both the American Bar Association and the Allegheny County Bar Association.

Black Case Could Sideswipe Nominee

By Ann McFeatters
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Wednesday, February 20, 2002

Senate investigators are expected today to begin looking into whether Western Pennsylvania U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith, nominated by President Bush for the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, improperly failed to recuse himself when he issued rulings in the John Gardner Black case, one of the largest cases of investment fraud in Pennsylvania history.

The Senate Judiciary Committee is about to consider whether to recommend the confirmation of Smith, 50, a Republican from Altoona with offices in Pittsburgh and Johnstown, and may hold its first hearing on Smith's nomination next week.

The Department of Justice, to whom Smith referred inquiries, said it has looked into Smith's handling of the matter and found no fault with his actions. But a Justice official and a Senate aide involved in the confirmation process said the Senate was certain to conduct its own investigation.

On Sept. 26, 1997 the Securities and Exchange Commission charged investment adviser Black with defrauding dozens of Pennsylvania school districts and a handful of municipalities by investing in risky securities. Black put the public assets in high-risk, high-yield instruments, expecting their value would rocket, but the investments went sour. As the school accounts dwindled, Black sent false statements to the districts to cover up the losses and repaid early investors with money collected from later investors.

Most of Black's investors were rural Pennsylvania school districts that trusted him with bond proceeds earmarked for construction projects.

Black is now serving a 41-month term in a federal prison in Morgantown, W.Va.

Black's pyramid scheme came to light after SEC auditors found a $71 million hole -- later revised to $69.5 million -- in Black's books during a surprise audit. The SEC moved quickly after the audit, seeking an emergency order from Smith as part of a civil lawsuit to shut down the businesses and freeze the remaining assets.

For one month in 1997, Smith presided over the case and issued a number of rulings before recusing himself on Oct. 31, 1997, citing a conflict of interest because his wife Karen was a vice president in the lending department of Mid-State Bank. Mid-State, through its parent company Keystone Financial Services Inc., was eventually accused of complicity in the Black scheme and repaid school districts $51 million to satisfy a court settlement.

At the time, Smith also held $100,000 to $250,000 in Mid-State stock, and his wife had a 401(k) fund invested with Mid-State also valued at between $100,000 and $250,000. Smith did not note these investments in his recusal, but they were listed on the regular financial disclosure statement required of federal judges.

One question investigators will have to sort out is whether Smith's rulings before he recused himself could have benefitted Mid-State by reducing its future liability. The Department of Justice said Smith never ruled on Mid-State's liability and therefore had no conflict of interest, and that Smith, in recusing himself because of his wife's job in a different area of the bank, should be "commended for an excess of caution."

But Smith was told by Dick Thornburgh, the former Pennsylvania governor and U.S. attorney general who oversaw the management of the case as trustee, that Mid-State's role appeared to be more than that of a depository, and Smith thereafter issued a hotly contested ruling that could have reduced the amount of money Mid-State ultimately had to pay.

Thornburgh had pointed out that Mid-State reported to Black's school-district clients that the market value of their accounts was $157,622,923 while at the same time telling Black the accounts were worth only $86,307,513 -- suggesting Mid-State collusion in Black's scheme.

At one point, Smith denied a motion by the school districts to unfreeze some of their contested assets because they needed money for operations. He denied similar relief to districts whose assets were not held at Mid-State. Smith later allowed the districts access to half their frozen assets as a temporary measure if they agreed not to ask for more until all contested claims could be sorted out.

At the time, one school district called the ruling "economic blackmail." Two weeks before Smith's recusal, some school districts were talking publicly about suing Mid-State.

Smith also decided at one point to pool the assets of districts whose money Black had placed at Mid-State with those whose assets were in investments that had not lost so much money. This would have effectively reduced Mid-State's liability and forced districts with assets elsewhere to subsidize the losses of districts whose assets were held at Mid-State.

REV_00140622

This ruling did not stand. The judge who succeeded Smith on the case, Donetta Ambrose, ruled that Smith had improperly combined the Mid-State and non Mid-State assets. The Third Circuit Court of Appeals agreed.

The White House yesterday referred questions to Mark Rush of Kirkpatrick & Lockhart in Pittsburgh, who was Thornburgh's lawyer as trustee in the case. Rush said Smith acted properly because during Smith's involvement it appeared Mid-State was only a depository for Black and not a potential partner in his scheme.

Toward the end of October, 1997, Rush said, he and Thornburgh told Smith they believed Mid-State was more deeply involved and on Oct. 24 pulled all the school district money out of Mid-State accounts. At that point Smith said he would have to recuse himself because of his wife's job, Rush said.

Rush said he did not know Smith also held stock in Mid-State but maintains that Smith did not act imprudently. "Does [his financial stake in Mid-State] concern me? Not at all. If I would have seen a reason for Judge Smith to recuse himself prior to Oct. 31, I, as an officer of the court, would have filed a motion myself. It was a big case."

Federal recusal law requires judges to disqualify themselves from sitting on a case if their impartiality might "reasonably be questioned." U.S. Code 28, section 455, says judges must know their assets and recuse themselves immediately if they have any financial conflict of interest.

The Supreme Court has upheld the law, which was tightened after Clement Haynsworth, a Nixon nominee for the U.S. Supreme Court, was rejected by the Senate in 1969 after he was found to have adjudicated cases in which he had a small financial interest.

Steven Lubet, a professor of legal ethics at Northwestern University School of Law, said, "There is no doubt Judge Smith should have disqualified himself and done it much sooner. This comes squarely within the statute. It is not ambiguous."

Stephen Gillers, professor of legal ethics at New York University School of Law, said Smith has two problems. "He should have revealed his financial interest in Mid-State and his wife's employment relationship to Mid-State to the parties right away as soon as he learned that Mid-State had an interest in Black's litigations.... The second problem for Judge Smith is that it appears to me Mid-State certainly had an interest in the rulings Judge Smith might make."

While these ethicists said Smith's conduct was an important issue, they said it should not alone decide whether he's confirmed.

"Because I find Judge Smith's conduct imprudent," Giller said, "I don't mean to say he should be confirmed or not confirmed. The fact the judge has made a mistake of this kind is a fact the Senate should consider. But there are other factors that go on to the scale. Has he been a really good judge otherwise? Has he generally shown ethical awareness of his responsibilities?"

Doug Kendall, a lawyer with the environmental activist group Community Rights Counsel, unearthed Smith's financial disclosure records. The group had already raised questions about what it considers Smith's conservative, pro-business rulings.

Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa., said Smith's record has not yet been vetted by his office and that he needs more information to decide how seriously to consider Smith's possible conflict of interest. Earlier this month, when 27 liberal environmental, civil rights and women's groups expressed concerns about Smith's conservatism on the bench, Santorum dismissed the criticism and said it was coming from Democrats who resented the delays in confirming nominees during the Clinton administration.

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., a leading sponsor of Smith's nomination, has said nothing to indicate his support has waned, but he also has championed strict laws on judicial recusal.

In 1994, Specter raised questions about Supreme Court nominee Stephen Breyer's financial interest in a venture involving asbestos and toxic pollutants while he was sitting on pollution cases. Breyer was confirmed, though not unanimously, and Specter called for re-examining the recusal law, saying judges should disqualify themselves if their investments are even indirectly involved in a case.

While Smith is barred by the White House from speaking in his own defense, Smith's friends are rallying around him. They point out that he received the highest rating from the American Bar Association and the top rating from the Allegheny County Bar Association.

U. Kentucky law prof appointed to Circuit post, awaits confirmation

By Steve Ivey

Faculty excellence in the University of Kentucky's College of Law has gained the attention of the White House.

John Rogers, professor of law, recently received an appointment to the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals from President George Bush.

Paul Salamanca, associate professor of law, said it's a powerful position. Decisions made by the 6th Circuit Court, which oversees federal cases in Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee, can be reviewed only by the U.S. Supreme Court. Allan Vestal, dean of the College of Law, said the Supreme Court reverses few cases, making the appointment "terribly important."

Rogers said he is unable to say much about the appointment, other than he is excited about the prospect of being a judge, because his appointment is pending confirmation by the U.S. Senate.

Vestal said Rogers has spent years cultivating his skills for this position.

Rogers received a bachelor's degree in history from Stanford University in 1970 and received his law degree from University of Michigan in 1974. In January and February 1991, he served as special counsel for the Impeachment Committee of the Kentucky House of Representatives. He has been a UK law faculty member since 1978, teaching international law, constitutional law, administrative law, torts, federal courts and legal writing.

Vestal said some Circuit Court judges continue to teach, but whether Rogers will be able to continue full time remains a wait-and-see issue.

Fellow law faculty members said Rogers is a worthy recipient.

"We're all very proud of him," said Salamanca, who has known Rogers since he came to UK in summer 1995. "It's an intelligent nomination."

Salamanca added Rogers is precisely the kind of person suited for an appointment.

"He is thoughtful, intelligent, open minded and very well versed in the law," he said. "He's one of my favorite people to verbally spar with because he certainly has his own ideas, but he's more than willing to listen."

Vestal echoed Salamanca's sentiments.

"John is a very good legal scholar," Vestal said. "His background in the Department of Justice and as a teacher and scholar make him the perfect candidate."

Vestal also said this was an important credit for UK and the College of Law.

"This is a very important distinction for UK," he said. "The fact that we have professors of this caliber speaks well for us."

Salamanca said UK should be proud of Rogers' honor.

"It's a feather in (UK's) cap," he said. "I think John is one of many faculty we have that are worthy of such a position. It's a real compliment."

Law colleagues said they hope this won't be the end of UK's connection with Rogers.

"We hope to keep ties with him," Vestal said. "I've suggested he keeps his offices here at UK. We'd like to keep him as involved as possible."

"He's a great colleague," Salamanca said. "We wish him well."

Liberal Groups Question Nominee's Role in '97 Case; Appeals Court Choice Accused of Acting Improperly

By Edward Walsh
The Washington Post
Wednesday, February 20, 2002

A judge who has been nominated by President Bush to a federal appeals court is coming under fire from liberal interest groups who say he acted improperly in a 1997 case involving a bank where his wife worked and in which they had a substantial financial interest.

D. Brooks Smith, now the chief judge of the U.S. District Court for Western Pennsylvania, was assigned to the case in late September 1997. In it, the Securities and Exchange Commission accused John Gardner Black, an investment adviser, of defrauding dozens of school districts and other local governments of millions of dollars entrusted to him.

On Oct. 31 of that year, Smith removed himself from the case, citing his wife's job as a vice president of an Altoona, Pa., bank where most of the missing funds were held in accounts Black controlled.

But by then, Smith had presided over the case for a month and had issued several orders, including one four days earlier that critics say could have benefitted his wife's employer by partly shielding the bank from attempts by Black's victims to recover their losses. In his brief recusal order, Smith also failed to disclose an even larger potential conflict: He and his wife, Karen, jointly owned at least $ 100,000 worth of stock in a holding company that owned the bank. The SEC's civil action against Black, which caused an uproar in western Pennsylvania, has resurfaced now as the Senate Judiciary Committee prepares to hold a confirmation hearing Tuesday on Smith's nomination to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

A Justice Department spokeswoman said earlier this month that Smith was not allowed to grant interviews, but that written questions could be submitted to him through the department. Yesterday, a senior Justice Department official, who asked not to be identified, said Smith "cannot respond to questions due to deference to the confirmation process."

The official said Smith removed himself from the case "out of an excess of caution" and that all of his actions were "proper."

Smith, 50, was appointed to federal district court in 1988 by President Ronald Reagan. The challenge to his handling of the Black case is part of a larger struggle over the shape of the federal judiciary. Earlier this month, a coalition of 27 liberal interest groups wrote a letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee contending that Smith's rulings as a district judge "show a disturbing pattern of bias in favor of powerful interests and disregard for the rights and needs of ordinary

REV_00140626

Americans."

The coalition urged the committee to scrutinize Smith's record closely before voting on his nomination.

The questions about Smith's handling of the case are being raised largely by Doug Kendall, executive director of the Community Rights Counsel, a public interest law firm that was one of the groups that sent the letter to the Judiciary Committee. In a memorandum he has circulated, Kendall argued that some of Smith's rulings "clearly advanced the interests of Mid-State Bank," the Altoona institution where his wife was a vice president and in which they had a financial interest.

Kendall cited a Smith order from Oct. 27 -- four days before the judge left the case -- that kept in place a freeze on some of the money that the school districts had turned over to Black to invest. The school districts wanted access to all of their money, but they were also divided into two camps.

One group had money invested in a pooled account at Mid-State, where about $ 71 million appeared to be missing. The other group's money was held by other banks and apparently was safe. In court filings, the first group argued that their losses should be shared by all of Black's clients, including those that did not have money at Mid-State. The other school districts argued that they should not be entangled in the case at all.

Acting on a recommendation of the SEC and a court-appointed trustee, Smith on Oct. 27 lifted the freeze on half the money, provided that the school districts agreed not to challenge the continuing freeze on the other half.

According to Kendall, by maintaining the freeze on half of the funds that were not in the pooled account at Mid-State, "Judge Smith preserved a very large pot of money that could have dramatically reduced Mid-State's litigation exposure."

Mid-State Bank was not a defendant in the case and was not accused of wrongdoing by the SEC. The school districts were inconvenienced, but eventually gained access to all of their money when another judge lifted the freeze. In 1999, Keystone Financial Inc., a Harrisburg, Pa., holding company that owned the bank, settled lawsuits filed by more than four dozen school districts for $ 51 million.

According to Smith's 1997 financial disclosure statement, he and his wife owned $ 100,000 to $ 250,000 in Keystone Financial stock. Karen Smith also owned $ 15,000 or less in Keystone stock and had a 401(k) plan at Mid-State Bank worth $ 100,000 to $ 250,000.

In an interview, Kendall said he was not accusing Smith of deliberately acting to protect those financial interests. "I'm not getting in his head and saying he's throwing this ruling to the bank, but I think it's unquestionable that this ruling was favorable to the bank," Kendall said. "Despite a very serious conflict, he ruled in a case, and he ruled in a way that benefited his financial

Steven Lubet, a Northwestern University Law School professor, said Smith's decision to rule on the case was "an inexplicable lapse, because the facts are clear and the law is clear and there isn't any question that [Smith] is disqualified, but he continued to sit on this case for 30 days."

Lubet said it did not matter that neither Smith nor the bank actually benefited from Smith's rulings. "The 'no harm, no foul' rule doesn't really have a place here," he said. "You expect judges to do the right thing. The disqualification rule is extremely important, because it's a crucial aspect of the legal system that judges should not have an interest in a case."

Smith's actions also appear to have put him at odds with standards set more than a decade ago by the 3rd Circuit, the appellate panel he hopes to join. According to Merri Jo Gillette, the lead SEC lawyer, at an Oct. 27 hearing before he partially lifted the freeze, Smith told the attorneys in the case about his wife's job at the bank and "pretty much told us it was his intention to recuse." But Smith stayed on the Black case for four more days and issued more rulings.

In a case involving another federal district judge, the 3rd Circuit ruled in 1988 that once a judge recognized a potential conflict, "he should recuse himself immediately" and not issue rulings other than "housekeeping orders."

Gillette, however, defended Smith. She said it was not clear at the time what role Mid-State Bank would play in the case. The court-appointed trustee, former attorney general and Pennsylvania governor Dick Thornburgh (R), said, "I never saw any evidence of him favoring the bank."

Stephen Gillers, professor of legal ethics at New York University Law School, said judges are required to tell the lawyers in a case of any potential conflict they have. "I can't say [Smith] certainly had to recuse himself," Gillers added. "I can say that a serious argument for recusal is present in these facts, so that Judge Smith should have revealed the information" before making any rulings.

Pickering Fight Shows Liberals At Their Worst

By Morton Kondracke
RollCall
Thursday, February 21, 2002

It's time for liberal groups such as People for the American Way and the NAACP to quit using character assassination to defeat conservative judicial nominees - and for Democratic Senators to show some independence from them.

Republicans have used defamation against liberal nominees too, as in the branding of Missouri Supreme Court Judge Ronnie White as "soft on crime" in 1999. But the usual pattern when the GOP controlled the Senate was to simply deny Democratic nominees a hearing and a confirmation vote.

REV_00140628

Democrats are learning to do that as well, but they're more adept at character attacks - the most egregious examples being the campaigns against Supreme Court nominees Clement Haynsworth in 1969, Robert Bork in 1987 and Clarence Thomas in 1991.

Now the liberal groups are systematically vilifying 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals nominee Charles Pickering as "hostile to civil rights" - read: racist - and as yet no Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee has raised a peep of objection. Pickering's chances in Judiciary don't look good.

In fact, the evidence suggests that Pickering is a decent, if outspoken, religious conservative who's repeatedly gone out of his way to help African-Americans.

Would a racist send his children to newly integrated schools in Mississippi in the 1960s when an all-white "academy" was just down the road? Pickering did.

And he kept his son, now Rep. Chip Pickering (R-Miss.), and three daughters in the Laurel, Miss., public schools even when, by the time they graduated, their high school was 70 percent African-American.

In majority-black Washington, D.C., white liberals, including some Senators, usually send their kids to private schools.

As a county attorney from 1964 to 1968, Pickering helped the FBI prosecute Ku Klux Klansmen and was defeated for re-election because of it. When he ran for the state Senate in 1971, he won with two-thirds support from black voters in his district.

This is scarcely the record of someone who represents "a throwback to the days of the segregated South," as Marcia Kuntz of the liberal Alliance for Justice called him.

As a state Senator, Pickering did vote twice to fund the notorious Mississippi Sovereignty Commission - at a time, his supporters say, when it claimed to be giving up its failed segregationist mission. Ultimately, it didn't do so and Pickering voted for its dissolution.

In 1992, Pickering urged his son, then an aide to Sen. Trent Lott (R-Miss.), to help win membership in the Sigma Chi chapter at the University of Mississippi for Damon Evans, son of the Ole Miss football coach.

At that point, no African-American had ever been admitted to a white fraternity, and Evans was facing an anonymous "blackball." Pickering flew down to Oxford, made a speech to the members of his and his father's fraternity, and got Evans accepted.

If, as liberals sometimes argue, "the personal is the political," then Pickering's record is that of an advocate of civil rights. He was able to get white-owned banks to lend money to black businesses and helped direct federal funds to after-school and medical programs for blacks.

In what ought to be a humiliating blow to the anti-Pickering assault brigade, The New York Times last Sunday reported that African-American leaders in his hometown overwhelmingly vouch for him and dismiss charges that he's racially prejudiced.

People for the American Way Director Ralph Neas was reduced to saying that those who have watched Pickering at close hand for decades know less about him than Washington activists.

I'd trust Mississippi civil rights leader Charles Evers, who backs Pickering, a lot sooner than the NAACP's Julian Bond and Kwesi Mfume, sponsors of one of the most scurrilous campaign ads ever run - the 2000 ad suggesting that George W. Bush's failure to sign a new hate-crimes law in Texas was equivalent to the murder of James Byrd.

Neas says he's never accused Pickering of being personally "racist," but that his record is one of "insensitivity" and "hostility" to civil rights.

Yet, close examinations by Jonathan Groner in Legal Times and Byron York in National Review pretty clearly discredit Neas' charges that Pickering has been biased in employment and voting-rights cases and was too lenient - and may have behaved unethically - in a cross-burning case.

York has demolished the basis for attacks on Pickering by Democratic presidential hopeful Sen. John Edwards (N.C.) in the 1994 cross-burning case.

York showed that Pickering believed that the Justice Department had let off the main perpetrator of the incident and that he intervened with Justice not - as Edwards alleged - to secure leniency for the defendant but to hasten a government response to his inquiries. He sentenced the defendant, Daniel Swan, to 27 months in prison.

I can't say that Pickering is qualified to serve on the 5th Circuit. The Washington Post, while scolding liberals for their tactics, asserts that Pickering has been a district judge "of no particular distinction."

On the other hand, since Democrats have elevated American Bar Association ratings to iconic status, it's worth noting that a majority of its rating committee found Pickering "well qualified" and the remainder, "qualified."

Still, Pickering is in trouble. Senate Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.) is against him and Democrats have a 10-8 margin over Republicans on Judiciary, enough to deny him a floor vote. Moreover, the White House isn't fighting very hard for his nomination. Too bad - the guy deserves better.

The Pickering Beat The embattled judge gets help from some unexpected sources

By Terry Eastland
The Weekly Standard
Thursday, February, 21 2002

WITH THE Senate out this week, Judge Charles Pickering's embattled nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit is getting help from seemingly unexpected sources.

The first is a February 17 editorial in the Washington Post. The Post editorial page is a neoliberal one and if pressed to pronounce yes or no on the nomination, might, after many nuanced paragraphs, come down politely no. But the Post routinely sticks up for due process--fairness, in a word. And so in this editorial the Post, after making sure the reader knows that Pickering wouldn't have been its choice for the Fifth Circuit, goes after "the liberal groups and Democratic senators" who've been trying "to portray him as a Neanderthal [on race]--all the while denying they are doing so."

The Post observes that Pickering's history on race is "actually quite complicated." What the Post means is that it is more complicated than the liberal groups and Democratic senators have made it out to be. No "committed" or "closeted" seg is this Judge Pickering, says the Post, a man who prosecuted the Klan back in the 1960s and testified in open court in 1967 against a major Klan figure, and in recent decades has joined with others of his state in working for racial reconciliation.

The second unexpected source of support for Pickering is the New York Times, which on February 17 led its "National Report" with a story from Laurel, Mississippi, Pickering's hometown. David Firestone reported that in Laurel, "Pickering is a widely admired figure." Indeed, "the city's black establishment overwhelmingly supports his nomination."

It's no secret that journalists with liberal views run the Times. But Firestone's story is the kind I'd expect from news pages supervised by executive editor (and former editorial page editor) Howell Raines, who, like Pickering, grew up in the segregated South (Alabama) and has been known to order up fresh reporting where the story, as here, involves race and the South. This is not to say that Raines, were he still running the editorial page, would actually support Pickering. But Firestone's reporting shreds the left's portrayal of the 64-year-old judge as "an ideological relic of the Old South."

The third source is Dickie Scruggs, the trial lawyer from Pascagoula, Mississippi, who spearheaded the legal challenge to the tobacco industry. Scruggs is a Democrat who has helped raise big money for Democrats. (He is also married to the sister-in-law of Senate minority leader Trent Lott, Pickering's friend and biggest supporter.) But, as Roll Call's Paul Kane reported on February 18, Scruggs is upset with the way his fellow trial-lawyer, Democratic senator John Edwards, queried Pickering about a 1994 cross-burning case. Actually, it is more accurate to say that Edwards skewered Pickering, a long-time friend of Scruggs's, twisting and even botching facts (detailed by National Review Online's Byron York) to portray the judge in the worst light possible. Scruggs, who took in Edwards's over-the-top performance from his seat in the hearing room, told Roll Call that he might withdraw his support for Edwards, who has presidential ambitions, and encourage his trial-lawyer brethren not to back him. Trial lawyers, it should be noted, have been heavy contributors to Edwards. Whether or not Scruggs carries out his threats, at least he called Edwards on his deplorable behavior.

Thanks to the Post, the Times, and Dickie Scruggs, things are looking up for Judge Pickering. At least this week they are. The Senate will be back in session next week.

MISSISSIPPI BURNING DEMOCRATS PREPARE TO IMMOLATE AN UNLUCKY BUSH JUDICIAL NOMINEE

By Philip Terzian
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Thursday, February 21, 2002

A federal district court judge named Charles Pickering is not likely to be promoted to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. It is true that he was nominated last spring by President Bush. But after Vermont Sen. James Jeffords defected from the Republicans in August, giving Democrats control of the Senate, his colleague, Patrick Leahy, became chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and judicial confirmations came to a screeching halt. Democrats on the Judiciary Committee are likely to vote unanimously against Pickering's nomination, thereby killing it.

REV_00140632

This is an interesting, and instructive, case for various reasons. The first reason is that Pickering is from Mississippi, and that fact alone seems to have given the Democrats what amounts to a blank check to reject him. And because Pickering is in his 60s, it is presumed that he must have been an integral part of Mississippi's segregationist past. It is more than a little unfair, in my view, to hold the opinions people held a half-century earlier against them, especially if they have long since changed their minds about particular issues. (I say this as one who cast his first presidential ballot for George McGovern.) After all, the Democratic chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Robert Byrd of West Virginia, was once a member of the Ku Klux Klan. And Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, D-N.Y., was a Goldwater Girl in her day.

But in fact, Pickering was not only not an integral part of Mississippi's segregationist past, he was by all accounts a racial progressive. In the 1960s, he prosecuted the Klan for violent crimes, thereby losing his legislative seat at the next election. In the 1970s, he helped create the Institute of Racial Reconciliation at the University of Mississippi. Charles Evers, brother of the late Medgar Evers, and a longtime player in Mississippi politics, described to the Judiciary Committee his admiration for Pickering's integrity and fair-mindedness, and complained that "I don't know where the NAACP and these groups are coming from calling Pickering a racist."

All to no avail. Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., demanded to know why Pickering had complained to the Department of Justice about a prison sentence for someone who had burned a cross on the front lawn of a black homeowner. Because, Pickering explained, he objected to the disparity between the mandatory seven-year term given to one defendant and the slap on the wrist given to a co-defendant who had fired a gun into the house but turned state's evidence. He was disturbed by the fact that one racist got seven years in prison, but his far more dangerous partner in crime got off essentially free.

None of this impressed Edwards, who was content to suggest that Pickering must approve of cross burning, or Edwards' admirers in the press, who congratulated him for standing up to a bigot (Mary McGrory) and dressing down a "throwback" (Los Angeles Times) to pre-civil rights Mississippi. None of the Democrats on the committee could offer any evidence to support this deceptive picture, and none showed any inclination to grapple with the truth. The Pickering nomination is, effectively, dead.

No doubt, Pickering is conservative on many issues, and opposes abortion -- although, as a federal circuit judge, his "personal views [on abortion] are irrelevant," he told the committee.

If Democrats are uncomfortable confirming someone whose opinions are contrary to their own, they should feel free to cast their votes against Pickering. What distinguishes this episode, however, is the fact that the nomination is not being fought on any legal or political principle, but on the basis of character assassination.

For Democrats, of course, it is payback time. They remember three Clinton appointees who were denied the courtesy of a hearing, much less a vote, when Republicans controlled the Senate. Such practices are unquestionably wrong. As Chief Justice William Rehnquist has said, every nominee to the federal bench deserves the opportunity to explain himself to the Judiciary Committee, and the courtesy of a Senate vote. But while the Republicans preferred to scuttle nominations by quietly burying them in procedure, the Democrats choose to subject nominees to public campaigns of lies, distortion and personal abuse. The groundwork is laid by those progressive organizations -- Alliance for Justice, People for the American Way, etc. -- that specialize in such dirty work, but senior Democrats depend on their propaganda skills and lend their prestige to the climate of corruption.

In the fullness of time, the republic will not stand or fall on the fate of one district judge from Mississippi at the hands of the Senate. But an increasingly ugly machinery that ruins personal reputations on the basis of public deceit is neither smart politics nor a system of checks and balances.

PICKERING'S COURAGE DEMANDS CONFIRMATION

The Sun Herald (Biloxi, MS)
Wednesday, February 20, 2002

Away down South ". . . in the land of cotton, old times there are not forgotten . . . "

True. Those opening words to "Dixie" capture the spirit not only of the Old South, but of many contemporary Southerners as well.

"Forget? Never!" the bumper stickers say.

But the same could be said of folks in Chicago or New York or Los Angeles. When people in those places think of the South, especially in a political or cultural context, those thoughts run through the Civil War and the Civil Rights years. Their mind's eye sees names like Jefferson Davis and Bull Connors, and they see George Wallace standing in the schoolhouse door. Does racism still live in Mississippi in 2002?

Of course it does.

Sadly, too, it lives in all the rest of America as well.

This nation still bleeds for the sin of slavery and for the omission of deeds we should have done, and the commission of others we should not have done in those intervening years.

The river of pain flowing from that original sin sometimes ebbs, and sometimes rises, but it is never far from our consciousness or our conscience.

Charles Pickering, a 64-year-old federal district judge who hails from Jones County in South

REV_00140634

Mississippi, can attest to that fact. The president of the United States has nominated him to a seat on the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. For those who oppose him he is a tempting target, for all of those ghosts of Mississippi's past come suddenly to life with the awful thoughts of night riders, nooses and burning crosses.

Judge Pickering's own words and actions four decades ago have become the thread upon which his opposition seeks to deny him confirmation.

Today he regrets those words, utterances that can never be fully removed from the history of one man's life.

Perfection is a high standard. Charles Pickering did not achieve it. Can any of us say we have?

But since that long-ago day and those failed utterances he has been transformed. One cannot say for sure that he has had a change of heart, but of certainty it can be said he has been a changed man.

Since 1964 his public record has been exemplary by any standard.

n He has courageously stood up to the Ku Klux Klan's Imperial Wizard, a stand that contributed to his subsequent defeat as district attorney.

n He defended African-American clients in significant criminal cases.

n He has worked with University of Mississippi Chancellor Robert Khayat to establish an Institute of Racial Reconciliation at Ole Miss and he serves on that board today.

In the cauldron of this firestorm over his nomination, he is supported by the largely black community in his hometown, and by most black leaders in his home state, those who have seen his actions up close for these many years, voices with great moral authority on such matters, including Charles Evers, brother of slain Civil Rights leader Medgar Evers.

There is a plague of piousness afoot in our land today as politicians preen and pontificate before the cameras of so many committee rooms, preaching and prattling to cater to the public opinion of the moment. Their sermons often seem more the words of the Pharisees than the thoughts of pure hearts. It is true of those who have cast their stones at Judge Pickering.

You wonder if Abraham Lincoln or Hugo Black were seeking confirmation from these fellows if either could stand the scrutiny of these modern Jacobins.

Lincoln's own dreadful words would lash him like a whip . . . words so awful they could not be printed today without stirring pain and bitterness. Certainly Hugo Black, a former Klansman, could not have stood their test.

Yet one -- Mr. Lincoln -- many have said was this country's greatest president; the Great

REV_00140635

Emancipator -- the man who freed the slaves and whose leadership maintained the Union. And the other, Justice Black, became one of the leading civil libertarians in U.S. history, rendering opinions whose breadth and majesty extended the rights of African-Americans to their most expansive state.

The young American nation often embraced the idea of redemption, a sense of charity that extends to those who have a change of heart, and who thereafter act in a way that is consistent with the "new way" they have embraced.

Charles Pickering should be confirmed because he is a good man whose past service is proof that he will render justice fairly to all, and whose personal courage and record have earned him not only the nomination of his president, but the approbation of his countrymen.

Civil Rights Coalition Launches Campaign for Fair and Impartial Judiciary; Highlights Opposition to Charles W. Pickering Sr.'s Confirmation

http://www.fairjudges.org/

AScribe Newswire
Wednesday, February 20, 2002

The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the nation's oldest and broadest civil rights coalition, today launched a new outreach campaign designed to educate the civil rights community and the American public about the importance of a fair and impartial judiciary.

In launching the new campaign entitled, "www.FairJudges.org ," Wade Henderson, LCCR's Executive Director stated, "LCCR strongly believes that the composition of the federal judiciary is a civil rights issue of profound importance because the individuals charged with dispensing justice in our society have a direct impact on civil rights protections for us all." Henderson added, "the FairJudges.org campaign will help to educate and mobilize the civil rights community and the American public in support of individuals who are the embodiment of fairness and impartiality." Specifically, the www.FairJudges.org campaign will:

-- Provide regular updates on the status of judicial nominations;
-- Serve as a clearinghouse for civil rights-related information regarding judicial nominations;
-- Help to coordinate local coalition building efforts around the nation; and
-- Mobilize support and/or opposition to those nominees officially endorsed/opposed by the Leadership Conference.

Charles W. Pickering Sr., President Bush's nominee for the U.S Circuit Court of Appeals for the

REV_00140636

Fifth District, is the first nominee being highlighted in the www.Fair.Judges.org campaign. The Leadership Conference is opposing Judge Pickering's nomination because of his extreme views on important civil rights, women's rights and constitutional issues. The media, civil rights advocates, policy makers, and the American public can learn more about Charles Pickering's record as well as track the growing opposition to his nomination on www.FairJudges.org.

The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights is the nation's oldest, largest and most diverse civil and human rights coalition with more than 180 national organizations committed to the protection and advancement of basic civil and human rights for all persons in our society.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of Legislative Affairs

Washington, D.C. 20530

February 22, 2002

The Honorable Dan Burton
Chairman
Committee on Government Reform
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This confirms the agreement reached by Committee staff with Department representatives today about our provision of a document to Committee staff for their use in the deposition of former FBI agent Dennis Condon today.

The document is a memorandum, dated June 6, 1967, by Walter T. Barnes and Assistant Untied States Attorney Edward Harrington, regarding a prosecution of Raymond Patriarca and others. It was listed on the Department's log of documents subject to the President's claim of executive privilege on December 12, 2001. The document was made available for Committee staff to review on a confidential basis in light of your particularized need in advance of your February 14, 2001 hearing, at which Judge Harrington testified.

We have agreed to make it available again today for the limited purpose of Mr. Condon's deposition pursuant to your agreement that it will not be publicly disclosed, no copies will be made, and it will be returned to the Department at the end of the deposition. At the deposition, it may be reviewed by Committee staff and shown to Mr. Condon and his counsel. This agreement is based, again, on the Committee's particularized need for access to the document in the deposition and should not be considered as a precedent regarding other Boston documents.

I hope that availability of this document for today's deposition is helpful to the Committee. We look forward to conferring with Committee staff on February 25, 2002 to discuss other Boston documents.

Sincerely,

Daniel J. Bryant
Assistant Attorney General

We are still waiting for guidance from Dr. Rice, who has been away with the President. I would recommend that OMB go ahead and circulate the State draft to agencies for formal views, with a notation that the FSI issue remains to be resolved and may be the discussion of an interagency meeting led by the NSC. This will at least allow us to get more formal views from DoD and Treasury, who have string equities here.

Attached (and as text below, in case you can't open my Word file) is the op ed. As the e-mail below from Max Boot at Wall St. Journal indicates, we may not have much time to make changes--but I'd like your advice (especially if I've misstated any factual matters).

As I mentioned, I'm a great fan of your boss and my goal here is to be helpful. But I was candidly surprised they took the piece (my batting average at the Journal is perhaps .200, and they just ran a piece I did on Thomas Jefferson a few months ago).

David Walker v. Richard Cheney:
Thinking Seriously About Executive Privilege

Robert F. Turner

Comptroller General David M. Walker, the head of the congressional General Accounting Office (GAO), has brought suit to compel Vice President Richard B. Cheney to provide notes of meetings, names of individuals with whom he communicated, and other documents related to the Vice President's deliberations as chair of the National Energy Policy Development Group. The conventional wisdom is that Cheney is being unreasonably secretive and that the GAO should easily prevail in court. But the issue is far more complex.

First of all, the court may not even consider the case until there is a genuine "case or controversy" as required by Article III of the Constitution. In 1983, the Supreme Court in INS v. Chadha held that Congress could not delegate authority to a single committee or even the entire House or Senate to act on behalf of Congress with legal effect. If Congress wishes to seek judicial resolution of a constitutional struggle with the Executive Branch over access to information, Congress should express that intention by majority vote of both houses, at which time the issue would be ripe for judicial resolution. The Supreme Court's holding that Congress can not delegate authority to act with legal force even to the full House or Senate would seem to preclude delegating to the Comptroller General power to initiate in the name of Congress an inter-branch constitutional dispute with the Executive Branch.

Second, it is not clear at all that the Constitution gives Congress a legal right to know with whom the Vice President is talking or what is said in such preludial exchanges. The first great constitutional struggle over executive privilege occurred in 1796 over a House of Representatives request for background documents on the Jay Treaty. As the Supreme Court noted in United States v. Nixon in 1974, the President's claim of executive privilege is strongest when military or diplomatic documents are at issue. But President Washington's refusal to share the documents in question with the House was not solely premised upon a national security claim-indeed, he had already shared the documents in question with the Senate. Washington did not believe the House had any business looking at treaties that had already been ratified with the advice and consent of the Senate.

During that floor debate, which lasted nearly two months, only a single member of the House (Massachusetts Democrat William Lyman) asserted an absolute right of access to documents within the Executive Branch. As reported on page 773 of volume 5 of the Annals of Congress, James Madison reasoned that both branches had a right "to ask for information which might assist their deliberations on the subjects submitted to them by the Constitution," and it "belonged to each department to judge for itself" what documents to share. Madison's objection to Washington's actions was that the President had based his refusal upon his own interpretation of the constitutional power of the House to examine treaties on their merits when called upon to appropriate implementation funds. Washington won that struggle, and in 1936 his refusal was praised by the Supreme Court in its landmark Curtiss-Wright case.

Third, as a policy matter, the case against secrecy in the preliminary stages of formulating public policy is not nearly as clear as some would have us believe. James Madison was almost certainly correct when he wrote that there would have been no U.S. Constitution had the delegates who met in Philadelphia in the summer of 1787 not first established a strict secrecy rule. We certainly want public accountability for final policy decisions, but I submit we also want our policymakers to be able to listen to a broad range of views from a diverse range of sources. If White House officials can listen to no opinion that is not to be announced to the world, only the most courageous and foolhardy elected officials will be willing to consider the views of unpopular minority groups-even though those views may contribute substantially to understanding problems and finding solutions that might benefit all Americans.

I spent five years in the mid-1970s working as a Senate staff member, and there were occasions where elected legislators were clearly afraid to even meet with Americans of Turkish or Arab ancestry for fear their Greek or Jewish constituents would learn of the meetings and manifest their displeasure in the next election. That is unhealthy for democratic governance. The wise decision-maker ought to be free to speak candidly with and receive the views of representatives of all points of view, being ultimately personally accountable for the policies that are implemented.

Obviously, if it is bad public policy for the Vice President to be able to have candid conversations that are not subject to public disclosure, then the same theory should apply to Congress. For some reason, when Congress decided that the public had a "right to know" what was going on in the Executive Branch and enacted the Freedom of Information Act in 1966, it neglected to include the documents of the Legislative Branch in that process. If the people have a "need to know" what people in government are doing, it would seem to apply most strongly to the actions of their own elected representatives. But even if legislators were willing to install webcams in every room of their offices and homes and to permit open broadcast of every telephone conversation, this would have a horribly chilling effect upon the candid exchange of diverse views that are essential to the making of sound public policy.

Vice President Cheney's decision to resist the assertions of the GAO clearly has less to do with the specific issue in dispute than with his very correct perception that, particularly in the aftermath of Vietnam, Congress has routinely usurped authority vested by the Constitution in the President and the Executive Branch. During that era of legislative lawbreaking, highly partisan Congresses shoved through literally hundreds of statutory constraints on discretion clearly vested by the Constitution in the President.

To mention just one example, how many Americans realize that when Congress in 1973 enacted the War Powers Resolution over a presidential veto, Section 2(c) denied the President his well-established constitutional power to use military force to rescue endangered American civilians abroad from terrorist attacks? That flagrantly unconstitutional statute remains on the books, but of course no simple statute enacted by Congress can amend the Constitution or legally take from the President powers vested in him by the people through that instrument.

Whatever the ultimate outcome of Walker v. Cheney, President Bush and Vice President Cheney deserve high praise for their courage and principle in trying to restore the Constitution to its proper balance. As Harvard Law Professor Charles Warren once noted, "In maintaining his rights against a trespassing Congress, the President defends not himself, but popular government; he represents not himself, but the people."

Jennifer:

Attached (and as text below, in case you can't open my Word file) is the op ed. As the e-mail below from Max Boot at Wall St. Journal indicates, we may not have much time to make changes--but I'd like your advice (especially if I've misstated any factual matters).

As I mentioned, I'm a great fan of your boss and my goal here is to be helpful. But I was candidly surprised they took the piece (my batting average at the Journal is perhaps .200, and they just ran a piece I did on Thomas Jefferson a few months ago).

Warmest regards,

-Bob

Over the weekend I wrote the attached (and copied below in case you can't open the Word file) 1100-word op-ed defending VP Cheney against the GAO lawsuit. It's yours if you want it, but if you don't please let me know so I can try a lesser source.

By the way, the Jefferson-Hemings book is almost finished and should be out later this year. The revisionists seem to be on the run, and we can't find ANY of them willing to argue in a debate that Sally was Jefferson's lover. The people at Monticello refuse to engage on the merits, saying they have "moved on" to other issues. 8-)

Warmest regards,

-Bob

David Walker v. Richard Cheney*:
Thinking Seriously About Executive Privilege

Robert F. Turner

Comptroller General David M. Walker, the head of the congressional General Accounting Office (GAO), has brought suit to compel Vice President Richard B. Cheney to provide notes of meetings, names of individuals with whom he communicated, and other documents related to the Vice President's deliberations as chair of the National Energy Policy Development Group. The conventional wisdom is that Cheney is being unreasonably secretive and that the GAO should easily prevail in court. But the issue is far more complex.

First of all, the court may not even consider the case until there is a genuine "case or controversy" as required by Article III of the Constitution. In 1983, the Supreme Court in INS v. Chadha held that Congress could not delegate authority to a single committee or even the entire House or Senate to act on behalf of Congress with legal effect. If Congress wishes to seek judicial resolution of a constitutional struggle with the Executive Branch over access to information, Congress should express that intention by majority vote of both houses, at which time the issue would be ripe for judicial resolution. The Supreme Court's holding that Congress can not delegate authority to act with legal force even to the full House or Senate would seem to preclude delegating to the Comptroller General power to initiate in the name of Congress an inter-branch constitutional dispute with the Executive Branch.

Second, it is not clear at all that the Constitution gives Congress a legal right to know with whom the Vice President is talking or what is said in such preludial exchanges. The first great constitutional struggle over executive privilege occurred in 1796 over a House of Representatives request for background documents on the Jay Treaty. As the Supreme Court noted in United States v. Nixon in 1974, the President's claim of executive privilege is strongest when military or diplomatic documents are at issue. But President Washington's refusal to share the documents in question with the House was not solely premised upon a national security claim-indeed, he had already shared the documents in question with the Senate. Washington did not believe the House had any business looking at treaties that had already been ratified with the advice and consent of the Senate.

During that floor debate, which lasted nearly two months, only a single member of the House (Massachusetts Democrat William Lyman) asserted an absolute right of access to documents within the Executive Branch. As reported on page 773 of volume 5 of the Annals of Congress, James Madison reasoned that both branches had a right "to ask for information which might assist their deliberations on the subjects submitted to them by the Constitution," and it "belonged to each department to judge for itself" what documents to share. Madison's objection to Washington's actions was that the President had based his refusal upon his own interpretation of the constitutional power of the House to examine treaties on their merits when called upon to appropriate implementation funds. Washington won that struggle, and in 1936 his refusal was praised by the Supreme Court in its landmark Curtiss-Wright case.

Third, as a policy matter, the case against secrecy in the preliminary stages of formulating public policy is not nearly as clear as some would have us believe. James Madison was almost certainly correct when he wrote that there would have been no U.S. Constitution had the delegates who met in Philadelphia in the summer of 1787 not first established a strict secrecy rule. We certainly want public accountability for final policy decisions, but I submit we also want our policymakers to be able to listen to a broad range of views from a diverse range of sources. If White House officials can listen to no opinion that is not to be announced to the world, only the most courageous and foolhardy elected officials will be willing to consider the views of unpopular minority groups-even though those views may contribute substantially to understanding problems and finding solutions that might benefit all Americans.

I spent five years in the mid-1970s working as a Senate staff member, and there were occasions where elected legislators were clearly afraid to even meet with Americans of Turkish or Arab ancestry for fear their Greek or Jewish constituents would learn of the meetings and manifest their displeasure in the next election. That is unhealthy for democratic governance. The wise decision-maker ought to be free to speak candidly with and receive the views of representatives of all points of view, being ultimately personally accountable for the policies that are implemented.

Obviously, if it is bad public policy for the Vice President to be able to have candid conversations that are not subject to public disclosure, then the same theory should apply to Congress. For some reason, when Congress decided that the public had a "right to know" what was going on in the Executive Branch and enacted the Freedom of Information Act in 1966, it neglected to include the documents of the Legislative Branch in that process. If the people have a "need to know" what people in government are doing, it would seem to apply most strongly to the actions of their own elected representatives. But even if legislators were willing to install webcams in every room of their offices and homes and to permit open broadcast of every telephone conversation, this would have a horribly chilling effect upon the candid exchange of diverse views that are essential to the making of sound public policy.

Vice President Cheney's decision to resist the assertions of the GAO clearly has less to do with the specific issue in dispute than with his very correct perception that, particularly in the aftermath of Vietnam, Congress has routinely usurped authority vested by the Constitution in the President and the Executive Branch. During that era of legislative lawbreaking, highly partisan Congresses shoved through literally hundreds of statutory constraints on discretion clearly vested by the Constitution in the President.

The Borking of Pickering

Monday, February 25, 2002

As reported in these pages last week, Judiciary Committee Democrats are going hard and heavy after U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering, selected by President Bush for the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. We've seen the law firm of Biden, Kennedy, and Leahy engaged before in various forms of borking. But the Pickering hearings have introduced the nation to a new borker: John Edwards of North Carolina. It fell -- or perhaps it was assigned -- to Edwards, who made millions as a plaintiff's lawyer, to cross-examine Judge Pickering about his handling of a case from 1994. Working from Clinton-era Justice Department documents he had in his possession but which Pickering had not seen (how about that for due process, Your Honor?), Edwards accused Pickering of conduct violating the Code of Judicial Ethics.

Now that the documents have been made available to everyone, including the judge, it appears at the least that there is another side to the story. Reviewing the issues at the request of Senate Republicans, Michael Krauss, professor of legal ethics at George Mason School of Law, writes, "One is hard pressed to see any violation of Judge Pickering's ethical duties here." And: "[The] documents reveal nothing more than a determined effort by Judge Pickering to discharge, faithfully and competently, his judicial duties under the Constitution."

Drawing on the same documents, Edwards also said Pickering had told "the government lawyers [in the case] that you would on your own motion order a new trial." Pickering denied saying that. And the documents back him up. The pertinent one -- a Nov. 29, 1994, memo by prosecutor Brad Berry -- said that Pickering had asked whether the Justice Department would agree not to oppose a motion for a new trial on a certain charge. But Berry's memo doesn't say that Pickering said he would call for this trial "on your own motion."

Edwards, who has presidential aspirations, may not have established himself as the equal of the established borkers in his party, but he shows promise. And he certainly has the character. We still remember those ads when he ran for the Senate in 1998, which suggested he was born in North Carolina though in fact he came into the world in Seneca, South Carolina. In case you wonder, there's documentation for that.

Campaign-finance foe says bill will pass

EXCERPT
Senate panel to vote this week on judge

Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., said the Senate Judiciary Committee likely will not approve the nomination of Charles Pickering to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. A vote is expected Wednesday. He has been a federal judge since 1990. Some Democrats, civil rights activists and abortion-rights proponents oppose him. Republicans say that he is rated well-qualified by the American Bar Association and that the opposition is politically motivated.

Mississippi redistricting almost over - or is it?

Emily Wagster
The Associated Press State & Local Wire
February 24, 2002, Sunday,

It's not a sure bet Mississippi's congressional redistricting battle will end Monday despite a deadline by federal judges, officials say.

Democrats are appealing to the U.S. Supreme Court to implement a plan approved by state court. It's uncertain when that appeal will be resolved and one of the congressmen with the most at stake in redistricting says he's not ready to accept a plan drawn by Republican-appointed judges.

"We're not going to sit there and let three appointed federal judges sit there and say what the district is going to be," U.S. Rep. Ronnie Shows, D-Miss., said late last week. U.S. Rep. Chip Pickering, R-Miss., who will face Shows in a new central district this election season, believes the federal judges' redistricting plan is fair and should be used.

"I think that will be it," Pickering said last week.

Mississippi is losing one of its five congressional seats because of slow population growth in the 1990s.

The federal judges said if the U.S. Justice Department fails to approve a state court redistricting plan by the close of business Monday, they'll order that their own map be used in this year's congressional races.

The federal judges' order could come early Tuesday. Congressional candidates face a Friday qualifying deadline.

The federal plan is thought to favor Republicans, while the state plan is thought to favor Democrats.

REV_00140730

Both national parties are watching the outcome of Mississippi redistricting because the battle could help determine the balance of partisan power on Capitol Hill.

The Justice Department since late December has been examining a plan approved by Hinds County Chancery Judge Patricia Wise. The Justice Department is trying to determine if the plan is fair to minorities.

The department on Feb. 14 asked state officials for more information about how chancery judges are elected. Responses were submitted last Tuesday, giving the department another 60 days to consider the state court plan. That pushed the department's deadline well past the congressional qualifying date.

Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge E. Grady Jolly of Jackson and U.S. District Judges David Bramlette of Natchez and Henry T. Wingate of Jackson have drawn a separate redistricting plan that does not need Justice Department clearance.

Both plans toss Pickering and Shows, the state's junior congressmen, into a new central district.

Pickering now represents east central Mississippi and Shows represents the southwest.

The key difference in the state and federal plans is the composition of the new central district.

The state court plan's central district has a higher concentration of black voters, who traditionally favor Democrats. The federal plan's central district includes heavily Republican precincts in suburban Jackson.

Shows said it's ironic that people who traditionally push for states' rights are now supporting the federal judges' plan.

Chancery judges are chosen in nonpartisan elections, but Wise comes from a heavily Democratic district. Opponents to her plan say a judge from a single district should not decide a plan for the entire state.

Shows and other Democrats also accuse the Bush administration Justice Department of delaying action on the state court plan to help Republicans. "They're stalling because they want to ride this thing out," Shows said.

Pickering said "it's simply not true" that the Justice Department is being politicized. He said that Republicans are still appealing the chancery court plan to the state Supreme Court.

"There is no precedent in the history of the Voting Rights Act or the Justice Department of ever approving a plan that is still subject to appeal," Pickering said.

Democrats also accused Republicans of dragging their feet on filing an appeal to the state

REV_00140731

Supreme Court. GOP lawyers waited almost until the end of the 30-day filing period to submit their appeal.

Pickering says Democrats are trying to use his father's federal appeals court nomination as leverage in congressional redistricting.

President Bush has nominated U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering Sr. of Laurel to a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. The judge has had two confirmation hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The NAACP opposes his nomination, saying the elder Pickering is hostile to minority rights. The judge has defended his civil rights record and last week gave a speech at the Mississippi Capitol calling for racial reconciliation.

Several prominent Democrats, including members of the Congressional Black Caucus, also oppose the judge's confirmation.

"I think that fact that redistricting and his confirmation came at the same time ... creates an opportunity, unfortunately, to politicize his confirmation," Chip Pickering said last week.

Shows said he thinks the Pickering camp is trying to use the confirmation difficulties to its own political advantage. "They're trying to make like they're the ones being picked on and, hell, they've got the judges and the Justice Department on their side," Shows said.

He said that two of the three federal judges involved in redistricting serve on U.S. District Court with Judge Pickering and one serves on the court he hopes to join.

Shows has been criticized by Mississippi Republican Chairman Jim Herring and others for not speaking out in support of Judge Pickering's nomination. "It's not relevant," Shows said of the criticism. "I don't even have a vote. It's in the Senate."

Daschle says Judiciary Committee to vote on Pickering this week

The Associated Press State & Local Wire
February 24, 2002, Sunday
Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle said the Judiciary Committee will vote this week on the nomination of Mississippi Judge Charles Pickering to a federal appeals court.

"If the vote fails in the committee, of course, it dies in the committee. There is no other action required," said Daschle, D-S.D., who was appearing on ABC's 'This Week' on Sunday. Daschle said he believed the committee would take up Pickering's nomination on Wednesday.

Pickering, of Laurel has been a federal judge since 1990. He has been nominated by President Bush for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, which handles cases from Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas.

He has gone through two sets of hearings before the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee.

Some U.S. Senate Democrats and civil rights groups are questioning parts of his record, including his effort to reduce the sentence of a man convicted for putting a burning cross on an interracial couple's lawn.

Abortion rights groups also are trying to block his confirmation.

Daschle was asked if Pickering's nomination would be confirmed by the Senate if it passes the Judiciary Committee.

"I don't know, I have not talked to my colleagues or know just what the vote will be at this point," he said. "But .... if the nomination comes to the floor, I have every expectation we'll take it up and we'll have that debate."

Sen. Diane Feinstein, D-Calif., speaking on NBC's 'Meet the Press,' said she doubts the nomination will get out of the Judiciary Committee.

"I believe that there is virtually unanimous opinion on the Democratic side of the Judiciary Committee that he will not be confirmed. In other words, he will not be voted out of the Judiciary Committee," she said.

Pickering has strong support from Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott and other state Republicans, who say opposition to the judge is politically motivated. Pickering is rated as well qualified by the American Bar Association.

Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., who also appeared on 'Meet the Press,' said he supports Pickering.

"We need to get some judges out there and confirmed in positions, if for no other reason, for homeland security, so we can deal with judicial issues coming on forward," he said.

Race, politics, history: Mississippi redistricting fight has it all

David Espo
The Associated Press State & Local Wire
February 22, 2002, Friday

Republicans and Democrats are battling in state and federal courts over a single Mississippi House district, a dispute that blends race, irony and politics and stirs memories of the presidential recount of 2000.

"This is Florida at the congressional level," says Republican Rep. Charles (Chip) Pickering, Jr., thrown together with Democratic Rep. Ronnie Shows in a new district with unsettled boundaries.

Democrats charge President Bush's Justice Department with trying to dilute the voting strength of Mississippi blacks, much as they charged Bush's campaign with disenfranchising blacks in Florida.

"Instead of enforcing the voting rights act, they are carrying the water of Chip Pickering and the Republican Party," alleges Rob McDuff, a lawyer in the case. Agency officials and other Republicans dispute the charge. "One judge from one county shouldn't draw the plan for the entire state of Mississippi," Henry Barbour, Pickering's campaign manager, said in an interview. "This ought to be about all 2.8 million people in Mississippi."

As was the case in Florida, Republicans and Democrats filed suit in different courts. And as a result, there are two court-drawn redistricting plans.

And in an irony acknowledged by all sides, one argument central to the civil rights struggle of a generation ago has been reversed. Democrats accuse Republicans of trampling "states' rights" by going into federal court to deny blacks their rights.

One redistricting plan, with 37.5 percent black voting age population, was issued by a local judge, is backed by Democrats and - to their anger- has been awaiting approval under the Voting Rights Act at the Justice Department for more than six weeks.

Under the law, the agency must make sure there is no backsliding - the legal term is "retrogression" - when new congressional district maps are drawn.

In this case, though, lawyers raised questions about approving a statewide plan drawn up by a local judge.

The other plan, supported by Republicans, includes 30 percent black voting age population in the contested district. It was advanced by federal judges who say they will intervene if the Justice Department hasn't acted by Monday on the rival map.
Democrats on Wednesday asked the U.S. Supreme Court to step in, with a March 1 filing deadline approaching for the two men at the center of the dispute.

Pickering, 38, is a conservative third-term lawmaker and protege of Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott. In one of numerous ironies in the controversy, his father, U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering, is at the center of another racially charged dispute. Nominated by Bush for a seat on the appeals court, he faces opposition from Democrats and national civil rights groups.

Shows, 55, won his seat in 1998. A conservative Democrat, he parts company on several issues with more liberal national party leaders. In both his campaigns, he suggested he might not vote for Democratic leader Dick Gephardt as speaker, although he did in the end.

Both sides speak of possible connections between the confirmation battle and the redistricting controversy.

Democratic Rep. Bennie Thompson, Mississippi's only black lawmaker, said Thursday that one of the federal judges involved in the court case had written a letter of support for Pickering's father.

Rep. Pickering said some Democrats were linking the two issues, holding his father's confirmation hostage while the redistricting case continues.

The presence of two incumbents on the ballot guarantees both parties will focus on the contest in their struggle for control of the House this fall.

But first comes the current dispute, rooted in national population trends requiring Mississippi to give up one of its five House seats. The Democratic-controlled Legislature deadlocked in its efforts to draw new districts.

Democratic lawyers then won the early rounds in court.

The state Supreme Court ruled that a local judge had authority over statewide redistricting, despite an assertion from Democratic Attorney General Mike Moore that "under current precedent ... a chancery court has no subject matter jurisdiction" in such matters.

Next, Hinds County Chancery Court Judge Patricia Wise approved a map backed by Democrats. Moore forwarded it to the Justice Department in December and requested swift approval.

The GOP went to federal court, where three federal judges advanced a map more favorable to Pickering.

This time, Democrats objected. "The plan drawn by the federal courts is a direct assault on states' rights and the state of Mississippi, argued Shows.

Wise was elected in a nonpartisan election from a district that is Democratic. The three federal judges were appointed by Republican presidents.

Now, in another irony, Democrats argue that Bush's Justice Department is turning the law upside down by delaying approval of the plan that maximizes black voting strength in the new district.

Assistant Attorney General Ralph Boyd met recently with several Democratic lawmakers at their request. Department spokesman Dan Nelson said Boyd told them that review of the Mississippi controversy "will be guided solely by existing law and the facts presented."

Improving race relations morally right, Judge Pickering says

Emily Wagster
The Associated Press State & Local Wire
February 22, 2002, Friday

Reconciling racial differences is in the best interest of Mississippi and America, federal appeals court nominee Charles Pickering Sr. said.

Pickering, 64, was honored Thursday at the Mississippi Capitol during a reunion of former state senators. He was one of the few Republicans in the state Senate when he served from 1972 to 1980. His remarks were the first public response since NAACP leaders last week said the federal judge has been hostile to minorities' rights.

"All of my life, I have seen those who strive to divide," Pickering said. "We must resist the temptation and the allure to divide for political or personal gain."

Some U.S. Senate Democrats and civil rights groups are questioning parts of his record, including his effort to reduce the sentence of a man convicted for putting a burning cross on an interracial couple's lawn.

Abortion rights groups also are trying to block his confirmation.

Pickering, of Laurel has been a federal judge since 1990. He has been nominated by President Bush for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, which handles cases from Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas.

He has gone through two sets of hearings before the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee, which could vote on his nomination by mid-March.

Pickering told current and former state lawmakers Thursday he has been promoting racial reconciliation in every speech he has made in the past decade.
"Unless we reach a point where racial differences can be resolved in a positive and constructive manner, the future of our nation and the welfare of our children and grandchildren will be greatly diminished," he said.

Members of the Congressional Black Caucus, including U.S. Rep. Bennie Thompson, D-Miss., also oppose Pickering's confirmation. Thompson said this month that "we could do better" with a different nominee to the appeals court.

Some black state lawmakers said they don't recall Pickering speaking out about racial reconciliation during the civil rights movement of the 1960s and 1970s.

"I respect Bennie's judgment and I respect the NAACP and I respect all the other civil rights organizations that were a part of the struggle at that time and still are," said Sen. David Jordan, D-

REV_00140736

Greenwood. "If they've got problems with the confirmation, I have problems with the confirmation."

Former Sen. Con Maloney of Jackson, who was elected as a Democrat in 1972 and later became a Republican, praised Pickering.

"This great country needs people like Charlie Pickering who, regardless of race, creed or color, will stand up and do what's right," Maloney said.

Pickering also led the Mississippi Baptist Convention from 1983 to 1985. He said Thursday that racial reconciliation "is morally the right thing to do, for God is no respecter of person or race."

The judge also promoted the work of the University of Mississippi's new Institute for Racial Reconciliation. He serves on the institute's board.

Pickering was accompanied Thursday by his wife, Margaret Ann, and three of their four children, including their son, U.S. Rep. Chip Pickering, R-Miss.

Pickering Urges Racial Harmony in Reply to Critics

Emily Wagster
The Commercial Appeal (Memphis, TN)

Embattled federal appeals court nominee Charles Pickering used a speech Thursday at the Mississippi Capitol to call for racial reconciliation.

It was one of his first public statements since NAACP leaders last week accused the federal judge of being hostile to minority rights.

"We must resist the temptation and the allure to divide for political or personal gain," Pickering told a state Senate reunion. "I respect Bennie's judgment and I respect the NAACP" and other civil rights groups, said Sen. David Jordan (D-Greenwood). "If they've got problems with the confirmation, I have problems with the confirmation."

Political money eroding trust in judicial system Groups push public funding, merit-based selection of judges

Michelle Mittelstadt
The Dallas Morning News
February 22, 2002, Friday

The gush of political money into state judicial campaigns, much of it from trial lawyers and business interests, is having a corrosive effect on America's courts and the public's perception of their fairness, voters and judges say in two new national surveys.

Nearly two-thirds of voters polled, including nearly 90 percent of black voters, voiced concern that there are two systems of justice - one for well-heeled, powerful interests and one for everybody else. Eighty percent of judges surveyed said they are very concerned about the perception there is inequality in the system.

Three-quarters of voters - and even one-fourth of the judges interviewed - said they believe campaign contributions have at least some influence on judges' decisions. Thirty-eight states including Texas elect judges to their highest court. "When money elects judges, many people will believe that justice is for sale," said North Carolina Court of Appeals Judge James Andrew

Wynn Jr.

Equating the existing system to letting Major League baseball players contribute money to umpires, Judge Wynn said: "Under that scenario, how can anyone have confidence in the strike calls of an umpire if you know the pitcher contributed $ 10,000 to select that umpire to call the game?"

The poll results come from two surveys commissioned by the Justice at Stake campaign, a national partnership working to reduce the influence of special interests on the judicial system.

A coalition of groups ranging from the American Bar Association and Common Cause to the National Center for State Courts, the partnership is pressing for public financing of judicial races or merit-based selection of judges, improved campaign disclosure laws and contribution limits.

Democratic pollster Stanley Greenberg, who conducted the surveys with Republican pollster Linda DiVall, said the findings exhibit "quite deep discontent with the judicial system - and above all the system of election that may influence the way justice is achieved."

In the 38 states that elect high court judges, donations surged 61 percent in the 2000 elections - to $ 45.6 million - over the campaign cycle two years earlier, the Brennan Center for Justice at the New York University Law School said in a report released last week by Justice at Stake during a Washington news conference.

"Over the past decade, special interests have been spending increasing millions to influence decisions and selection of judges," said Geri Palast, the partnership's executive director. "The cost of judicial campaigns is skyrocketing, and more judges are forced to raise money like politicians."

'Nastier, noisier, costlier'

Judge Wynn and Texas Supreme Court Chief Justice Tom Phillips traveled to Washington to lend their voices to the Justice at Stake campaign.

"Eighty-seven percent of state judges are elected, and those elections are becoming nastier, noisier and costlier," Justice Phillips said, adding that the problem goes well beyond the increasing cost and pressure on candidates to raise money. "It has become a nationwide problem because national special-interest groups are raising and spending money across state lines to influence judicial races in states that they think will have issues important to their own agendas."

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, which did not intervene in state judicial elections before 2000, spent more than $ 10 million on judicial races in a handful of states that year, the Brennan Center reported.

"Special interests are pouring millions of dollars into state judicial campaigns to serve their interests. And some of them are proudly proclaiming that they are indeed buying justice," said

American Bar Association president-elect Alfred P. Carlton Jr.

The chief problem, Justice Phillips and others said, is the growing public perception of inequality.
"It is very important not only that justice be done, but that it seems to be done," Justice Phillips said at a news conference with Mr. Carlton and other Justice at Stake campaign supporters.

The survey numbers, he said, "show starkly that while judges are having some doubts about the integrity of their own process, the electorate as a whole is having substantial doubt about whether or not our justice system can deliver the promise of equal justice to all."

The findings are based on a poll of 1,000 registered voters, and a separate mail-in survey completed by 2,428 state judges.

Justice Phillips, who has crusaded for public financing of judicial campaigns in Texas since the early 1980s, called for a "national re-examination" of how judges are selected.

In an interview, he said "some judges - very few" are influenced by political contributions.

"There are a few others who don't think they are, who don't realize they are," he said. For most, he stressed, "I don't think it's a problem."

The entire system, however, is tainted by the perception of influence buying, he said. And the door is opened, he said, to using the contributions as a political tool against judicial candidates.

One of his colleagues, Justice Priscilla Owen, who has been nominated by President Bush for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, has come under scrutiny for $ 8,600 in contributions she accepted from Enron. A ruling she authored two years later, in an arcane tax case, spared Enron $ 225,000 in taxes.

While that 1996 opinion was unanimous and tracked two earlier U.S. Supreme Court decisions, Senate Judiciary Committee Democrats have vowed to delve into the issue at her confirmation hearing, which is expected to be contentious.

Owen defended

Justice Phillips strongly defended her integrity.

The need to raise campaign contributions casts a negative pall on all judges, said Judge Wynn, the North Carolina appellate judge, acknowledging that most of his funds come from lawyers and business interests.

"While I believe that people who know me know that my commitment to being fair and impartial outweighs any potential influence that a political contribution would have, for those who do not [know me] they cannot be assured that monetary contributions do not influence judicial decisions," he said.

One solution, Justice Phillips said, would be public financing of campaigns. He has proposed that Texas bankroll public financing of campaigns by using an existing $ 200 lawyer occupation tax that raises $ 10 million annually. Merit selection of judges, rather than elections, would be another solution, he said.

Getting a public financing plan through the Texas Legislature is an uphill battle, Justice Phillips acknowledged.

"You have some very strong special interests right there on the ground vs. kind of a nebulous public desire for change without an organized focus to mobilize it," he said. "I think the odds are always against us in any single year, but long range it will happen."

Judiciary panel sets vote on Pickering nomination

Audrey Hudson
The Washington Times
February 22, 2002, Friday

The contentious confirmation of District Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals will get its first test next week when the Senate Judiciary Committee votes on the nomination.

"Hopefully, this destructive political process will stop," Rep. Charles W. "Chip" Pickering Jr., Mississippi Republican and son of the embattled nominee said yesterday.

The Senate panel has held two confirmation hearings on Judge Pickering's nomination, the most recent on Feb. 7, when he was grilled on his pro-life stance and civil rights record. Liberal organizations have tried to label Judge Pickering as a racist, but black leaders in Mississippi are vocally backing the nominee as a friend of their community. Supporters hope this will sway public opinion.

The vote is set for next Thursday.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican, is Judge Pickering's leading supporter in the Senate.

Mr. Lott's spokesman raised the possibility of repercussions if the judge is not confirmed.

"Senator Lott believes that Mr. Pickering is extremely qualified, and if he is not confirmed, it will not help the relationship and there could be consequences to those actions," Lott spokesman Ron Bonjean said.

REV_00140741

Republicans are concerned that dozens of extraneous questions forwarded to Judge Pickering by Democrats might delay the vote.

And if Democrats on the committee block the contentious nomination, Republicans would be forced to go through cumbersome procedures to force a vote on the Senate floor.

The full Senate can vote on a motion to discharge, which needs only a simple majority to pass, but a single senator can block the motion, triggering other procedures that can leave the nomination in limbo.

One senior Republican aide said there are possible Democrat swing votes on the committee, especially after the recent increased media attention, which has helped bolster support for Judge Pickering's nomination.

"If the vote were held right after the committee hearing, we would have lost, but the Democrats are getting pressure from their own press. We are better off today than we were a week ago," the aide said.

At least two Democrats have publicly stated they would vote for Judge Pickering in a full Senate vote: Zell Miller of Georgia and Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina. That would give Republicans the votes they need to win in an otherwise party-line vote.

Mr. Hollings dismissed charges that Judge Pickering had ties to segregationists. He told Roll Call, "We've got leaders in the Senate that used to be members of the Klan," an apparent reference to fellow Democratic Sen. Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, who was a member of the Ku Klux Klan more than 50 years ago.

The younger Mr. Pickering said he hopes this week's congressional recess served as a cooling-off period.

The New York Times on Sunday carried a report from Laurel, Miss., that said: "Here on the streets of his small, largely black hometown, far from the bitterness of partisan agendas and position papers, Charles Pickering is a widely admired figure of a very different present."

Judge Pickering yesterday was given a distinguished-service award by his former state Senate colleagues, and he touched on race relations during his acceptance speech.

"If we are to make progress in promoting racial harmony, first and foremost, we as a society, young and old, black and white, must make a willful, genuine and meaningful commitment to better race relations," he said.

"It will not be easy. It will require a willingness to get involved and take a stand, and if necessary, to pay a price," Judge Pickering said.

D. Brooks Smith Circuit Court Nominee Prepares for Hearing

REV_00140742

Milan Simonich
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
February 25, 2002 Monday

Inside the capital beltway, U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith is such a marked man that he might as well have a bull's-eye on his forehead.

Smith, a Republican from Altoona, has been nominated by President Bush for the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

A Washington, D.C.-based coalition of 27 environmental, women's, civil rights and disability rights groups will challenge his fitness for the court when his confirmation hearing begins tomorrow before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Critics of Smith, many aligned with Democratic Party interests, say he has been too quick to dismiss valid lawsuits brought by individuals against corporations, and too eager to travel to conferences paid for by businesses with interests in federal litigation. "Several of his opinions point out to us a judicial philosophy that favors wealthy, powerful parties over ordinary people," said Nan Aron, president of the Alliance for Justice, a national association of public civil rights interests.

But outside Washington's world of partisan politics, Smith seems to have no enemies, only admirers. Those who have watched him work say an exemplary 14-year record on the federal bench in Western Pennsylvania is being twisted by political opportunists.

His popularity outside the capital extends even to members of the opposing political party, who describe him as fair, hard-working and respectful to all.

"He is unpretentious and down-to-earth, a really nice person who is committed to the ideals of equal justice in the courts," said U.S. District Judge Anne E. Thompson, a Democrat on the New Jersey bench.

Pittsburgh lawyer John Bingler, whose own nomination for a federal judgeship was twice blocked by Republican Sen. Rick Santorum, would not comment on the politicking except to say that it should not stand in Smith's way.

"I think he should be confirmed. He's an excellent judge," Bingler said.

Smith, 50, is declining all interview requests while the confirmation process unfolds. He has been through it before, having been appointed to the U.S. District Court in 1988 by President Ronald Reagan.

Just about everybody in Smith's hometown of Tyrone in Blair County expected him to become the kind of man who one day would get a job offer from the president.

"Even in elementary school you just knew he was going to be something when he grew up," said Tom Rumberger, a classmate of Smith from kindergarten through high school. "He had the total respect of everybody, including the teachers. I don't know how many fourth-graders paid attention to the stock market, but he did.

"For me to say something negative about him, I'd have to make it up."

Smith was the product of a middle-class family. Friends said his father worked in the laboratory of the Tyrone paper mill, the area's major employer during the 1960s.

After high school, Smith went to Franklin & Marshall College in Lancaster, where his interest in a legal career solidified. He graduated from Dickinson School of Law in 1976 and landed a job that same year with the Altoona law firm of Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern. One of the principals is Republican state Sen. Bob Jubelirer, who is among the state's most prominent legislators.

Smith rose to managing partner of the firm, prosecuted criminal cases as a part-time assistant in the Blair County district attorney's office and set his sights on becoming a judge.

He succeeded in 1984, receiving an appointment to Blair County Common Pleas Court. Smith won election to the bench the following year, remaining until Reagan selected him for the federal court.

Those skeptical of his performance say they have uncovered evidence that he may not be impartial.

Aron points out that Smith has been reversed 52 times by the 3rd Circuit Court -- a higher rate than that of other Bush nominees for appellate judgeships. She says his performance in cases that were overturned -- some with stiff rebukes -- is at the heart of her concerns about his qualifications.

But the case that critics are likely to focus on during the confirmation process is one that Smith vacated.

It involved John Gardner Black, an investment adviser who was accused of defrauding Pennsylvania school districts of millions of dollars.

Smith presided over the case for a month in 1997, then removed himself. He cited his wife's job as vice president of an Altoona bank, where most of the missing money was held in Black's accounts. By then, critics said, Smith had issued an order that protected the bank from attempts by Black's victims to recover their money.

His detractors say he should have immediately recognized his potential for conflict and withdrawn.

Smith also has been criticized for appearing too cozy with the business community.

"He has taken more corporate-funded or privately funded judicial trips than just about any other judge in America," said Doug Kendall, executive director of Community Rights Counsel, a law firm in Washington that helps local governments in land-use cases.

Kendall counts a dozen such trips that Smith has made in the last nine years.

"Valid concerns are being raised by our groups about whether judges should be accepting gifts worth thousands of dollars from corporations and foundations that have an interest in federal court litigation," Kendall said.

Others say Smith's overall record is strong and should be examined in the context that he has made tens of thousands of judgments across his career.

"His decisions have not always been in my clients' favor, but they have always been well-reasoned," said Shelly Pagac, a Pittsburgh lawyer and co-president of the Women's Bar Association of Western Pennsylvania. "That's all you can ask of a judge -- to fairly assess your case."

John M. Burkoff, a Democrat who is an associate dean and law professor at the University of Pittsburgh, said Smith deserves a spot on the 3rd Circuit Court because he has proven himself competent and courteous in the most contentious situations.

"We know he is a fairly conservative judge, but that makes no difference so long as he is fair, and that is his reputation," Burkoff said. "He doesn't have an imperious judicial style. He's a decent man on the bench and that counts for a lot."

Aron is not willing to give Smith such a blanket endorsement. She said his record should be examined thoroughly in the confirmation process to determine if he has been as fair as his backers contend.

"The 3rd Circuit is a critically important court," she said. "That means it's critically important that the committee be absolutely sure that D. Brooks Smith would favor impartiality."

Politics plays key role in judicial confirmations

When the Senate Judiciary Committee holds a confirmation hearing Tuesday on the nomination of U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith, it will be a culmination of a battle that has centered on

Smith, whom President Bush named to a long-vacant spot on the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, has become a political football, according to some of the judge's supporters. The court, which sits in Philadelphia, hears appeals of federal cases from Delaware, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and the Virgin Islands.

Critics see it differently. They say their reservations about Smith's record are based on concerns about his ability to be a good judge and are not motivated by a desire to get back at the Republican Party for its delay of former President Clinton's judicial choices. The major complaint centers on whether Smith should have removed himself earlier from a case involving a the bank where his wife is vice president. The bank was accused of complicity in a scheme to defraud dozens of Pennsylvania schools and municipalities.

Smith also has been criticized for taking trips sponsored by organizations that are hostile to the environment.

"These are legitimate concerns that go to his fitness to be a judge," said Doug Kendall of the Community Rights Counsel, one of the groups that has raised concerns. "The ethics of a nominee matter."

Smith's supporters note that the Justice Department reviewed the allegations and found them baseless and unnecessary for an investigation.

"As outside liberal groups made these accusations, we reviewed the matter and there is no basis to the allegations and has been no investigation," Justice Department spokeswoman Barbara Comstock said.

Leahy's spokesman David Carle said Democrats had treated Republican nominees as fairly as the GOP had treated Clinton's choices and denied there is any effort to block Bush's nominees.

"The chairman is proceeding in good faith and we have confirmed 30 district court nominees and seven appeals court nominees since Democrats took control last year," Carle said. "By contrast, in the last year of the Clinton administration, the Republican-controlled Senate confirmed only 17 nominees."

Sen. Arlen Specter, a Judiciary Committee member, predicted it would "be a battle" to confirm Smith but that is to be expected in a closely divided Senate. The Senate has 50 Democrats, 49 Republicans and one independent.

Duquesne University law professor Ken Gormley, a Democrat who supports Smith's nomination, said that Smith "isn't the person that these groups should make their point with. He is a thoughtful, responsible judge."

"There were no violations of ethics. These are fringe groups doing the bidding of (Judiciary

REV_00140746

Committee Chairman) Pat Leahy and the Democrats. It is reprehensible," said Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa.

While Clinton was in office, Santorum and Specter worked out an agreement that allowed the senators to pick one judge for every three picked by Clinton.

That arrangement broke down when Clinton refused to nominate one of the senators' choices for a judgeship in Pittsburgh. Santorum in turn held up the confirmation of other judicial nominees.

Carle said Santorum "did what he could to keep the vacancies open" and therefore has little basis to complain about how the Democrats are handling nominees.

Santorum said he approved people who were selected by the joint committee that he and Specter set up to pick judges and "Clinton picked someone who wasn't on the list."

Gormley contends that until both parties make the process less politically charged, the main victims will be the public.

"It has reached the point where it has threatened the whole process just because special interest groups want to settle a few scores," he said.

Pickering Battles Face Decisions on Two Fronts

Paul Kane
Roll Call
February 25, 2002, Monday

With charges and countercharges flying from Mississippi to Capitol Hill, the father-son duo of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering and Rep. Chip Pickering (R-Miss.) may face their respective political days of reckoning this week.

In decisions that will have ripple effects throughout all three branches of the federal government, the Pickerings are engaged in racially charged fights, with interest groups on both sides mounting furious campaigns.

Judge Pickering, seeking an elevation to the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, has faced a nearly endless volley of charges that he has been racially insensitive as a state politician and on the federal bench. The Senate Judiciary Committee is tentatively slated to vote on Pickering Thursday, with his nomination desperately in need of support from one Democrat on the panel to gain a vote on the Senate floor. Rep. Pickering is facing a redistricting battle that will pit him against Rep. Ronnie Shows (D-Miss.) in the fall, but a legal fight between state and federal courts has not yet resolved the precise shape of the new district. If the Justice Department does not sign off on a state-backed plan by today, a three-judge federal panel has said it will impose its own district - which is much more favorable to Chip Pickering because of its lower percentage of voting-age black residents - by tomorrow, in time for the March 1 filing deadline.

While the two cases are seemingly independent of each other, the cast of characters waging fights over the Pickerings' futures are virtually the same, and each side has made vague allegations against the other about linking the two battles for its own advantage.

Rep. Bennie Thompson (D-Miss.), who has been the most outspoken Congressional Black Caucus opponent of Judge Pickering's and the CBC leader in the redistricting fight, went to great lengths to note that the redistricting plan favoring Republicans was designed by three GOP-nominated judges. One of the three, U.S. District Judge Henry Wingate, wrote a letter to the Judiciary Committee in support of Judge Pickering's nomination, and another, District Judge David Bramlett, serves with Wingate and Pickering on the same federal court.

"And now they craft a plan that's more favorable to their colleague's son than the [state-backed plan] that's under review by the Justice Department," Thompson said, adding that it's not too far a stretch to say the judges are seeking retribution for Democratic opposition to the judicial nomination. "It certainly could be made to [look] that way."

Rep. Pickering, who has been the most outspoken supporter on behalf of his father's nomination, has argued just the opposite, that Congressional Democrats are holding up Judge Pickering's nomination as leverage in the redistricting battle.

The nomination fight has become a pivotal one in the Senate, with Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) - a friend of Judge Pickering's for 30 years and former boss of Rep. Pickering - vowing retribution if Democrats defeat the judicial nomination. Some Senate Republicans have even talked of holding up all legislative matters through parliamentary tactics, freezing the Senate floor, if the Pickering nomination goes down, according to aides.

But interest groups from the People for the American Way to the NAACP have ratcheted up the pressure on Judiciary Democrats, arguing that Pickering's record as a state Senator and federal judge is replete with insensitivity to civil rights.

According to one aide to a Judiciary Democrat, the anti-Pickering coalition began a fax, phone and e-mail campaign Thursday, with form letters from across Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi accusing Pickering of "insensitive and extreme views."

Despite favorable stories in the national press about home-state support for Pickering among blacks, the coalition is arguing that those supporters only know Pickering as a person, not as a judge. "We're not looking into his heart, we're looking into his record," said Ralph Neas, president of People for the American Way.

Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) has scheduled a business meeting to vote on nominations Thursday, when it is "likely" Pickering's nomination will be handled, according to David Carle, Leahy's spokesman.

Aides and observers noted that a decision to hold a vote so quickly after the return from the Presidents' Day recess does not bode well for Pickering's chances. But, Carle stressed, "No final agenda [for the hearing] will be set until closer to Thursday."

By that time, Rep. Pickering's future may already be virtually certain. The Justice Department, under the Voting Rights Act, must approve any redistricting plan in Mississippi, and originally faced a deadline today for approving or rejecting the state-backed plan. But two weeks ago Justice's Civil Rights Division requested more information from Mississippi regarding its plan, which would leave a Pickering-Shows district with 37 percent of the voting-age population being African-American.

Justice thus created a new 60-day deadline for later in the spring, but the filing deadline for candidates continues to be March 1. The three-judge panel, however, has drawn up its own district - 30 percent African-American - and said that redistricting must be in place by the filing deadline, requiring the federal map to be imposed Tuesday if Justice does not clear the state-backed plan by today.

Thompson, Shows and Mississippi Democrats have accused Justice of intentionally delaying its decisions on the state plan to guarantee that the map more favorable to the GOPwould be imposed by the federal court.

If the redistricting fight isn't connected to the judicial battle, it is, at a minimum, dirty politics, they contend. "I have never seen such blatant political manipulation. Instead of enforcing the Voting Rights Act, they are carrying the water of Chip Pickering," said Rob McDuff, a Democratic attorney from Jackson, Miss.

Democrats fear that a district with only a 30 percent African-American voting population may not even be competitive for Shows, whose current district has a population of 43 percent black voters.

Republicans contend that the plan violates the civil rights laws because it was written up by a local judge, an African-American voted into office as an independent from an overwhelmingly Democratic region. Alocal judge should not be drawing up a statewide Congressional map, Republicans contend, an allegation Justice has been inclined to listen to so far. "That's something that has never been done before," said Dan Nelson, a department spokesman.

Nelson said the various political scenarios will not be a factor in the decision, but he couldn't guarantee a decision will come in time to avoid the federal judges' takeover of the redistricting process.

Battle brewing on Capitol Hill over Bush's nomination of Charles Pickering to Federal Appeals Court

Democrats plan to block Pickering

Joyce Howard Price
The Washington Times
February 25, 2002, Monday

Sen. Dianne Feinstein says she anticipates all 10 Democrats on the Judiciary Committee will oppose the nomination offederal judge Charles Pickering to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, in which case the panel will not move it to the Senate floorfor a vote.

"I will not vote for him. ... I believe that there is virtually unanimous opinion on the Democratic side of the JudiciaryCommittee that he will not be confirmed. In other words, he will not be voted out of the Judiciary Committee," the California Democrat said yesterday on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"I've looked rather carefully at his background, and I think you have a person who has very strong right-wing views, bothpolitically and personally. ... I think that people on our side believe that it would be a tremendous mistake to put someone as polarizing in this position now. So I believe he will not be confirmed," she said.

Sen. Sam Brownback of Kansas, one of nine Republicans on the Judiciary Committee, said on the same talk show: "I thinkhe should be confirmed ... this is a good man that people are really trying to smear. ... I think you're going to see a lot of peopletaking actions to try to move that [nomination] on forward some other way." National organizations such as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored people (NAACP) and People forthe American Way are waging a bitter campaign to block the promotion of Judge Pickering to the appeals court. They describethe white Republican, who sits on the U.S. District Court in Hattiesburg, Miss., as being anti-civil rights.

However, blacks who live in Judge Pickering's hometown of Laurel, Miss., deny those charges, citing work he has done to improve both educational and economic opportunities for low-income blacks. Even editorial writers for liberal newspapers such as the New York Times and The Washington Post have expressed concern about the viciousness of the attack on the Pickering nomination. On "Meet the Press," host Tim Russert read from an editorial in The Washington Post that said Judge Pickering's opponents"have tried to paint him as a barely reconstructive segregationist" and have "plucked a number of unconnected incidents from a long career" to arrive at that portrayal. Asked about that, Mrs. Feinstein said she worries the judge might not be able to put aside his "very strong right-wing views"over the course of a lifetime appointment to the Fifth Circuit. "This is a very sensitive circuit. It represents people of color in a major way," she said.

The California Democrat pointed out that President Bush "did not have a large mandate" in the 2000 election. "There is no mandate to skew the courts to the right. And so I think you are going to see a Judiciary Committee that's really going to be looking for mainstream judges. And those judges that they find outside the mainstream I do not believe will have Democratic support."

Senate Republican leader Trent Lott has said Judge Pickering will be confirmed "or else."

Mr. Brownback said yesterday: "I would hope we wouldn't have a litmus test on judges,"

John Edwards and the Fresh-Face Factor

George F. Will
The Washington Post
February 24, 2002
Editorial

John Edwards, freshman Democratic senator from North Carolina, is thinking of running for president in 2004, which has some of the political cognoscenti wondering, What can he be thinking? Perhaps this: I am from a crucial region, my potential rivals for the nomination are un-ntimidating, and by January 2004 I will have spent as many years in elective office -- five -- as George W. Bush had spent by January 2000.

Edwards is handsome, almost too much so. His boyish features are remarkably unmarked by life, although his life has been scarred by tragedy -- the death, at age 16, of his son in an automobile accident. His prettiness -- "sexiest politician," says People magazine -- may cause suspicions that he is all surface. But such suspicions can be quickly banished. Bush's initial weakness was the suspicion, reinforced by his syntactical fender-benders, that he lacked gravitas. That weakness is, Edwards says, "gone forever." The election of New Yorker Grover Cleveland in 1884 was the first Democratic presidential victory after the Civil War, and Northeasterners provided seven of the Democrats' next eight victories (all but that of Missouri's Truman in 1948) through 1960 (Cleveland again in 1892, New Jersey's Wilson twice, New York's Roosevelt four times and Massachusetts' Kennedy). However, Democrats have not elected a Northeastern president since Edwards was 7 years old -- Kennedy. The only Northeasterner they have nominated since 1960 was Massachusetts' Michael Dukakis. Memories of 1988 will not help Massachusetts' Sen. John Kerry in 2004.

Since 1960, Democrats have won just four presidential elections, all with candidates from states of the Confederacy -- Johnson from Texas, Carter from Georgia and Clinton from Arkansas. However, after the Clinton experience, the country may not warm to another Southern smoothie. Edwards, a trial lawyer who honed his political skills by connecting with juries (he was one of the first to use focus groups to help with jury selection), is smooth as a Dairy Queen. Coming months will tell if he is more nourishing.

He does understand the importance of Democratic nominees being perceived as sharing some of the South's cultural conservatism. "We can't win elections on cultural issues," he said over lunch recently, "but we sure can lose them on cultural issues." However, Edwards is a lock-step member of the herd of independent minds -- mostly Northern liberals -- currently slandering a judicial nominee from Mississippi, Charles Pickering, who offends Northern liberals, not Mississippi blacks.

Michael Barone, author of The Almanac of American Politics, says several developments may nudge Democrats rightward. Blacks, the most loyal Democrats, are no longer a growing fraction of the electorate. Neither are the major metropolitan areas. And the places where such favorite Democratic issues as abortion rights and gun control are salient -- California, New Jersey and most major metropolitan areas -- are already solidly Democratic.

Barone notes that if the allocation of electoral votes among the states in 2000 had been what it will be in 2004 on the basis of the 2000 census, Bush would have won not 271 but 278 electoral votes.

Furthermore, a poll done for House Democrats suggests that the "halo" surrounding Bush, and the way the war on terrorism has eclipsed issues usually helpful to Democrats (health care, education, Social Security, the environment), pose problems for Democrats in 22 marginal seats crucial to Democratic hopes of recapturing the House. Such districts are generally more conservative than safe Democratic districts. But Edwards could gain from this. If Democrats fail, for a fourth consecutive time, to recapture the House, their frustration might make them more willing to look at a very fresh face in 2004. But his performance concerning Pickering suggests that although his face is fresh, his philosophy is a stale orthodoxy.

An Unworthy Judicial Nomination

The New York Times
February 24, 2002, Sunday
Editorial

A heated debate is shaping up over Judge Charles Pickering, President Bush's choice to fill a vacancy on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. Mr. Pickering's critics have implied that he is a racist. His supporters have responded that he has warm relations with blacks in his hometown, Laurel, Miss., and that he is being smeared for ideological reasons. We believe that Mr. Pickering bears no animus toward blacks and that charges of racism have no place in this debate. But based on the serious questions raised about his record as a judge, we urge the Senate Judiciary Committee to vote down his nomination.

In his 11 years as a federal trial-court judge, Mr. Pickering has displayed an undue skepticism toward cases involving civil rights. In voting rights cases, he has been troubled by well-settled legal principles like "one person, one vote" and overly concerned about the burdens that Congress, in enacting the Voting Rights Act, placed on local government. In employment discrimination cases, he has been too willing to accept employers' arguments that such suits are based on disgruntlement, rather than valid claims. He has also shown a hostility to awarding attorneys' fees in civil rights cases; without the fees, few such cases could be brought. Mr. Pickering, a friend and ally of Trent Lott, the Mississippi senator and minority leader, is also well outside the mainstream on issues of reproductive choice. He was a driving force behind the Republicans' decision to put a plank in their 1976 party platform calling for an anti-abortion amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. Pickering's views on civil rights and abortion would be out of place on any Court of Appeals. But his positions would be particularly troubling on the Fifth Circuit, which takes in Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas. It is among the poorest and most heavily minority circuits, and the legislatures in those states have gone as far as any in imposing parental consent and other limitations on women's access to abortion.

The Senate's inquiry into Mr. Pickering's nomination has also uncovered several ethically questionable actions. In 1994, he made contact with the Justice Department, in an extraordinary one-sided communication by a judge, to lobby prosecutors to seek a lighter sentence against one of three men accused of burning a cross in front of, and firing bullets into, the home of a mixed-race couple. Mr. Pickering's critics have also charged that he misled Congress at his last confirmation hearings about contacts he had in the 1970's with the Sovereignty Commission, which worked to preserve segregation in Mississippi. Most recently, Mr. Pickering asked lawyers who appeared in his courtroom to write letters in support of his nomination, a request that creates an appearance of coercion and judicial bias.

In pushing for Mr. Pickering's confirmation, Senate Republicans have disingenuously charged Democrats with moving too slowly on judicial nominations. There are, indeed, an unacceptably high number of vacancies on the federal bench, but many of those openings are the result of Republicans' own calculated inaction on Clinton nominees.

Moreover, the real fault for the slow pace lies with the Bush administration. Judge Pickering is the first of a new wave of more than 50 judicial nominees the Senate is being asked to evaluate. Many of these nominations appear problematic and potentially controversial. If President Bush is committed to speeding up confirmations, he should name men and women who have distinguished records and do not have the hard-right views and ethical problems that Mr. Pickering does.

A confirmation for Pickering; How long must we pay for the sins of our past?

Stan Tiner
Chicago Tribune
February 24, 2002 Sunday

Away down South ". . . in the land of cotton, old times there are not forgotten . . . " True. Those opening words to "Dixie" capture the spirit not only of the Old South, but of many contemporary Southerners as well.

"Forget? Never!" the bumper stickers say.

But the same could be said of folks in Chicago or New York or Los Angeles. When people in those places think of the South, especially in a political or cultural context, those thoughts run through the Civil War and the civil rights years. The mind's eye sees names like Jefferson Davis and Bull Connors, and they see George Wallace standing in the schoolhouse door.

As a Southerner who has spent the better part of 30 years editing newspapers in Louisiana, Alabama and Mississippi, I bear witness to the fact racism still lives in these parts.

Does racism still live in Mississippi in 2002? Of course it does.

Sadly, too, it lives elsewhere, in those Northern cities named, and in all the rest of America as well.

This nation still bleeds for the sin of slavery and for the omission of deeds we should have done, and the commission of others we should not have done in those intervening years.

The river of pain flowing from that original sin sometimes ebbs, and sometimes rises, but it is never far from our consciousness or our conscience.

Charles Pickering, a 64-year-old federal district judge who hails from Jones County in South Mississippi, can attest to that fact. President Bush has nominated him to a seat on the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit in New Orleans. For those who oppose him he is a tempting target, for all of those ghosts of Mississippi's past come suddenly to life with the awful thoughts of night riders, nooses and burning crosses.

Judge Pickering's own words and actions four decades ago have become the thread upon which his opposition seeks to deny him confirmation.

Opponents such as the NAACP and the Congressional Black Caucus have cited several concerns with the nominee, but two incidents seem to raise the most serious questions involving his fitness for the appeals court judgeship.

In 1959, while a student a the University of Mississippi Law School, Pickering wrote a Law Review article examining interracial marriage. The article explored how the law should be amended "if it is to serve the purpose that the Legislature undoubtedly intended it to serve."

In 1964, the judge switched to the Republican Party, he later said, because of the "humiliation and embarrassment" he felt had been heaped on Mississippi when President Lyndon Johnson asked the all-white state Democratic delegation to give up two seats to blacks from the "Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party."

Today he regrets those words, utterances that can never be fully removed from the history of one man's life.
Perfection is a high standard. Charles Pickering did not achieve it.

Can any of us say we have?

REV_00140754

But since that long-ago day and those failed utterances, he has been transformed. One cannot say for sure that he has had a change of heart, but of certainty it can be said he has been a changed man.

Since 1964 his public record has been exemplary by any standard.

He has courageously stood up to the Ku Klux Klan's imperial wizard, a stand that contributed to his subsequent defeat as district attorney.

He defended African-Americans in criminal cases that other white attorneys would not handle. He has worked with University of Mississippi Chancellor Robert Khayat to establish an Institute of Racial Reconciliation at Ole Miss and he serves on that board today.

In the cauldron of this firestorm over his nomination, he is supported by the largely black community in his hometown, and by most black leaders in his home state, those who have seen his actions up close for these many years, voices with great moral authority on such matters, including Charles Evers, brother of slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers.

There is a plague of piousness afoot in our land today as politicians preen and pontificate before the cameras of so many committee rooms, preaching and prattling to cater to the public opinion of the moment.
Their sermons often seem more the words of the Pharisees than the thoughts of pure hearts. It is true of those who have cast their stones at Judge Pickering.

You wonder if Abraham Lincoln or Hugo Black were seeking confirmation from these fellows if either could stand the scrutiny of these modern Jacobins.

Lincoln's own dreadful words would lash him like a whip . . . words so awful they could not be printed today without stirring pain and bitterness. Certainly Black, a former Klansman, could not have stood their test.

Yet one--Lincoln--many have said was this country's greatest president; the Great Emancipator--the man who freed the slaves and whose leadership maintained the Union. And the other, Justice Black, became one of the leading civil libertarians in U.S. history, rendering opinions whose breadth and majesty extended the rights of African-Americans to their most expansive state.

The young American nation often embraced the idea of redemption, a sense of charity that extends to those who have a change of heart, and who thereafter act in a way that is consistent with the "new way" they have embraced.

Charles Pickering should be confirmed because he is a good man whose past service is proof that he will render justice fairly to all, and whose personal courage and record have earned him not only the nomination of his president, but the approbation of his countrymen.

Faulty logic on Pickering

Frank Roso
The Dallas Morning News
February 23, 2002, Saturday

EXCERPT

I have read several columns declaring that Judge Charles Pickering, nominated by President Bush for the federal bench, should not be awarded that post. The reasoning given relies on secondhand information regarding the judge's alleged racial bias while serving in official capacity in his home state. The events took place decades ago and the judge, by most accounts, appears to have become quite an advocate of racial equality.

Apparently, the judge's opponents don't believe "a leopard can change its spots." Such proclamations are amazing coming from a party, the Democrats, that counts among its members a former member of the Ku Klux Klan, Sen. Robert Byrd.

Borking Atticus Finch?

Richard E. Marsh Jr.
The Washington Times
February 23, 2002, Saturday

Clearly, there are many in Laurel, Miss., who regard Judge Charles Pickering as a latter-day Atticus Finch ("Borking Judge Pickering," Editorials, Feb. 21).

Sen. John Edwards, North Carolina Democrat, would have accused Atticus Finch of misconduct for sitting on the jail's front porch and staring down the lynch mob, based on the treatment he gave Judge Pickering.

Nomination trapped by the Jeffords effect

Terry Eastland
The Washington Times
February 22, 2002, Friday

Last May, even as Vermont Sen. James Jeffords of Vermont prepared to leave the Republican Party, President

Bush decided to nominate U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering to the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, which encompasses Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi. Judge Pickering has endured not one but two Senate Judiciary Committee hearings. Today, his nomination is in doubt. And the main reason it is can be traced to Mr.

REV_00140756

Jeffords' departure from the GOP.

Before he left, the two parties had the same number of senators: 50. But the GOP controlled the Senate on the strength of Vice President Dick Cheney's authority to cast tie-breaking votes. Mr. Jeffords' departure - he became an independent - reduced the Republican number to 49. The Democrats thus gained control, an event of predictable consequence for judicial appointments. Most judicial nominees are confirmed regardless of who controls the White House or the Senate. But when, as now, there is divided government - with one party in control of the White House and the other the Senate - more nominations are likely to be contested and defeated than when the same party controls both.

Had Sen. Jeffords remained a Republican, Judge Pickering would have been confirmed long ago. He was unanimously confirmed for the district court in 1990, and the American Bar Association has rated him "well qualified." Even now, if he could be voted out of committee, he would stand a good chance of winning confirmation, since two Democrats - Fritz Hollings and Zell Miller - have voiced their support.

Judge Pickering's problem, however, is how to get from here to there - from the committee, where the Democrats hold a 10-to-9 edge, to the Senate floor.

The Judiciary Committee is territory patrolled by Democrats Patrick Leahy of Vermont (the chairman), Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts, Joseph Biden of Delaware, Herb Kohl and Russell Feingold of Wisconsin, Dianne Feinstein of California, Charles Schumer of New York, Richard Durbin of Illinois, Maria Cantwell of Washington and John Edwards of North Carolina, most of whom are exquisitely attuned to the imprecations of left-wing interest groups, such as People for the American Way and Alliance for Justice. Those groups have pushed hard, and so far successfully, against the nomination.

Judge Pickering himself has the misfortune of having virtually invisible White House support. He was chosen largely out of deference to a senator, his longtime friend Trent Lott, who began pitching for the judge's elevation to the 5th Circuit when he was Senate majority leader.

Had Mr. Lott not lobbied for Judge Pickering's nomination - announced last May 25, one day after Sen. Jeffords fled the GOP - Mr. Bush probably would have selected someone else. Judge Pickering, after all, is a few months away from 65, the age a judge may take senior status. Nor, his ABA rating aside, is he a legal superstar, someone likely to shape the law of the 5th Circuit. "We did this solely to please the then majority leader," one administration official told me. "It's his guy, and it's up to him to get him confirmed."

That task would be far easier were the "then majority leader" still the majority leader.

Rarely making headlines, the Pickering nomination has become a series of stories within a story. Some Democrats are motivated against the nomination because they don't like the way Trent Lott ran the Senate. Others are inclined against the nomination as payback to Republicans for their sometimes slow processing of Clinton judicial nominees, including three for the 5th Circuit who failed even to get hearings.

Also, there are Clinton Justice Department lawyers who butted heads with Judge Pickering over their sentencing recommendations in a cross-burning case and are laboring against him behind the scenes. And, of course, there are the liberal interest groups, back after eight years on the sidelines, picking at Judge Pickering as a warm-up for the real battle - over a Bush nominee to the Supreme Court.

Substantively, the case against the nominee is unimpressive. He grew up in segregated Mississippi, but the left's effort to portray him as "insensitive" to civil rights is misguided and unfair: In 1967, as an elected county prosecutor, Mr. Pickering testified against the imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan, an act of moral courage that cost him his office. Judge Pickering does hold conservative political views. But, contrary to concerns voiced by the law firm of Leahy, Kennedy, Biden et al., his record on the bench isn't that of a judge who fails to distinguish between his own personal and political views and what the law says.

Of course, none of that may matter, since the Democrats have the power to defeat his nomination. This is the Jeffords effect, and the jury is out on whether Trent Lott can overcome it. He might, but probably not unless Mr. Bush, stingy with expenditures of his considerable political capital, finally decides to join the battle.

Judge Smith's Ruling In No Way Hint at Favoritism Toward Bank in Black

Richard A. Finberg
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
February 22, 2002 Friday

As lead plaintiffs' counsel in various litigations relating to John Gardner Black, I wanted to share my firsthand views respecting the Post-Gazette's front-page article criticizing Judge D. Brooks Smith's rulings in the Securities and Exchange Commission case against Black (whose scheme resulted in losses of about $70 million to school districts and others) ("Black Case Could Sideswipe Nominee," Feb. 20). Unfortunately, the article is based on a mistaken fact, and therefore is unfairly critical of Judge Smith.

The article implies that Judge Smith should have realized sooner that Mid-State Bank was a potential defendant and therefore should have recused himself sooner due to stock investments in the bank and his wife's job in another area of the bank. The article states incorrectly that Judge Smith ruled in a manner that "would have effectively reduced Mid-State's liability and forced districts with assets elsewhere to subsidize the losses of districts whose assets were held at Mid-State." Respectfully, the Post-Gazette has misconstrued Judge Smith's ruling. Specifically, on Oct. 27, 1997, Judge Smith entered an order approving the joint motion of the trustee (Richard Thornburgh) and the SEC to make an interim distribution of assets over which Black's companies (Devon or FMS) had investment authority. Under this order, those with funds held at banks other than Mid-State Bank, including those with repurchase agreements, would receive up to 50 percent of the market value of the funds held in their name, while those with funds in the pooled FMS account at Mid-State Bank would receive 50 percent of their pro rata share of the market value of such pooled funds.

This ruling therefore did not shift losses between Mid-State Bank customers and customers of other banks, but simply allowed all school districts to receive, on an interim basis, one-half of the current actual value of their funds in their respective banks. In fact, because the approximate $70 million collateral shortfall investment was in the FMS account at Mid-State Bank, school districts with deposits at Mid-State Bank would receive only about 25 percent of their investments in the interim distribution, while those with accounts elsewhere would receive 50 percent.

The Oct. 27, 1997, order provided a 10-day period to file objections to the scheduled distribution amounts. Several objections to the specific amounts were filed, as Judge Smith contemplated, and on Dec. 4, 1997, U.S. District Judge Donetta Ambrose entered an order that was virtually identical to Judge Smith's Oct. 27 order, except for technical corrections in the distribution schedule. In upholding Judge Ambrose's order, the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals was not in any sense reversing Judge Smith. The Post-Gazette's conclusions that Judge Smith's ruling "did not stand" and that Judge Ambrose ruled that Judge "Smith had improperly combined the Mid-State and non Mid-State assets" are erroneous.

This firm has since Oct. 15, 1997, played a lead and ongoing role in numerous litigations in state and federal courts (including the bankruptcy court) involving the Black fiasco, and our co-counsel in the Mid-State Bank litigation, Richard R. Nelson II and Cohen & Grigsby, was involved from the outset, immediately after the SEC obtained the asset freeze on Sept. 26, 1997. From this extensive involvement, we are not aware of any impropriety or even appearance of impropriety on the part of Judge Smith, and contrary to the Post-Gazette story, Judge Smith has made no rulings in these proceedings that would even hint that he favored Mid-State Bank.

Nomination deserves legitimate review

Philip Gailey
St. Petersburg Times
February 24, 2002, Sunday

If you wonder why fewer and fewer people are willing to subject themselves to the Senate confirmation process, consider the smear campaign being waged against Charles Pickering Sr. In 1990, the Mississippi lawyer was nominated by President George Bush to be a federal district court judge. His nomination won the unanimous approval of the Senate Judiciary Committee and the full Senate. Now Pickering has been nominated for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals by President George W. Bush, and the opposition is vicious. There are legitimate reasons for why the Senate should deny Pickering this promotion. However, those reasons have little or nothing to do with the ugly campaign being conducted by liberal interest groups bent on destroying his reputation. Pickering is a conservative Republican who has served on the federal district court without particular distinction. He is neither the progressive his defenders say he is nor the Neanderthal his opponents make him out to be. He has a bad habit of injecting his personal views into legal opinions on controversial issues, and some of his opinions suggest that he is not entirely comfortable with key principles of civil rights law, although he generally respects the precedents established by higher courts. His primary qualification appears to be his close friendship with Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott. The president could have come up with a better choice, and the Senate has every right to insist that he do so.

That People for the American Way and other liberal groups have played the race card against Pickering - while denying that they are doing any such thing - only further degrades a judicial confirmation process that has become a nasty arena for advancing political and ideological agendas. The way the process works these days is, interest groups comb through a nominee's work and his personal life looking for anything that can be spinned against him. The press reports on its findings, too, often without bothering to check the facts, and by the time the Senate Judiciary Committee holds a confirmation hearing, the wounded nominee limps into the room on the defensive as senators move in for the kill. Both parties play this game, by the way.

The Washington Post, no advocate for Pickering, expressed its disgust with the ugliness of the campaign against him in a recent editorial: "His critics have focused for the most part not on his qualifications, temperament, approach to judging or on the quality of his judicial work. The judge's opponents, rather, have tried to paint him as a barely reconstructed segregationist. To do so, they have plucked a number of unconnected incidents from a long career: a law review article from 1959 on the state's antimiscegenation statute, written when Judge Pickering was a law student; his incidental contacts as a state legislator in the 1970s with the Mississippi state Sovereignty Commission; and his handling of a cross-burning case in his court a few years back, to cite a few examples. None of these incidents, when examined closely, amounts to much, but opponents string them together, gloss over their complexities and self-righteously present a caricature of an unworthy candidate."

Jonathan Groner of the Legal Times did an analysis of Pickering's rulings and talked to African-American leaders in his community and state. He found that Pickering and his record are far more complicated than his liberal critics suggest.

While the national NAACP opposes Pickering's nomination, many prominent blacks in Mississippi support it. They say they do not recognize the man Washington interest groups are accusing of "insensitivity" (no one uses the word "racist") on civil rights. The Charles Pickering they know is the young lawyer who, in the early 1960s, helped send a Ku Klux Klan leader to prison even though it cost him re-election as a local prosecutor. He is the federal judge who has worked with local civic leaders to keep young African-Americans out of the criminal justice system. Long before he became a federal judge, he was involved in racial reconciliation efforts, and from the bench he once rebuked an attorney who brought up a plaintiff's homosexuality during a fraud trial. "Homosexuals are as much entitled to be protected from fraud as are any other human beings," the judge told the attorney.

One of the African-Americans in Mississippi who has come to Pickering's defense is James Charles Evers, the brother of the slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers. Writing in the Wall Street Journal, Evers said of Pickering's civil rights record: "He has taken tough stands at tough times in the past, and the treatment he and his record are receiving at the hands of certain interest groups is shameful."

His opponents say Pickering is hostile to employment discrimination claims. In one case they cite, two blacks who owned a grocery store sued a supplier under civil rights laws for cutting off their credit. Pickering ruled in favor of the supplier, finding no evidence of discrimination. His critics say they have less problem with his decision in this case than with the "harsh" language Pickering used in his opinion. He wrote: "When an adverse action is taken affecting one covered by (civil rights) laws, there is a tendency on the part of the person affected to spontaneously react that discrimination caused the action. All of us have difficulty accepting the fact that we sometimes create our own problems."

The Legal Times said that what the judge's liberal critics fail to mention was that "the supplier canceled the credit terms after both store owners were arrested and indicted for allegedly threatening to murder a federal official. (They were later acquitted.)"
The Pickering nomination is the first major showdown between the president and Senate Democrats over the shape of the federal judiciary. If the Senate rejects the nomination, it should do so for legitimate reasons - and there are some - and not on the basis of a campaign of distortion and innuendo being waged by liberal interest groups. Pickering is not entitled to a seat on the appeals court, but he is entitled to a fair hearing.

Senators Sam Brownback, Republican of Kansas, and Dianne Feinstein, Democrat of California, discuss the nomination of Judge Charles Pickering to the Supreme Court, and the issue of cloning

MR. RUSSERT: We are back. Senators are welcome. Let me move first to the appointment, the nomination of Charles Pickering, a federal judge to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, a very important judiciary branch in our country. Senator Feinstein, you're on the Judiciary Committee. Will you vote for Charles Pickering?

SEN. DIANNE FEINSTEIN, (D-Calif.): No, I will not vote for him. I did have the privilege of chairing his hearing, his second hearing, which was a very full hearing. I believe that there's virtually unanimous opinion on the Democratic side of the Judiciary Committee that he will not be confirmed. In other words, he will not voted out of the Judiciary Committee.

MR. RUSSERT: So, all 10 Democrats will oppose him? SEN. FEINSTEIN: I believe so. Now, you know, obviously, that can change, and I think that this is a recommended appointment that has just been enormously polarizing. And, you know, there isn't a--it's very hard because, obviously, he's a sitting federal court judge. But the views of people are really enormous. It's a polarized community out there. You have every chapter--106 chapters in Mississippi--of the NAACP opposing him, including, his own chapter in Laurel, Mississippi. I think he's had a record of involving some of his personal views and his opinions, and, of course, when he was in public office, he took extraordinary right-wing positions on issues. This is a very sensitive circuit. It represents people of color in a major way. It used to be sort of a breakthrough circuit, in terms of securing rights for people, and it's become much, much more conservative.

I think that people on our side believe that it would be a tremendous mistake to put someone as polarizing in this position now. So I believe he will not be confirmed.

MR. RUSSERT: Senator Brownback.

SEN. SAM BROWNBACK, (R-Kan.): Well, I think he should be confirmed. And I'd sure like us to start getting at least a few judges confirmed. There are over 100 judicial positions, federal district courts, circuit court judge positions that are open in the country today. Judges have been confirmed at a rate of less than 40 percent during the Clinton or first Bush--term Bush One, if you will. We need to get some judges out there and confirmed in positions, if for no other reason than for homeland security, so we can deal with judicial issues coming forward. And they've been continually held on up. Judge Pickering...

MR. RUSSERT: But both parties did that. When President Clinton...

SEN. FEINSTEIN: That's correct. That's correct.

MR. RUSSERT: ...from '95 to 2000, 35 percent of Clinton's appointments to the court of appeals were blocked.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: And then 65 percent the next year.

SEN. BROWNBACK: If you're looking, though, at a comparable period of time, under George Bush, the president now, Bush 43rd, as it was during President Clinton's first years in office, you had a far greater number of people confirmed at that period of time. And plus, the Democrats at that point in time, which--we used to point this out greatly about the number of positions that are open, 100 federal district court and circuit court judge positions that are open. That really is untenable, and it shouldn't continue.

MR. RUSSERT: As for Judge Pickering, let me just ask one question on that that I found quite striking. He has been reversed 26 times.

SEN. BROWNBACK: Out of about 4,009 cases.

MR. RUSSERT: But what's important here is 15 of those cases he was reversed because he did not accept well-settled principles of law. Judge Edith Brown Clement, who's also in that district, who was put on the bench, extremely conservative, but not opposed, was never reversed on issues of well-settled principles of law. Does that bother you?

SEN. BROWNBACK: And--well, how many total cases, Tim? I mean, I've practiced law. How many total cases? I mean, I think we have about 4,000 cases that you're talking about.

MR. RUSSERT: But well-settled principle law is...

SEN. BROWNBACK: Well...

MR. RUSSERT: ...as a lawyer, as you well know, is very, very important because...

SEN. BROWNBACK: And it's also in the view of the beholder, well-settled principles of law. I mean...

MR. RUSSERT: But a denial of legal precedent is an indication that someone is not willing to accept legal precedent, which suggests, or indicates, perhaps, their personal opinions are being woven in.

SEN. BROWNBACK: Well, out of what percentage is he not willing to accept? And, plus, if I could submit to you, as a lawyer, the issues of well-settled principles of law is open to definition by lawyers, that one would say this is well-settled, others would not. You know, about 26 cases out of 4,000--I would say that the man is very willing to accept well-settled principled cases of law. Plus, you might recall that we went through some of these same sort of arguments with Attorney General John Ashcroft. People said, "OK, he's going to insert his own personal opinions in these cases." He testified in committee under oath, "I'm not going to do that. This is what the law is. I will enforce the law even if my personal opinion is to differ on that." And I think it's very clear that what you have here is an honorable man, son in the United States Congress, as well, been sitting on the federal bench for some period of time--this is a good man that people are really trying to smear in a way that is not becoming of the institution, and yet it seems to be the way that is evolving around here.

MR. RUSSERT: If the Judiciary Committee rejects Judge Pickering by a vote of 10-to-9, what happens?

SEN. BROWNBACK: I think you're going to see a lot of people taking actions to try to move that on forward some other way, to see if we can bring pressure to bear on the committee, and to try to press the committee to start getting more judicial nominations in total, moving on through the process. And we can do it.

MR. RUSSERT: Senator Lott has said, "Pickering will be confirmed or else." What does "or else" mean?

SEN. BROWNBACK: I can't speak for Trent, what he's saying on that. But the Senate is virtually evenly divided, and we really do need to be working together to be able to get things on through because we've got a lot of major legislation, passed the House, been held up in the Senate.

MR. RUSSERT: Senator Feinstein, let me pick up on a point that Senator Brownback raised and that is the destruction of judicial nominees. This is what The Washington Post had to say. They said there are a lot of grounds to oppose Pickering. But "...opposing a nominee should not mean destroying him. And the attack on Judge Pickering has become an ugly affair. His critics have focused for the most part not on his qualifications, temperament, approach to judging or on the quality of his judicial work. The judge's opponents, rather, have tried to paint him as a barely reconstructed segregationist. To do so, they have plucked a number of unconnected incidents from a long career...None of these incidents, when examined closely, amounts to much, but opponents string them together, gloss over their complexities and self-righteously present a caricature of an unworthy candidate."

Reaction?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Well, my reaction is this, and I've looked rather carefully at his background, and I think you have a person who has very strong right-wing views, both politically and personally. The question always comes: Can you put those views entirely aside? This is a lifetime appointment. If you can't be assured that the individual is really going to put those views aside, what happens is two years into the term those views creep forward again. And, generally, when you say, "Well, we're going to follow precedent," there are enough edges around precedent that an individual's views do come into it. That's my finding after nearly a decade on that committee.

I think there's another thing. President Bush did not have a large mandate. There is no mandate, in my view, to skew the courts to the right. And so I think you're going to see a Judiciary Committee that's really going to be looking for mainstream judges, and those judges that they find outside of the mainstream I do not believe will have Democratic support.

MR. RUSSERT: If the Judiciary Committee votes against Pickering 10-to-9, is the nomination dead?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: I believe so.

REV_00140764

MR. RUSSERT: There's no way to bring it to the floor?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: No. I do not believe there is, unless there's a vote to bring it to the floor. If the committee wants to keep it in the committee, the committee can do so. If there is a separate vote to bring it to the floor, then it will go to the floor.

MR. RUSSERT: Would that happen, a vote would go to the floor without recommendation or a negative recommendation?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Well, I can't say for sure. I don't know. We have only, you know, discussed this informally amongst ourselves, so I can't answer that.

SEN. BROWNBACK: And I would hope we wouldn't have litmus tests on judges. It used to be that, OK, Ronald Reagan was accused of a litmus test on judge. We shouldn't have a litmus test from the left or the right on judges. And I think it'd be fair to say that that should be a standard for both sides.

MR. RUSSERT: Let me turn to another...

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Let me just say one thing 'cause I can't let that one go. This isn't a federal district court. This is an appellate court. For most people, the appellate courts are very much like the Supreme Court. They decide the cases. There are big cases to be decided. There are points that many of us feel passionately about, one of them being Roe vs. Wade. Sam and I would disagree on Roe vs. Wade. I don't want to see Roe overturned. I'm in a position where I'm going to be very careful that a judge that I vote for to go to a circuit court will not do that. And I think I have every right to do so. It's not a question of a litmus test. It's a question of following established law and keeping that law intact.

SEN. BROWNBACK: I think that was defined as a litmus test under Ronald Reagan what Senator Feinstein just articulated.

MR. RUSSERT: We want to come back and talk about cloning. We're going to take a quick break. Another complicated controversial issue, cloning, either reproductive or therapeutic, right after this.

What's the "Buzz," Fred?

BARNES: You know, Senate Democrats on the Judiciary Committee are beginning to take heat for their really unfair treatment of Bush judicial nominee Charles Pickering. I mean, they're getting heat in "The Washington Post," from you in "Roll Call." There's a way out for them that's getting some attention, that is, vote against the nomination but send it to the floor for a full vote.

If that happens, he has a chance of winning confirmation.

Judge Charles Pickering pleads case to Democratic Judiciary Committee for spot as judge; the NAACP and other minority groups protest his appointment

ABC News
World News Tonight Sunday

CAROLE SIMPSON; anchor

This Thursday, the Senate Judiciary Committee is expected to vote on a fiercely contested judicial nomination. The battle began when President Bush tapped Mississippi federal judge Charles Pickering for a seat on the fifth circuit federal appeals court. At issue, Pickering's record on civil rights and abortion.

Judge CHARLES PICKERING: The charges that have been made against me have been hurtful, and they have been painful. SIMPSON: (VO) This was 64-year-old judge Pickering fighting for his troubled nomination before the Democratic-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee.

Judge PICKERING: I have a record of standing up for equal protection, respecting the rule of law.

SIMPSON: (VO) But critics of the conservative Republican strongly disagree. Among them, the NAACP.

Mr. KWEISI MFUME (NAACP President): Our challenge is not against him the individual; it's against his record which has demonstrated over the years an insensitivity and a lack of tolerance, particularly on civil rights issues.

SIMPSON: (VO) His opponents point to a 1959 article Pickering wrote in law school against interracial marriage. As a state legislator in the '70s, they say he supported funding for the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission, an avowed segregationist organization. And his critics say as recently as 1994, Judge Pickering engaged in extraordinary lobbying to try to get a reduced sentence for a young man who participated in a cross burning. The White House says the judge is being unfairly maligned.

Mr. ALBERTO GONZALES (White House Counsel): If you go to the people that know him best, the people in his home town, including the established black community, they firmly support Judge Pickering.

SIMPSON: (VO) Judge Pickering was born and raised in Laurel, Mississippi, population 18,000. The town was hot bed of Ku Klux Klan activities in the 1950s and '60s. It made international headlines when the Klan firebombed the home of a local civil rights leader. Vernon Dahmer was killed in that blaze. A local Klan leader, Sam Bowers, was tried in the case, and Judge Pickering, then a local prosecutor, testified against him. Today in Laurel, people still respect Pickering for what he did.

Mr. THADDEUS EDMONSON (Laurel City Council President): This man has put his own life on the line against the Ku Klux Klan in this city.

SIMPSON: How?

Mr. EDMONSON: By testifying against the imperial wizard of the state of Mississippi, which in 1967, '69, was not a popular thing to do.

SIMPSON: Judge Pickering's black supporters say that the judge is part of the new South. He has changed over the past 40 years, just as the town of Laurel has changed.

Ms. ANNE CLAYTON (Laurel City Council): Just because of the past, what has happened in a person's past, I don't think we should condemn them and feel like they cannot ever change.

Mr. LARRY THOMAS (Pharmacist): I still view Charles Pickering as a--a right-wing Republican. But then on the other hand, I saw him open his arms to try to embrace change palatable to both races in south Mississippi.

SIMPSON: (VO) But for a coalition of 50 civil rights, human rights and women's groups, that is not enough.

Mr. MFUME: While there are some people on the ground in Mississippi who say, well, perhaps he's changed, perhaps he has, but I don't think we have the--the wherewithal and the freedom to run that risk because once the judge is there, there's nothing that can remove him except death.

SIMPSON: Sources on the Judiciary Committee staff say there is a chance that Judge Pickering's nomination may not make it out of the Democratic-led Judiciary Committee. Its members may seek payback for Republicans' failure to approve some of President Clinton's nominees.

Battle brewing on Capitol Hill over Bush's nomination of Charles Pickering to Federal Appeals Court

ANCHORS: JOHN SEIGENTHALER

REPORTERS: JOE JOHNS

JOHN SEIGENTHALER, anchor:

On Capitol Hill, a battle is brewing over the confirmation of the president's nominee to the Federal Court of Appeals. NBC's Joe Johns reports.

JOE JOHNS reporting:

Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi faced two confirmation hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee, but his Federal Appeals Court nomination is in trouble. Senator DIANNE FEINSTEIN (Democrat, California): It would be a tremendous mistake to put someone as polarizing in this position now.

JOHNS: More opposition coming from powerful groups including the National Organization for Women.

Ms. KIM GADNY (National Organization for Women): He has an extreme bias towards the enforcement of women's rights laws and particularly civil rights laws.

JOHNS: The NAACP is opposed, too, even though some blacks in Pickering's home state support him.
Reverend GEORGE BARNES (Mississippi Minister): I do not hold people accountable for something that happened 25 or 30 years ago.

JOHNS: The judge, as recently as last Thursday, calling for racial reconciliation.

Unidentified Man: I look forward to the day, hopefully during my lifetime, when all Mississippians, regardless of race, can get around the table and discuss our differences in a constructive way.

JOHNS: The 12 regional courts of appeals get the final word on the vast majority of important federal cases. There are 29 vacancies. The Senate has voted on seven appeals court judgeships, but Pickering is the biggest confrontation so far.

REV_00140768

Senator SAM BROWNBACK (Republican, Kansas): This is a good man that--that people are really trying to smear in a--in a way that is--that is not becoming of the institution.

JOHNS: Some observers call this a dress rehearsal for future battles between the White House and Senate Democrats over the Supreme Court.

Mr. PAUL ROTHSTEIN (Georgetown University Law School): It's a warning sh--shot across the bow of the ship of state led by President Bush that, 'Please do not give us conservative Supreme Court nominees.'

JOHNS: A vote on the nomination could come later this week, setting down a new marker between the White House and the Senate over federal judges. Joe Johns, NBC News, Washington.

The Borking of Pickering

Monday, February 25, 2002

As reported in these pages last week, Judiciary Committee Democrats are going hard and heavy after U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering, selected by President Bush for the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. We've seen the law firm of Biden, Kennedy, and Leahy engaged before in various forms of borking. But the Pickering hearings have introduced the nation to a new borker: John Edwards of North Carolina. It fell -- or perhaps it was assigned -- to Edwards, who made millions as a plaintiff's lawyer, to cross-examine Judge Pickering about his handling of a case from 1994. Working from Clinton-era Justice Department documents he had in his possession but which Pickering had not seen (how about that for due process, Your Honor?), Edwards accused Pickering of conduct violating the Code of Judicial Ethics.

Now that the documents have been made available to everyone, including the judge, it appears at the least that there is another side to the story. Reviewing the issues at the request of Senate Republicans, Michael Krauss, professor of legal ethics at George Mason School of Law, writes, "One is hard pressed to see any violation of Judge Pickering's ethical duties here." And: "[The] documents reveal nothing more than a determined effort by Judge Pickering to discharge, faithfully and competently, his judicial duties under the Constitution."

Drawing on the same documents, Edwards also said Pickering had told "the government lawyers [in the case] that you would on your own motion order a new trial." Pickering denied saying that. And the documents back him up. The pertinent one -- a Nov. 29, 1994, memo by prosecutor Brad Berry -- said that Pickering had asked whether the Justice Department would agree not to oppose a motion for a new trial on a certain charge. But Berry's memo doesn't say that Pickering said he would call for this trial "on your own motion."

Edwards, who has presidential aspirations, may not have established himself as the equal of the established borkers in his party, but he shows promise. And he certainly has the character. We still remember those ads when he ran for the Senate in 1998, which suggested he was born in North Carolina though in fact he came into the world in Seneca, South Carolina. In case you wonder, there's documentation for that.

Campaign-finance foe says bill will pass

EXCERPT
Senate panel to vote this week on judge

Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., said the Senate Judiciary Committee likely will not approve the nomination of Charles Pickering to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. A vote is expected Wednesday. He has been a federal judge since 1990. Some Democrats, civil rights activists and abortion-rights proponents oppose him. Republicans say that he is rated well-qualified by the American Bar Association and that the opposition is politically motivated.

Mississippi redistricting almost over - or is it?

Emily Wagster
The Associated Press State & Local Wire
February 24, 2002, Sunday,

It's not a sure bet Mississippi's congressional redistricting battle will end Monday despite a deadline by federal judges, officials say.

Democrats are appealing to the U.S. Supreme Court to implement a plan approved by state court. It's uncertain when that appeal will be resolved and one of the congressmen with the most at stake in redistricting says he's not ready to accept a plan drawn by Republican-appointed judges.

"We're not going to sit there and let three appointed federal judges sit there and say what the district is going to be," U.S. Rep. Ronnie Shows, D-Miss., said late last week. U.S. Rep. Chip Pickering, R-Miss., who will face Shows in a new central district this election season, believes the federal judges' redistricting plan is fair and should be used.

"I think that will be it," Pickering said last week.

Mississippi is losing one of its five congressional seats because of slow population growth in the 1990s.

The federal judges said if the U.S. Justice Department fails to approve a state court redistricting plan by the close of business Monday, they'll order that their own map be used in this year's congressional races.

The federal judges' order could come early Tuesday. Congressional candidates face a Friday qualifying deadline.

The federal plan is thought to favor Republicans, while the state plan is thought to favor Democrats.

REV_00140776

Both national parties are watching the outcome of Mississippi redistricting because the battle could help determine the balance of partisan power on Capitol Hill.

The Justice Department since late December has been examining a plan approved by Hinds County Chancery Judge Patricia Wise. The Justice Department is trying to determine if the plan is fair to minorities.

The department on Feb. 14 asked state officials for more information about how chancery judges are elected. Responses were submitted last Tuesday, giving the department another 60 days to consider the state court plan. That pushed the department's deadline well past the congressional qualifying date.

Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge E. Grady Jolly of Jackson and U.S. District Judges David Bramlette of Natchez and Henry T. Wingate of Jackson have drawn a separate redistricting plan that does not need Justice Department clearance.

Both plans toss Pickering and Shows, the state's junior congressmen, into a new central district.

Pickering now represents east central Mississippi and Shows represents the southwest.

The key difference in the state and federal plans is the composition of the new central district.

The state court plan's central district has a higher concentration of black voters, who traditionally favor Democrats. The federal plan's central district includes heavily Republican precincts in suburban Jackson.

Shows said it's ironic that people who traditionally push for states' rights are now supporting the federal judges' plan.

Chancery judges are chosen in nonpartisan elections, but Wise comes from a heavily Democratic district. Opponents to her plan say a judge from a single district should not decide a plan for the entire state.

Shows and other Democrats also accuse the Bush administration Justice Department of delaying action on the state court plan to help Republicans. "They're stalling because they want to ride this thing out," Shows said.

Pickering said "it's simply not true" that the Justice Department is being politicized. He said that Republicans are still appealing the chancery court plan to the state Supreme Court.

"There is no precedent in the history of the Voting Rights Act or the Justice Department of ever approving a plan that is still subject to appeal," Pickering said.

Democrats also accused Republicans of dragging their feet on filing an appeal to the state

REV_00140777

Supreme Court. GOP lawyers waited almost until the end of the 30-day filing period to submit their appeal.

Pickering says Democrats are trying to use his father's federal appeals court nomination as leverage in congressional redistricting.

President Bush has nominated U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering Sr. of Laurel to a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. The judge has had two confirmation hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The NAACP opposes his nomination, saying the elder Pickering is hostile to minority rights. The judge has defended his civil rights record and last week gave a speech at the Mississippi Capitol calling for racial reconciliation.

Several prominent Democrats, including members of the Congressional Black Caucus, also oppose the judge's confirmation.

"I think that fact that redistricting and his confirmation came at the same time ... creates an opportunity, unfortunately, to politicize his confirmation," Chip Pickering said last week.

Shows said he thinks the Pickering camp is trying to use the confirmation difficulties to its own political advantage. "They're trying to make like they're the ones being picked on and, hell, they've got the judges and the Justice Department on their side," Shows said.

He said that two of the three federal judges involved in redistricting serve on U.S. District Court with Judge Pickering and one serves on the court he hopes to join.

Shows has been criticized by Mississippi Republican Chairman Jim Herring and others for not speaking out in support of Judge Pickering's nomination. "It's not relevant," Shows said of the criticism. "I don't even have a vote. It's in the Senate."

Daschle says Judiciary Committee to vote on Pickering this week

The Associated Press State & Local Wire
February 24, 2002, Sunday
Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle said the Judiciary Committee will vote this week on the nomination of Mississippi Judge Charles Pickering to a federal appeals court.

"If the vote fails in the committee, of course, it dies in the committee. There is no other action required," said Daschle, D-S.D., who was appearing on ABC's 'This Week' on Sunday. Daschle said he believed the committee would take up Pickering's nomination on Wednesday.

Pickering, of Laurel has been a federal judge since 1990. He has been nominated by President Bush for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, which handles cases from Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas.

He has gone through two sets of hearings before the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee.

Some U.S. Senate Democrats and civil rights groups are questioning parts of his record, including his effort to reduce the sentence of a man convicted for putting a burning cross on an interracial couple's lawn.

Abortion rights groups also are trying to block his confirmation.

Daschle was asked if Pickering's nomination would be confirmed by the Senate if it passes the Judiciary Committee.

"I don't know, I have not talked to my colleagues or know just what the vote will be at this point," he said. "But .... if the nomination comes to the floor, I have every expectation we'll take it up and we'll have that debate."

Sen. Diane Feinstein, D-Calif., speaking on NBC's 'Meet the Press,' said she doubts the nomination will get out of the Judiciary Committee.

"I believe that there is virtually unanimous opinion on the Democratic side of the Judiciary Committee that he will not be confirmed. In other words, he will not be voted out of the Judiciary Committee," she said.

Pickering has strong support from Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott and other state Republicans, who say opposition to the judge is politically motivated. Pickering is rated as well qualified by the American Bar Association.

Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., who also appeared on 'Meet the Press,' said he supports Pickering.

"We need to get some judges out there and confirmed in positions, if for no other reason, for homeland security, so we can deal with judicial issues coming on forward," he said.

Race, politics, history: Mississippi redistricting fight has it all

David Espo
The Associated Press State & Local Wire
February 22, 2002, Friday

Republicans and Democrats are battling in state and federal courts over a single Mississippi House district, a dispute that blends race, irony and politics and stirs memories of the presidential recount of 2000.

"This is Florida at the congressional level," says Republican Rep. Charles (Chip) Pickering, Jr., thrown together with Democratic Rep. Ronnie Shows in a new district with unsettled boundaries.

Democrats charge President Bush's Justice Department with trying to dilute the voting strength of Mississippi blacks, much as they charged Bush's campaign with disenfranchising blacks in Florida.

"Instead of enforcing the voting rights act, they are carrying the water of Chip Pickering and the Republican Party," alleges Rob McDuff, a lawyer in the case. Agency officials and other Republicans dispute the charge. "One judge from one county shouldn't draw the plan for the entire state of Mississippi," Henry Barbour, Pickering's campaign manager, said in an interview. "This ought to be about all 2.8 million people in Mississippi."

As was the case in Florida, Republicans and Democrats filed suit in different courts. And as a result, there are two court-drawn redistricting plans.

And in an irony acknowledged by all sides, one argument central to the civil rights struggle of a generation ago has been reversed. Democrats accuse Republicans of trampling "states' rights" by going into federal court to deny blacks their rights.

One redistricting plan, with 37.5 percent black voting age population, was issued by a local judge, is backed by Democrats and - to their anger- has been awaiting approval under the Voting Rights Act at the Justice Department for more than six weeks.

Under the law, the agency must make sure there is no backsliding - the legal term is "retrogression" - when new congressional district maps are drawn.

In this case, though, lawyers raised questions about approving a statewide plan drawn up by a local judge.

The other plan, supported by Republicans, includes 30 percent black voting age population in the contested district. It was advanced by federal judges who say they will intervene if the Justice Department hasn't acted by Monday on the rival map.
Democrats on Wednesday asked the U.S. Supreme Court to step in, with a March 1 filing deadline approaching for the two men at the center of the dispute.

Pickering, 38, is a conservative third-term lawmaker and protege of Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott. In one of numerous ironies in the controversy, his father, U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering, is at the center of another racially charged dispute. Nominated by Bush for a seat on the appeals court, he faces opposition from Democrats and national civil rights groups.

Shows, 55, won his seat in 1998. A conservative Democrat, he parts company on several issues with more liberal national party leaders. In both his campaigns, he suggested he might not vote for Democratic leader Dick Gephardt as speaker, although he did in the end.

Both sides speak of possible connections between the confirmation battle and the redistricting controversy.

Democratic Rep. Bennie Thompson, Mississippi's only black lawmaker, said Thursday that one of the federal judges involved in the court case had written a letter of support for Pickering's father.

Rep. Pickering said some Democrats were linking the two issues, holding his father's confirmation hostage while the redistricting case continues.

The presence of two incumbents on the ballot guarantees both parties will focus on the contest in their struggle for control of the House this fall.

But first comes the current dispute, rooted in national population trends requiring Mississippi to give up one of its five House seats. The Democratic-controlled Legislature deadlocked in its efforts to draw new districts.

Democratic lawyers then won the early rounds in court.

The state Supreme Court ruled that a local judge had authority over statewide redistricting, despite an assertion from Democratic Attorney General Mike Moore that "under current precedent ... a chancery court has no subject matter jurisdiction" in such matters.

Next, Hinds County Chancery Court Judge Patricia Wise approved a map backed by Democrats. Moore forwarded it to the Justice Department in December and requested swift approval.

The GOP went to federal court, where three federal judges advanced a map more favorable to Pickering.

This time, Democrats objected. "The plan drawn by the federal courts is a direct assault on states' rights and the state of Mississippi, argued Shows.

Wise was elected in a nonpartisan election from a district that is Democratic. The three federal judges were appointed by Republican presidents.

Now, in another irony, Democrats argue that Bush's Justice Department is turning the law upside down by delaying approval of the plan that maximizes black voting strength in the new district.

Assistant Attorney General Ralph Boyd met recently with several Democratic lawmakers at their request. Department spokesman Dan Nelson said Boyd told them that review of the Mississippi controversy "will be guided solely by existing law and the facts presented."

Improving race relations morally right, Judge Pickering says

Emily Wagster
The Associated Press State & Local Wire
February 22, 2002, Friday

Reconciling racial differences is in the best interest of Mississippi and America, federal appeals court nominee Charles Pickering Sr. said.

Pickering, 64, was honored Thursday at the Mississippi Capitol during a reunion of former state senators. He was one of the few Republicans in the state Senate when he served from 1972 to 1980. His remarks were the first public response since NAACP leaders last week said the federal judge has been hostile to minorities' rights.

"All of my life, I have seen those who strive to divide," Pickering said. "We must resist the temptation and the allure to divide for political or personal gain."

Some U.S. Senate Democrats and civil rights groups are questioning parts of his record, including his effort to reduce the sentence of a man convicted for putting a burning cross on an interracial couple's lawn.

Abortion rights groups also are trying to block his confirmation.

Pickering, of Laurel has been a federal judge since 1990. He has been nominated by President Bush for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, which handles cases from Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas.

He has gone through two sets of hearings before the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee, which could vote on his nomination by mid-March.

Pickering told current and former state lawmakers Thursday he has been promoting racial reconciliation in every speech he has made in the past decade.
"Unless we reach a point where racial differences can be resolved in a positive and constructive manner, the future of our nation and the welfare of our children and grandchildren will be greatly diminished," he said.

Members of the Congressional Black Caucus, including U.S. Rep. Bennie Thompson, D-Miss., also oppose Pickering's confirmation. Thompson said this month that "we could do better" with a different nominee to the appeals court.

Some black state lawmakers said they don't recall Pickering speaking out about racial reconciliation during the civil rights movement of the 1960s and 1970s.

"I respect Bennie's judgment and I respect the NAACP and I respect all the other civil rights organizations that were a part of the struggle at that time and still are," said Sen. David Jordan, D-

REV_00140782

Greenwood. "If they've got problems with the confirmation, I have problems with the confirmation."

Former Sen. Con Maloney of Jackson, who was elected as a Democrat in 1972 and later became a Republican, praised Pickering.

"This great country needs people like Charlie Pickering who, regardless of race, creed or color, will stand up and do what's right," Maloney said.

Pickering also led the Mississippi Baptist Convention from 1983 to 1985. He said Thursday that racial reconciliation "is morally the right thing to do, for God is no respecter of person or race."

The judge also promoted the work of the University of Mississippi's new Institute for Racial Reconciliation. He serves on the institute's board.

Pickering was accompanied Thursday by his wife, Margaret Ann, and three of their four children, including their son, U.S. Rep. Chip Pickering, R-Miss.

Pickering Urges Racial Harmony in Reply to Critics

Emily Wagster
The Commercial Appeal (Memphis, TN)

Embattled federal appeals court nominee Charles Pickering used a speech Thursday at the Mississippi Capitol to call for racial reconciliation.

It was one of his first public statements since NAACP leaders last week accused the federal judge of being hostile to minority rights.

"We must resist the temptation and the allure to divide for political or personal gain," Pickering told a state Senate reunion. Pickering, a federal judge since 1990, has been nominated by President Bush for a seat on the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, which handles cases from Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas.

"All of my life, I have seen those who strive to divide," Pickering said as he appealed for efforts to resist divisiveness for political or personal advantage.

REV_00140783

Members of the Congressional Black Caucus, including Rep. Bennie Thompson (D-Miss.), also oppose Pickering's confirmation. Thompson said this month that "we could do better" with a different nominee to the appeals court.

Some black state lawmakers noted that Pickering didn't speak out about racial reconciliation during the civil rights era of the 1960s and 1970s.

"I respect Bennie's judgment and I respect the NAACP" and other civil rights groups, said Sen. David Jordan (D-Greenwood). "If they've got problems with the confirmation, I have problems with the confirmation."

Former state senator Con Maloney of Jackson, who was elected as a Democrat in 1972 and later became a Republican, praised Pickering.

"This great country needs people like Charlie Pickering who, regardless of race, creed or color, will stand up and do what's right," Maloney said.

Political money eroding trust in judicial system Groups push public funding, merit-based selection of judges

Michelle Mittelstadt
The Dallas Morning News
February 22, 2002, Friday

The gush of political money into state judicial campaigns, much of it from trial lawyers and business interests, is having a corrosive effect on America's courts and the public's perception of their fairness, voters and judges say in two new national surveys.

Nearly two-thirds of voters polled, including nearly 90 percent of black voters, voiced concern that there are two systems of justice - one for well-heeled, powerful interests and one for everybody else. Eighty percent of judges surveyed said they are very concerned about the perception there is inequality in the system.

Three-quarters of voters - and even one-fourth of the judges interviewed - said they believe campaign contributions have at least some influence on judges' decisions. Thirty-eight states including Texas elect judges to their highest court. "When money elects judges, many people will believe that justice is for sale," said North Carolina Court of Appeals Judge James Andrew

Wynn Jr.

Equating the existing system to letting Major League baseball players contribute money to umpires, Judge Wynn said: "Under that scenario, how can anyone have confidence in the strike calls of an umpire if you know the pitcher contributed $ 10,000 to select that umpire to call the game?"

The poll results come from two surveys commissioned by the Justice at Stake campaign, a national partnership working to reduce the influence of special interests on the judicial system.

A coalition of groups ranging from the American Bar Association and Common Cause to the National Center for State Courts, the partnership is pressing for public financing of judicial races or merit-based selection of judges, improved campaign disclosure laws and contribution limits.

Democratic pollster Stanley Greenberg, who conducted the surveys with Republican pollster Linda DiVall, said the findings exhibit "quite deep discontent with the judicial system - and above all the system of election that may influence the way justice is achieved."

In the 38 states that elect high court judges, donations surged 61 percent in the 2000 elections - to $ 45.6 million - over the campaign cycle two years earlier, the Brennan Center for Justice at the New York University Law School said in a report released last week by Justice at Stake during a Washington news conference.

"Over the past decade, special interests have been spending increasing millions to influence decisions and selection of judges," said Geri Palast, the partnership's executive director. "The cost of judicial campaigns is skyrocketing, and more judges are forced to raise money like politicians."

'Nastier, noisier, costlier'

Judge Wynn and Texas Supreme Court Chief Justice Tom Phillips traveled to Washington to lend their voices to the Justice at Stake campaign.

"Eighty-seven percent of state judges are elected, and those elections are becoming nastier, noisier and costlier," Justice Phillips said, adding that the problem goes well beyond the increasing cost and pressure on candidates to raise money. "It has become a nationwide problem because national special-interest groups are raising and spending money across state lines to influence judicial races in states that they think will have issues important to their own agendas."

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, which did not intervene in state judicial elections before 2000, spent more than $ 10 million on judicial races in a handful of states that year, the Brennan Center reported.

"Special interests are pouring millions of dollars into state judicial campaigns to serve their interests. And some of them are proudly proclaiming that they are indeed buying justice," said

American Bar Association president-elect Alfred P. Carlton Jr.

The chief problem, Justice Phillips and others said, is the growing public perception of inequality.
"It is very important not only that justice be done, but that it seems to be done," Justice Phillips said at a news conference with Mr. Carlton and other Justice at Stake campaign supporters.

The survey numbers, he said, "show starkly that while judges are having some doubts about the integrity of their own process, the electorate as a whole is having substantial doubt about whether or not our justice system can deliver the promise of equal justice to all."

The findings are based on a poll of 1,000 registered voters, and a separate mail-in survey completed by 2,428 state judges.

Justice Phillips, who has crusaded for public financing of judicial campaigns in Texas since the early 1980s, called for a "national re-examination" of how judges are selected.

In an interview, he said "some judges - very few" are influenced by political contributions.

"There are a few others who don't think they are, who don't realize they are," he said. For most, he stressed, "I don't think it's a problem."

The entire system, however, is tainted by the perception of influence buying, he said. And the door is opened, he said, to using the contributions as a political tool against judicial candidates.

One of his colleagues, Justice Priscilla Owen, who has been nominated by President Bush for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, has come under scrutiny for $ 8,600 in contributions she accepted from Enron. A ruling she authored two years later, in an arcane tax case, spared Enron $ 225,000 in taxes.

While that 1996 opinion was unanimous and tracked two earlier U.S. Supreme Court decisions, Senate Judiciary Committee Democrats have vowed to delve into the issue at her confirmation hearing, which is expected to be contentious.

Owen defended

Justice Phillips strongly defended her integrity.

The need to raise campaign contributions casts a negative pall on all judges, said Judge Wynn, the North Carolina appellate judge, acknowledging that most of his funds come from lawyers and business interests.

"While I believe that people who know me know that my commitment to being fair and impartial outweighs any potential influence that a political contribution would have, for those who do not [know me] they cannot be assured that monetary contributions do not influence judicial decisions," he said.

One solution, Justice Phillips said, would be public financing of campaigns. He has proposed that Texas bankroll public financing of campaigns by using an existing $ 200 lawyer occupation tax that raises $ 10 million annually. Merit selection of judges, rather than elections, would be another solution, he said.

Getting a public financing plan through the Texas Legislature is an uphill battle, Justice Phillips acknowledged.

"You have some very strong special interests right there on the ground vs. kind of a nebulous public desire for change without an organized focus to mobilize it," he said. "I think the odds are always against us in any single year, but long range it will happen."

Judiciary panel sets vote on Pickering nomination

Audrey Hudson
The Washington Times
February 22, 2002, Friday

The contentious confirmation of District Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals will get its first test next week when the Senate Judiciary Committee votes on the nomination.

"Hopefully, this destructive political process will stop," Rep. Charles W. "Chip" Pickering Jr., Mississippi Republican and son of the embattled nominee said yesterday.

The Senate panel has held two confirmation hearings on Judge Pickering's nomination, the most recent on Feb. 7, when he was grilled on his pro-life stance and civil rights record. Liberal organizations have tried to label Judge Pickering as a racist, but black leaders in Mississippi are vocally backing the nominee as a friend of their community. Supporters hope this will sway public opinion.

The vote is set for next Thursday.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican, is Judge Pickering's leading supporter in the Senate.

Mr. Lott's spokesman raised the possibility of repercussions if the judge is not confirmed.

"Senator Lott believes that Mr. Pickering is extremely qualified, and if he is not confirmed, it will not help the relationship and there could be consequences to those actions," Lott spokesman Ron Bonjean said.

REV_00140787

Republicans are concerned that dozens of extraneous questions forwarded to Judge Pickering by Democrats might delay the vote.

And if Democrats on the committee block the contentious nomination, Republicans would be forced to go through cumbersome procedures to force a vote on the Senate floor.

The full Senate can vote on a motion to discharge, which needs only a simple majority to pass, but a single senator can block the motion, triggering other procedures that can leave the nomination in limbo.

One senior Republican aide said there are possible Democrat swing votes on the committee, especially after the recent increased media attention, which has helped bolster support for Judge Pickering's nomination.

"If the vote were held right after the committee hearing, we would have lost, but the Democrats are getting pressure from their own press. We are better off today than we were a week ago," the aide said.

At least two Democrats have publicly stated they would vote for Judge Pickering in a full Senate vote: Zell Miller of Georgia and Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina. That would give Republicans the votes they need to win in an otherwise party-line vote.

Mr. Hollings dismissed charges that Judge Pickering had ties to segregationists. He told Roll Call, "We've got leaders in the Senate that used to be members of the Klan," an apparent reference to fellow Democratic Sen. Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, who was a member of the Ku Klux Klan more than 50 years ago.

The younger Mr. Pickering said he hopes this week's congressional recess served as a cooling-off period.

The New York Times on Sunday carried a report from Laurel, Miss., that said: "Here on the streets of his small, largely black hometown, far from the bitterness of partisan agendas and position papers, Charles Pickering is a widely admired figure of a very different present."

Judge Pickering yesterday was given a distinguished-service award by his former state Senate colleagues, and he touched on race relations during his acceptance speech.

"If we are to make progress in promoting racial harmony, first and foremost, we as a society, young and old, black and white, must make a willful, genuine and meaningful commitment to better race relations," he said.

"It will not be easy. It will require a willingness to get involved and take a stand, and if necessary, to pay a price," Judge Pickering said.

D. Brooks Smith Circuit Court Nominee Prepares for Hearing

REV_00140788

Milan Simonich
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
February 25, 2002 Monday

Inside the capital beltway, U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith is such a marked man that he might as well have a bull's-eye on his forehead.

Smith, a Republican from Altoona, has been nominated by President Bush for the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

A Washington, D.C.-based coalition of 27 environmental, women's, civil rights and disability rights groups will challenge his fitness for the court when his confirmation hearing begins tomorrow before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Critics of Smith, many aligned with Democratic Party interests, say he has been too quick to dismiss valid lawsuits brought by individuals against corporations, and too eager to travel to conferences paid for by businesses with interests in federal litigation. "Several of his opinions point out to us a judicial philosophy that favors wealthy, powerful parties over ordinary people," said Nan Aron, president of the Alliance for Justice, a national association of public civil rights interests.

But outside Washington's world of partisan politics, Smith seems to have no enemies, only admirers. Those who have watched him work say an exemplary 14-year record on the federal bench in Western Pennsylvania is being twisted by political opportunists.

His popularity outside the capital extends even to members of the opposing political party, who describe him as fair, hard-working and respectful to all.

"He is unpretentious and down-to-earth, a really nice person who is committed to the ideals of equal justice in the courts," said U.S. District Judge Anne E. Thompson, a Democrat on the New Jersey bench.

Pittsburgh lawyer John Bingler, whose own nomination for a federal judgeship was twice blocked by Republican Sen. Rick Santorum, would not comment on the politicking except to say that it should not stand in Smith's way.

"I think he should be confirmed. He's an excellent judge," Bingler said.

Smith, 50, is declining all interview requests while the confirmation process unfolds. He has been through it before, having been appointed to the U.S. District Court in 1988 by President Ronald Reagan.

Just about everybody in Smith's hometown of Tyrone in Blair County expected him to become the kind of man who one day would get a job offer from the president.

"Even in elementary school you just knew he was going to be something when he grew up," said Tom Rumberger, a classmate of Smith from kindergarten through high school. "He had the total respect of everybody, including the teachers. I don't know how many fourth-graders paid attention to the stock market, but he did.

"For me to say something negative about him, I'd have to make it up."

Smith was the product of a middle-class family. Friends said his father worked in the laboratory of the Tyrone paper mill, the area's major employer during the 1960s.

After high school, Smith went to Franklin & Marshall College in Lancaster, where his interest in a legal career solidified. He graduated from Dickinson School of Law in 1976 and landed a job that same year with the Altoona law firm of Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern. One of the principals is Republican state Sen. Bob Jubelirer, who is among the state's most prominent legislators.

Smith rose to managing partner of the firm, prosecuted criminal cases as a part-time assistant in the Blair County district attorney's office and set his sights on becoming a judge.

He succeeded in 1984, receiving an appointment to Blair County Common Pleas Court. Smith won election to the bench the following year, remaining until Reagan selected him for the federal court.

Those skeptical of his performance say they have uncovered evidence that he may not be impartial.

Aron points out that Smith has been reversed 52 times by the 3rd Circuit Court -- a higher rate than that of other Bush nominees for appellate judgeships. She says his performance in cases that were overturned -- some with stiff rebukes -- is at the heart of her concerns about his qualifications.

But the case that critics are likely to focus on during the confirmation process is one that Smith vacated.

It involved John Gardner Black, an investment adviser who was accused of defrauding Pennsylvania school districts of millions of dollars.

Smith presided over the case for a month in 1997, then removed himself. He cited his wife's job as vice president of an Altoona bank, where most of the missing money was held in Black's accounts. By then, critics said, Smith had issued an order that protected the bank from attempts by Black's victims to recover their money.

His detractors say he should have immediately recognized his potential for conflict and withdrawn.

Smith also has been criticized for appearing too cozy with the business community.

"He has taken more corporate-funded or privately funded judicial trips than just about any other judge in America," said Doug Kendall, executive director of Community Rights Counsel, a law firm in Washington that helps local governments in land-use cases.

Kendall counts a dozen such trips that Smith has made in the last nine years.

"Valid concerns are being raised by our groups about whether judges should be accepting gifts worth thousands of dollars from corporations and foundations that have an interest in federal court litigation," Kendall said.

Others say Smith's overall record is strong and should be examined in the context that he has made tens of thousands of judgments across his career.

"His decisions have not always been in my clients' favor, but they have always been well-reasoned," said Shelly Pagac, a Pittsburgh lawyer and co-president of the Women's Bar Association of Western Pennsylvania. "That's all you can ask of a judge -- to fairly assess your case."

John M. Burkoff, a Democrat who is an associate dean and law professor at the University of Pittsburgh, said Smith deserves a spot on the 3rd Circuit Court because he has proven himself competent and courteous in the most contentious situations.

"We know he is a fairly conservative judge, but that makes no difference so long as he is fair, and that is his reputation," Burkoff said. "He doesn't have an imperious judicial style. He's a decent man on the bench and that counts for a lot."

Aron is not willing to give Smith such a blanket endorsement. She said his record should be examined thoroughly in the confirmation process to determine if he has been as fair as his backers contend.

"The 3rd Circuit is a critically important court," she said. "That means it's critically important that the committee be absolutely sure that D. Brooks Smith would favor impartiality."

Politics plays key role in judicial confirmations

Claude R. Marx

When the Senate Judiciary Committee holds a confirmation hearing Tuesday on the nomination of U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith, it will be a culmination of a battle that has centered on ethics and politics.

Smith, whom President Bush named to a long-vacant spot on the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, has become a political football, according to some of the judge's supporters. The court, which sits in Philadelphia, hears appeals of federal cases from Delaware, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and the Virgin Islands.

Critics see it differently. They say their reservations about Smith's record are based on concerns about his ability to be a good judge and are not motivated by a desire to get back at the Republican Party for its delay of former President Clinton's judicial choices. The major complaint centers on whether Smith should have removed himself earlier from a case involving a the bank where his wife is vice president. The bank was accused of complicity in a scheme to defraud dozens of Pennsylvania schools and municipalities.

Smith also has been criticized for taking trips sponsored by organizations that are hostile to the environment.

"These are legitimate concerns that go to his fitness to be a judge," said Doug Kendall of the Community Rights Counsel, one of the groups that has raised concerns. "The ethics of a nominee matter."

Smith's supporters note that the Justice Department reviewed the allegations and found them baseless and unnecessary for an investigation.

"As outside liberal groups made these accusations, we reviewed the matter and there is no basis to the allegations and has been no investigation," Justice Department spokeswoman Barbara Comstock said.

Leahy's spokesman David Carle said Democrats had treated Republican nominees as fairly as the GOP had treated Clinton's choices and denied there is any effort to block Bush's nominees.

"The chairman is proceeding in good faith and we have confirmed 30 district court nominees and seven appeals court nominees since Democrats took control last year," Carle said. "By contrast, in the last year of the Clinton administration, the Republican-controlled Senate confirmed only 17 nominees."

Sen. Arlen Specter, a Judiciary Committee member, predicted it would "be a battle" to confirm Smith but that is to be expected in a closely divided Senate. The Senate has 50 Democrats, 49 Republicans and one independent.

Duquesne University law professor Ken Gormley, a Democrat who supports Smith's nomination, said that Smith "isn't the person that these groups should make their point with. He is a thoughtful, responsible judge."

"There were no violations of ethics. These are fringe groups doing the bidding of (Judiciary

REV_00140792

Committee Chairman) Pat Leahy and the Democrats. It is reprehensible," said Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa.

While Clinton was in office, Santorum and Specter worked out an agreement that allowed the senators to pick one judge for every three picked by Clinton.

That arrangement broke down when Clinton refused to nominate one of the senators' choices for a judgeship in Pittsburgh. Santorum in turn held up the confirmation of other judicial nominees.

Carle said Santorum "did what he could to keep the vacancies open" and therefore has little basis to complain about how the Democrats are handling nominees.

Santorum said he approved people who were selected by the joint committee that he and Specter set up to pick judges and "Clinton picked someone who wasn't on the list."

Gormley contends that until both parties make the process less politically charged, the main victims will be the public.

"It has reached the point where it has threatened the whole process just because special interest groups want to settle a few scores," he said.

Pickering Battles Face Decisions on Two Fronts

Paul Kane
Roll Call
February 25, 2002, Monday

With charges and countercharges flying from Mississippi to Capitol Hill, the father-son duo of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering and Rep. Chip Pickering (R-Miss.) may face their respective political days of reckoning this week.

In decisions that will have ripple effects throughout all three branches of the federal government, the Pickerings are engaged in racially charged fights, with interest groups on both sides mounting furious campaigns.

Judge Pickering, seeking an elevation to the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, has faced a nearly endless volley of charges that he has been racially insensitive as a state politician and on the federal bench. The Senate Judiciary Committee is tentatively slated to vote on Pickering Thursday, with his nomination desperately in need of support from one Democrat on the panel to gain a vote on the Senate floor. Rep. Pickering is facing a redistricting battle that will pit him against Rep. Ronnie Shows (D-Miss.) in the fall, but a legal fight between state and federal courts has not yet resolved the precise shape of the new district. If the Justice Department does not sign off on a state-backed plan by today, a three-judge federal panel has said it will impose its own district - which is much more favorable to Chip Pickering because of its lower percentage of voting-age black residents - by tomorrow, in time for the March 1 filing deadline.

While the two cases are seemingly independent of each other, the cast of characters waging fights over the Pickerings' futures are virtually the same, and each side has made vague allegations against the other about linking the two battles for its own advantage.

Rep. Bennie Thompson (D-Miss.), who has been the most outspoken Congressional Black Caucus opponent of Judge Pickering's and the CBC leader in the redistricting fight, went to great lengths to note that the redistricting plan favoring Republicans was designed by three GOP-nominated judges. One of the three, U.S. District Judge Henry Wingate, wrote a letter to the Judiciary Committee in support of Judge Pickering's nomination, and another, District Judge David Bramlett, serves with Wingate and Pickering on the same federal court.

"And now they craft a plan that's more favorable to their colleague's son than the [state-backed plan] that's under review by the Justice Department," Thompson said, adding that it's not too far a stretch to say the judges are seeking retribution for Democratic opposition to the judicial nomination. "It certainly could be made to [look] that way."

Rep. Pickering, who has been the most outspoken supporter on behalf of his father's nomination, has argued just the opposite, that Congressional Democrats are holding up Judge Pickering's nomination as leverage in the redistricting battle.

The nomination fight has become a pivotal one in the Senate, with Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) - a friend of Judge Pickering's for 30 years and former boss of Rep. Pickering - vowing retribution if Democrats defeat the judicial nomination. Some Senate Republicans have even talked of holding up all legislative matters through parliamentary tactics, freezing the Senate floor, if the Pickering nomination goes down, according to aides.

But interest groups from the People for the American Way to the NAACP have ratcheted up the pressure on Judiciary Democrats, arguing that Pickering's record as a state Senator and federal judge is replete with insensitivity to civil rights.

According to one aide to a Judiciary Democrat, the anti-Pickering coalition began a fax, phone and e-mail campaign Thursday, with form letters from across Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi accusing Pickering of "insensitive and extreme views."

Despite favorable stories in the national press about home-state support for Pickering among blacks, the coalition is arguing that those supporters only know Pickering as a person, not as a judge. "We're not looking into his heart, we're looking into his record," said Ralph Neas, president of People for the American Way.

Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) has scheduled a business meeting to vote on nominations Thursday, when it is "likely" Pickering's nomination will be handled, according to David Carle, Leahy's spokesman.

Aides and observers noted that a decision to hold a vote so quickly after the return from the Presidents' Day recess does not bode well for Pickering's chances. But, Carle stressed, "No final agenda [for the hearing] will be set until closer to Thursday."

By that time, Rep. Pickering's future may already be virtually certain. The Justice Department, under the Voting Rights Act, must approve any redistricting plan in Mississippi, and originally faced a deadline today for approving or rejecting the state-backed plan. But two weeks ago Justice's Civil Rights Division requested more information from Mississippi regarding its plan, which would leave a Pickering-Shows district with 37 percent of the voting-age population being African-American.

Justice thus created a new 60-day deadline for later in the spring, but the filing deadline for candidates continues to be March 1. The three-judge panel, however, has drawn up its own district - 30 percent African-American - and said that redistricting must be in place by the filing deadline, requiring the federal map to be imposed Tuesday if Justice does not clear the state-backed plan by today.

Thompson, Shows and Mississippi Democrats have accused Justice of intentionally delaying its decisions on the state plan to guarantee that the map more favorable to the GOPwould be imposed by the federal court.

If the redistricting fight isn't connected to the judicial battle, it is, at a minimum, dirty politics, they contend. "I have never seen such blatant political manipulation. Instead of enforcing the Voting Rights Act, they are carrying the water of Chip Pickering," said Rob McDuff, a Democratic attorney from Jackson, Miss.

Democrats fear that a district with only a 30 percent African-American voting population may not even be competitive for Shows, whose current district has a population of 43 percent black voters.

Republicans contend that the plan violates the civil rights laws because it was written up by a local judge, an African-American voted into office as an independent from an overwhelmingly Democratic region. Alocal judge should not be drawing up a statewide Congressional map, Republicans contend, an allegation Justice has been inclined to listen to so far. "That's something that has never been done before," said Dan Nelson, a department spokesman.

Nelson said the various political scenarios will not be a factor in the decision, but he couldn't guarantee a decision will come in time to avoid the federal judges' takeover of the redistricting process.

Battle brewing on Capitol Hill over Bush's nomination of Charles Pickering to Federal Appeals Court

REV_00140795

Democrats plan to block Pickering

Joyce Howard Price
The Washington Times
February 25, 2002, Monday

Sen. Dianne Feinstein says she anticipates all 10 Democrats on the Judiciary Committee will oppose the nomination offederal judge Charles Pickering to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, in which case the panel will not move it to the Senate floorfor a vote.

"I will not vote for him. ... I believe that there is virtually unanimous opinion on the Democratic side of the JudiciaryCommittee that he will not be confirmed. In other words, he will not be voted out of the Judiciary Committee," the California Democrat said yesterday on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"I've looked rather carefully at his background, and I think you have a person who has very strong right-wing views, bothpolitically and personally. ... I think that people on our side believe that it would be a tremendous mistake to put someone as polarizing in this position now. So I believe he will not be confirmed," she said.

Sen. Sam Brownback of Kansas, one of nine Republicans on the Judiciary Committee, said on the same talk show: "I thinkhe should be confirmed ... this is a good man that people are really trying to smear. ... I think you're going to see a lot of peopletaking actions to try to move that [nomination] on forward some other way." National organizations such as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored people (NAACP) and People forthe American Way are waging a bitter campaign to block the promotion of Judge Pickering to the appeals court. They describethe white Republican, who sits on the U.S. District Court in Hattiesburg, Miss., as being anti-civil rights.

However, blacks who live in Judge Pickering's hometown of Laurel, Miss., deny those charges, citing work he has done to improve both educational and economic opportunities for low-income blacks. Even editorial writers for liberal newspapers such as the New York Times and The Washington Post have expressed concern about the viciousness of the attack on the Pickering nomination. On "Meet the Press," host Tim Russert read from an editorial in The Washington Post that said Judge Pickering's opponents"have tried to paint him as a barely reconstructive segregationist" and have "plucked a number of unconnected incidents from a long career" to arrive at that portrayal. Asked about that, Mrs. Feinstein said she worries the judge might not be able to put aside his "very strong right-wing views"over the course of a lifetime appointment to the Fifth Circuit. "This is a very sensitive circuit. It represents people of color in a major way," she said.

The California Democrat pointed out that President Bush "did not have a large mandate" in the 2000 election. "There is no mandate to skew the courts to the right. And so I think you are going to see a Judiciary Committee that's really going to be looking for mainstream judges. And those judges that they find outside the mainstream I do not believe will have Democratic support."

Senate Republican leader Trent Lott has said Judge Pickering will be confirmed "or else."

Mr. Brownback said yesterday: "I would hope we wouldn't have a litmus test on judges,"

John Edwards and the Fresh-Face Factor

George F. Will
The Washington Post
February 24, 2002
Editorial

John Edwards, freshman Democratic senator from North Carolina, is thinking of running for president in 2004, which has some of the political cognoscenti wondering, What can he be thinking? Perhaps this: I am from a crucial region, my potential rivals for the nomination are un-ntimidating, and by January 2004 I will have spent as many years in elective office -- five -- as George W. Bush had spent by January 2000.

Edwards is handsome, almost too much so. His boyish features are remarkably unmarked by life, although his life has been scarred by tragedy -- the death, at age 16, of his son in an automobile accident. His prettiness -- "sexiest politician," says People magazine -- may cause suspicions that he is all surface. But such suspicions can be quickly banished. Bush's initial weakness was the suspicion, reinforced by his syntactical fender-benders, that he lacked gravitas. That weakness is, Edwards says, "gone forever." The election of New Yorker Grover Cleveland in 1884 was the first Democratic presidential victory after the Civil War, and Northeasterners provided seven of the Democrats' next eight victories (all but that of Missouri's Truman in 1948) through 1960 (Cleveland again in 1892, New Jersey's Wilson twice, New York's Roosevelt four times and Massachusetts' Kennedy). However, Democrats have not elected a Northeastern president since Edwards was 7 years old -- Kennedy. The only Northeasterner they have nominated since 1960 was Massachusetts' Michael Dukakis. Memories of 1988 will not help Massachusetts' Sen. John Kerry in 2004.

Since 1960, Democrats have won just four presidential elections, all with candidates from states of the Confederacy -- Johnson from Texas, Carter from Georgia and Clinton from Arkansas. However, after the Clinton experience, the country may not warm to another Southern smoothie. Edwards, a trial lawyer who honed his political skills by connecting with juries (he was one of the first to use focus groups to help with jury selection), is smooth as a Dairy Queen. Coming months will tell if he is more nourishing.

He does understand the importance of Democratic nominees being perceived as sharing some of the South's cultural conservatism. "We can't win elections on cultural issues," he said over lunch recently, "but we sure can lose them on cultural issues." However, Edwards is a lock-step member of the herd of independent minds -- mostly Northern liberals -- currently slandering a judicial nominee from Mississippi, Charles Pickering, who offends Northern liberals, not Mississippi blacks.

Michael Barone, author of The Almanac of American Politics, says several developments may nudge Democrats rightward. Blacks, the most loyal Democrats, are no longer a growing fraction of the electorate. Neither are the major metropolitan areas. And the places where such favorite Democratic issues as abortion rights and gun control are salient -- California, New Jersey and most major metropolitan areas -- are already solidly Democratic.

Barone notes that if the allocation of electoral votes among the states in 2000 had been what it will be in 2004 on the basis of the 2000 census, Bush would have won not 271 but 278 electoral votes.

Furthermore, a poll done for House Democrats suggests that the "halo" surrounding Bush, and the way the war on terrorism has eclipsed issues usually helpful to Democrats (health care, education, Social Security, the environment), pose problems for Democrats in 22 marginal seats crucial to Democratic hopes of recapturing the House. Such districts are generally more conservative than safe Democratic districts. But Edwards could gain from this. If Democrats fail, for a fourth consecutive time, to recapture the House, their frustration might make them more willing to look at a very fresh face in 2004. But his performance concerning Pickering suggests that although his face is fresh, his philosophy is a stale orthodoxy.

An Unworthy Judicial Nomination

The New York Times
February 24, 2002, Sunday
Editorial

A heated debate is shaping up over Judge Charles Pickering, President Bush's choice to fill a vacancy on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. Mr. Pickering's critics have implied that he is a racist. His supporters have responded that he has warm relations with blacks in his hometown, Laurel, Miss., and that he is being smeared for ideological reasons. We believe that Mr. Pickering bears no animus toward blacks and that charges of racism have no place in this debate. But based on the serious questions raised about his record as a judge, we urge the Senate Judiciary Committee to vote down his nomination.

In his 11 years as a federal trial-court judge, Mr. Pickering has displayed an undue skepticism toward cases involving civil rights. In voting rights cases, he has been troubled by well-settled legal principles like "one person, one vote" and overly concerned about the burdens that Congress, in enacting the Voting Rights Act, placed on local government. In employment discrimination cases, he has been too willing to accept employers' arguments that such suits are based on disgruntlement, rather than valid claims. He has also shown a hostility to awarding attorneys' fees in civil rights cases; without the fees, few such cases could be brought. Mr. Pickering, a friend and ally of Trent Lott, the Mississippi senator and minority leader, is also well outside the mainstream on issues of reproductive choice. He was a driving force behind the Republicans' decision to put a plank in their 1976 party platform calling for an anti-abortion amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. Pickering's views on civil rights and abortion would be out of place on any Court of Appeals. But his positions would be particularly troubling on the Fifth Circuit, which takes in Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas. It is among the poorest and most heavily minority circuits, and the legislatures in those states have gone as far as any in imposing parental consent and other limitations on women's access to abortion.

The Senate's inquiry into Mr. Pickering's nomination has also uncovered several ethically questionable actions. In 1994, he made contact with the Justice Department, in an extraordinary one-sided communication by a judge, to lobby prosecutors to seek a lighter sentence against one of three men accused of burning a cross in front of, and firing bullets into, the home of a mixed-race couple. Mr. Pickering's critics have also charged that he misled Congress at his last confirmation hearings about contacts he had in the 1970's with the Sovereignty Commission, which worked to preserve segregation in Mississippi. Most recently, Mr. Pickering asked lawyers who appeared in his courtroom to write letters in support of his nomination, a request that creates an appearance of coercion and judicial bias.

In pushing for Mr. Pickering's confirmation, Senate Republicans have disingenuously charged Democrats with moving too slowly on judicial nominations. There are, indeed, an unacceptably high number of vacancies on the federal bench, but many of those openings are the result of Republicans' own calculated inaction on Clinton nominees.

Moreover, the real fault for the slow pace lies with the Bush administration. Judge Pickering is the first of a new wave of more than 50 judicial nominees the Senate is being asked to evaluate. Many of these nominations appear problematic and potentially controversial. If President Bush is committed to speeding up confirmations, he should name men and women who have distinguished records and do not have the hard-right views and ethical problems that Mr. Pickering does.

A confirmation for Pickering; How long must we pay for the sins of our past?

Away down South ". . . in the land of cotton, old times there are not forgotten . . . " True. Those opening words to "Dixie" capture the spirit not only of the Old South, but of many contemporary Southerners as well.

"Forget? Never!" the bumper stickers say.

But the same could be said of folks in Chicago or New York or Los Angeles. When people in those places think of the South, especially in a political or cultural context, those thoughts run through the Civil War and the civil rights years. The mind's eye sees names like Jefferson Davis and Bull Connors, and they see George Wallace standing in the schoolhouse door.

As a Southerner who has spent the better part of 30 years editing newspapers in Louisiana, Alabama and Mississippi, I bear witness to the fact racism still lives in these parts.

Does racism still live in Mississippi in 2002? Of course it does.

Sadly, too, it lives elsewhere, in those Northern cities named, and in all the rest of America as well.

This nation still bleeds for the sin of slavery and for the omission of deeds we should have done, and the commission of others we should not have done in those intervening years.

The river of pain flowing from that original sin sometimes ebbs, and sometimes rises, but it is never far from our consciousness or our conscience.

Charles Pickering, a 64-year-old federal district judge who hails from Jones County in South Mississippi, can attest to that fact. President Bush has nominated him to a seat on the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit in New Orleans. For those who oppose him he is a tempting target, for all of those ghosts of Mississippi's past come suddenly to life with the awful thoughts of night riders, nooses and burning crosses.

Judge Pickering's own words and actions four decades ago have become the thread upon which his opposition seeks to deny him confirmation.

Opponents such as the NAACP and the Congressional Black Caucus have cited several concerns with the nominee, but two incidents seem to raise the most serious questions involving his fitness for the appeals court judgeship.

In 1959, while a student a the University of Mississippi Law School, Pickering wrote a Law Review article examining interracial marriage. The article explored how the law should be amended "if it is to serve the purpose that the Legislature undoubtedly intended it to serve."

In 1964, the judge switched to the Republican Party, he later said, because of the "humiliation and embarrassment" he felt had been heaped on Mississippi when President Lyndon Johnson asked the all-white state Democratic delegation to give up two seats to blacks from the "Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party."

Today he regrets those words, utterances that can never be fully removed from the history of one man's life.
Perfection is a high standard. Charles Pickering did not achieve it.

Can any of us say we have?

REV_00140800

But since that long-ago day and those failed utterances, he has been transformed. One cannot say for sure that he has had a change of heart, but of certainty it can be said he has been a changed man.

Since 1964 his public record has been exemplary by any standard.

He has courageously stood up to the Ku Klux Klan's imperial wizard, a stand that contributed to his subsequent defeat as district attorney.

He defended African-Americans in criminal cases that other white attorneys would not handle. He has worked with University of Mississippi Chancellor Robert Khayat to establish an Institute of Racial Reconciliation at Ole Miss and he serves on that board today.

In the cauldron of this firestorm over his nomination, he is supported by the largely black community in his hometown, and by most black leaders in his home state, those who have seen his actions up close for these many years, voices with great moral authority on such matters, including Charles Evers, brother of slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers.

There is a plague of piousness afoot in our land today as politicians preen and pontificate before the cameras of so many committee rooms, preaching and prattling to cater to the public opinion of the moment.
Their sermons often seem more the words of the Pharisees than the thoughts of pure hearts. It is true of those who have cast their stones at Judge Pickering.

You wonder if Abraham Lincoln or Hugo Black were seeking confirmation from these fellows if either could stand the scrutiny of these modern Jacobins.

Lincoln's own dreadful words would lash him like a whip . . . words so awful they could not be printed today without stirring pain and bitterness. Certainly Black, a former Klansman, could not have stood their test.

Yet one--Lincoln--many have said was this country's greatest president; the Great Emancipator--the man who freed the slaves and whose leadership maintained the Union. And the other, Justice Black, became one of the leading civil libertarians in U.S. history, rendering opinions whose breadth and majesty extended the rights of African-Americans to their most expansive state.

The young American nation often embraced the idea of redemption, a sense of charity that extends to those who have a change of heart, and who thereafter act in a way that is consistent with the "new way" they have embraced.

Charles Pickering should be confirmed because he is a good man whose past service is proof that he will render justice fairly to all, and whose personal courage and record have earned him not only the nomination of his president, but the approbation of his countrymen.

Faulty logic on Pickering

Frank Roso
The Dallas Morning News

EXCERPT

I have read several columns declaring that Judge Charles Pickering, nominated by President Bush for the federal bench, should not be awarded that post. The reasoning given relies on secondhand information regarding the judge's alleged racial bias while serving in official capacity in his home state. The events took place decades ago and the judge, by most accounts, appears to have become quite an advocate of racial equality.

Apparently, the judge's opponents don't believe "a leopard can change its spots." Such proclamations are amazing coming from a party, the Democrats, that counts among its members a former member of the Ku Klux Klan, Sen. Robert Byrd.

Borking Atticus Finch?

Richard E. Marsh Jr.
The Washington Times
February 23, 2002, Saturday

Clearly, there are many in Laurel, Miss., who regard Judge Charles Pickering as a latter-day Atticus Finch ("Borking Judge Pickering," Editorials, Feb. 21).

Sen. John Edwards, North Carolina Democrat, would have accused Atticus Finch of misconduct for sitting on the jail's front porch and staring down the lynch mob, based on the treatment he gave Judge Pickering.

Nomination trapped by the Jeffords effect

Terry Eastland
The Washington Times
February 22, 2002, Friday

Last May, even as Vermont Sen. James Jeffords of Vermont prepared to leave the Republican Party, President

Bush decided to nominate U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering to the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, which encompasses Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi. Judge Pickering has endured not one but two Senate Judiciary Committee hearings. Today, his nomination is in doubt. And the main reason it is can be traced to Mr.

REV_00140802

Jeffords' departure from the GOP.

Before he left, the two parties had the same number of senators: 50. But the GOP controlled the Senate on the strength of Vice President Dick Cheney's authority to cast tie-breaking votes. Mr. Jeffords' departure - he became an independent - reduced the Republican number to 49. The Democrats thus gained control, an event of predictable consequence for judicial appointments. Most judicial nominees are confirmed regardless of who controls the White House or the Senate. But when, as now, there is divided government - with one party in control of the White House and the other the Senate - more nominations are likely to be contested and defeated than when the same party controls both.

Had Sen. Jeffords remained a Republican, Judge Pickering would have been confirmed long ago. He was unanimously confirmed for the district court in 1990, and the American Bar Association has rated him "well qualified." Even now, if he could be voted out of committee, he would stand a good chance of winning confirmation, since two Democrats - Fritz Hollings and Zell Miller - have voiced their support.

Judge Pickering's problem, however, is how to get from here to there - from the committee, where the Democrats hold a 10-to-9 edge, to the Senate floor.

The Judiciary Committee is territory patrolled by Democrats Patrick Leahy of Vermont (the chairman), Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts, Joseph Biden of Delaware, Herb Kohl and Russell Feingold of Wisconsin, Dianne Feinstein of California, Charles Schumer of New York, Richard Durbin of Illinois, Maria Cantwell of Washington and John Edwards of North Carolina, most of whom are exquisitely attuned to the imprecations of left-wing interest groups, such as People for the American Way and Alliance for Justice. Those groups have pushed hard, and so far successfully, against the nomination.

Judge Pickering himself has the misfortune of having virtually invisible White House support. He was chosen largely out of deference to a senator, his longtime friend Trent Lott, who began pitching for the judge's elevation to the 5th Circuit when he was Senate majority leader.

Had Mr. Lott not lobbied for Judge Pickering's nomination - announced last May 25, one day after Sen. Jeffords fled the GOP - Mr. Bush probably would have selected someone else. Judge Pickering, after all, is a few months away from 65, the age a judge may take senior status. Nor, his ABA rating aside, is he a legal superstar, someone likely to shape the law of the 5th Circuit. "We did this solely to please the then majority leader," one administration official told me. "It's his guy, and it's up to him to get him confirmed."

That task would be far easier were the "then majority leader" still the majority leader.

Rarely making headlines, the Pickering nomination has become a series of stories within a story. Some Democrats are motivated against the nomination because they don't like the way Trent Lott ran the Senate. Others are inclined against the nomination as payback to Republicans for their sometimes slow processing of Clinton judicial nominees, including three for the 5th Circuit who failed even to get hearings.

Also, there are Clinton Justice Department lawyers who butted heads with Judge Pickering over their sentencing recommendations in a cross-burning case and are laboring against him behind the scenes. And, of course, there are the liberal interest groups, back after eight years on the sidelines, picking at Judge Pickering as a warm-up for the real battle - over a Bush nominee to the Supreme Court.

Substantively, the case against the nominee is unimpressive. He grew up in segregated Mississippi, but the left's effort to portray him as "insensitive" to civil rights is misguided and unfair: In 1967, as an elected county prosecutor, Mr. Pickering testified against the imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan, an act of moral courage that cost him his office. Judge Pickering does hold conservative political views. But, contrary to concerns voiced by the law firm of Leahy, Kennedy, Biden et al., his record on the bench isn't that of a judge who fails to distinguish between his own personal and political views and what the law says.

Of course, none of that may matter, since the Democrats have the power to defeat his nomination. This is the Jeffords effect, and the jury is out on whether Trent Lott can overcome it. He might, but probably not unless Mr. Bush, stingy with expenditures of his considerable political capital, finally decides to join the battle.

Judge Smith's Ruling In No Way Hint at Favoritism Toward Bank in Black

Richard A. Finberg
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
February 22, 2002 Friday

As lead plaintiffs' counsel in various litigations relating to John Gardner Black, I wanted to share my firsthand views respecting the Post-Gazette's front-page article criticizing Judge D. Brooks Smith's rulings in the Securities and Exchange Commission case against Black (whose scheme resulted in losses of about $70 million to school districts and others) ("Black Case Could Sideswipe Nominee," Feb. 20). Unfortunately, the article is based on a mistaken fact, and therefore is unfairly critical of Judge Smith.

The article implies that Judge Smith should have realized sooner that Mid-State Bank was a potential defendant and therefore should have recused himself sooner due to stock investments in the bank and his wife's job in another area of the bank. The article states incorrectly that Judge Smith ruled in a manner that "would have effectively reduced Mid-State's liability and forced districts with assets elsewhere to subsidize the losses of districts whose assets were held at Mid-State." Respectfully, the Post-Gazette has misconstrued Judge Smith's ruling. Specifically, on Oct. 27, 1997, Judge Smith entered an order approving the joint motion of the trustee (Richard Thornburgh) and the SEC to make an interim distribution of assets over which Black's companies (Devon or FMS) had investment authority. Under this order, those with funds held at banks other than Mid-State Bank, including those with repurchase agreements, would receive up to 50 percent of the market value of the funds held in their name, while those with funds in the pooled FMS account at Mid-State Bank would receive 50 percent of their pro rata share of the market value of such pooled funds.

This ruling therefore did not shift losses between Mid-State Bank customers and customers of other banks, but simply allowed all school districts to receive, on an interim basis, one-half of the current actual value of their funds in their respective banks. In fact, because the approximate $70 million collateral shortfall investment was in the FMS account at Mid-State Bank, school districts with deposits at Mid-State Bank would receive only about 25 percent of their investments in the interim distribution, while those with accounts elsewhere would receive 50 percent.

The Oct. 27, 1997, order provided a 10-day period to file objections to the scheduled distribution amounts. Several objections to the specific amounts were filed, as Judge Smith contemplated, and on Dec. 4, 1997, U.S. District Judge Donetta Ambrose entered an order that was virtually identical to Judge Smith's Oct. 27 order, except for technical corrections in the distribution schedule. In upholding Judge Ambrose's order, the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals was not in any sense reversing Judge Smith. The Post-Gazette's conclusions that Judge Smith's ruling "did not stand" and that Judge Ambrose ruled that Judge "Smith had improperly combined the Mid-State and non Mid-State assets" are erroneous.

This firm has since Oct. 15, 1997, played a lead and ongoing role in numerous litigations in state and federal courts (including the bankruptcy court) involving the Black fiasco, and our co-counsel in the Mid-State Bank litigation, Richard R. Nelson II and Cohen & Grigsby, was involved from the outset, immediately after the SEC obtained the asset freeze on Sept. 26, 1997. From this extensive involvement, we are not aware of any impropriety or even appearance of impropriety on the part of Judge Smith, and contrary to the Post-Gazette story, Judge Smith has made no rulings in these proceedings that would even hint that he favored Mid-State Bank.

Nomination deserves legitimate review

Philip Gailey
St. Petersburg Times
February 24, 2002, Sunday

If you wonder why fewer and fewer people are willing to subject themselves to the Senate confirmation process, consider the smear campaign being waged against Charles Pickering Sr. In 1990, the Mississippi lawyer was nominated by President George Bush to be a federal district court judge. His nomination won the unanimous approval of the Senate Judiciary Committee and the full Senate. Now Pickering has been nominated for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals by President George W. Bush, and the opposition is vicious. There are legitimate reasons for why the Senate should deny Pickering this promotion. However, those reasons have little or nothing to do with the ugly campaign being conducted by liberal interest groups bent on destroying his reputation. Pickering is a conservative Republican who has served on the federal district court without particular distinction. He is neither the progressive his defenders say he is nor the Neanderthal his opponents make him out to be. He has a bad habit of injecting his personal views into legal opinions on controversial issues, and some of his opinions suggest that he is not entirely comfortable with key principles of civil rights law, although he generally respects the precedents established by higher courts. His primary qualification appears to be his close friendship with Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott. The president could have come up with a better choice, and the Senate has every right to insist that he do so.

That People for the American Way and other liberal groups have played the race card against Pickering - while denying that they are doing any such thing - only further degrades a judicial confirmation process that has become a nasty arena for advancing political and ideological agendas. The way the process works these days is, interest groups comb through a nominee's work and his personal life looking for anything that can be spinned against him. The press reports on its findings, too, often without bothering to check the facts, and by the time the Senate Judiciary Committee holds a confirmation hearing, the wounded nominee limps into the room on the defensive as senators move in for the kill. Both parties play this game, by the way.

The Washington Post, no advocate for Pickering, expressed its disgust with the ugliness of the campaign against him in a recent editorial: "His critics have focused for the most part not on his qualifications, temperament, approach to judging or on the quality of his judicial work. The judge's opponents, rather, have tried to paint him as a barely reconstructed segregationist. To do so, they have plucked a number of unconnected incidents from a long career: a law review article from 1959 on the state's antimiscegenation statute, written when Judge Pickering was a law student; his incidental contacts as a state legislator in the 1970s with the Mississippi state Sovereignty Commission; and his handling of a cross-burning case in his court a few years back, to cite a few examples. None of these incidents, when examined closely, amounts to much, but opponents string them together, gloss over their complexities and self-righteously present a caricature of an unworthy candidate."

Jonathan Groner of the Legal Times did an analysis of Pickering's rulings and talked to African-American leaders in his community and state. He found that Pickering and his record are far more complicated than his liberal critics suggest.

While the national NAACP opposes Pickering's nomination, many prominent blacks in Mississippi support it. They say they do not recognize the man Washington interest groups are accusing of "insensitivity" (no one uses the word "racist") on civil rights. The Charles Pickering they know is the young lawyer who, in the early 1960s, helped send a Ku Klux Klan leader to prison even though it cost him re-election as a local prosecutor. He is the federal judge who has worked with local civic leaders to keep young African-Americans out of the criminal justice system. Long before he became a federal judge, he was involved in racial reconciliation efforts, and from the bench he once rebuked an attorney who brought up a plaintiff's homosexuality during a fraud trial. "Homosexuals are as much entitled to be protected from fraud as are any other human beings," the judge told the attorney.

One of the African-Americans in Mississippi who has come to Pickering's defense is James Charles Evers, the brother of the slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers. Writing in the Wall Street Journal, Evers said of Pickering's civil rights record: "He has taken tough stands at tough times in the past, and the treatment he and his record are receiving at the hands of certain interest groups is shameful."

His opponents say Pickering is hostile to employment discrimination claims. In one case they cite, two blacks who owned a grocery store sued a supplier under civil rights laws for cutting off their credit. Pickering ruled in favor of the supplier, finding no evidence of discrimination. His critics say they have less problem with his decision in this case than with the "harsh" language Pickering used in his opinion. He wrote: "When an adverse action is taken affecting one covered by (civil rights) laws, there is a tendency on the part of the person affected to spontaneously react that discrimination caused the action. All of us have difficulty accepting the fact that we sometimes create our own problems."

The Legal Times said that what the judge's liberal critics fail to mention was that "the supplier canceled the credit terms after both store owners were arrested and indicted for allegedly threatening to murder a federal official. (They were later acquitted.)"
The Pickering nomination is the first major showdown between the president and Senate Democrats over the shape of the federal judiciary. If the Senate rejects the nomination, it should do so for legitimate reasons - and there are some - and not on the basis of a campaign of distortion and innuendo being waged by liberal interest groups. Pickering is not entitled to a seat on the appeals court, but he is entitled to a fair hearing.

Senators Sam Brownback, Republican of Kansas, and Dianne Feinstein, Democrat of California, discuss the nomination of Judge Charles Pickering to the Supreme Court, and the issue of cloning

MR. RUSSERT: We are back. Senators are welcome. Let me move first to the appointment, the nomination of Charles Pickering, a federal judge to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, a very important judiciary branch in our country. Senator Feinstein, you're on the Judiciary Committee. Will you vote for Charles Pickering?

SEN. DIANNE FEINSTEIN, (D-Calif.): No, I will not vote for him. I did have the privilege of chairing his hearing, his second hearing, which was a very full hearing. I believe that there's virtually unanimous opinion on the Democratic side of the Judiciary Committee that he will not be confirmed. In other words, he will not voted out of the Judiciary Committee.

MR. RUSSERT: So, all 10 Democrats will oppose him? SEN. FEINSTEIN: I believe so. Now, you know, obviously, that can change, and I think that this is a recommended appointment that has just been enormously polarizing. And, you know, there isn't a--it's very hard because, obviously, he's a sitting federal court judge. But the views of people are really enormous. It's a polarized community out there. You have every chapter--106 chapters in Mississippi--of the NAACP opposing him, including, his own chapter in Laurel, Mississippi. I think he's had a record of involving some of his personal views and his opinions, and, of course, when he was in public office, he took extraordinary right-wing positions on issues. This is a very sensitive circuit. It represents people of color in a major way. It used to be sort of a breakthrough circuit, in terms of securing rights for people, and it's become much, much more conservative.

I think that people on our side believe that it would be a tremendous mistake to put someone as polarizing in this position now. So I believe he will not be confirmed.

MR. RUSSERT: Senator Brownback.

SEN. SAM BROWNBACK, (R-Kan.): Well, I think he should be confirmed. And I'd sure like us to start getting at least a few judges confirmed. There are over 100 judicial positions, federal district courts, circuit court judge positions that are open in the country today. Judges have been confirmed at a rate of less than 40 percent during the Clinton or first Bush--term Bush One, if you will. We need to get some judges out there and confirmed in positions, if for no other reason than for homeland security, so we can deal with judicial issues coming forward. And they've been continually held on up. Judge Pickering...

MR. RUSSERT: But both parties did that. When President Clinton...

SEN. FEINSTEIN: That's correct. That's correct.

MR. RUSSERT: ...from '95 to 2000, 35 percent of Clinton's appointments to the court of appeals were blocked.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: And then 65 percent the next year.

SEN. BROWNBACK: If you're looking, though, at a comparable period of time, under George Bush, the president now, Bush 43rd, as it was during President Clinton's first years in office, you had a far greater number of people confirmed at that period of time. And plus, the Democrats at that point in time, which--we used to point this out greatly about the number of positions that are open, 100 federal district court and circuit court judge positions that are open. That really is untenable, and it shouldn't continue.

MR. RUSSERT: As for Judge Pickering, let me just ask one question on that that I found quite striking. He has been reversed 26 times.

SEN. BROWNBACK: Out of about 4,009 cases.

MR. RUSSERT: But what's important here is 15 of those cases he was reversed because he did not accept well-settled principles of law. Judge Edith Brown Clement, who's also in that district, who was put on the bench, extremely conservative, but not opposed, was never reversed on issues of well-settled principles of law. Does that bother you?

SEN. BROWNBACK: And--well, how many total cases, Tim? I mean, I've practiced law. How many total cases? I mean, I think we have about 4,000 cases that you're talking about.

MR. RUSSERT: But well-settled principle law is...

SEN. BROWNBACK: Well...

MR. RUSSERT: ...as a lawyer, as you well know, is very, very important because...

SEN. BROWNBACK: And it's also in the view of the beholder, well-settled principles of law. I mean...

MR. RUSSERT: But a denial of legal precedent is an indication that someone is not willing to accept legal precedent, which suggests, or indicates, perhaps, their personal opinions are being woven in.

SEN. BROWNBACK: Well, out of what percentage is he not willing to accept? And, plus, if I could submit to you, as a lawyer, the issues of well-settled principles of law is open to definition by lawyers, that one would say this is well-settled, others would not. You know, about 26 cases out of 4,000--I would say that the man is very willing to accept well-settled principled cases of law. Plus, you might recall that we went through some of these same sort of arguments with Attorney General John Ashcroft. People said, "OK, he's going to insert his own personal opinions in these cases." He testified in committee under oath, "I'm not going to do that. This is what the law is. I will enforce the law even if my personal opinion is to differ on that." And I think it's very clear that what you have here is an honorable man, son in the United States Congress, as well, been sitting on the federal bench for some period of time--this is a good man that people are really trying to smear in a way that is not becoming of the institution, and yet it seems to be the way that is evolving around here.

MR. RUSSERT: If the Judiciary Committee rejects Judge Pickering by a vote of 10-to-9, what happens?

REV_00140809

SEN. BROWNBACK: I think you're going to see a lot of people taking actions to try to move that on forward some other way, to see if we can bring pressure to bear on the committee, and to try to press the committee to start getting more judicial nominations in total, moving on through the process. And we can do it.

MR. RUSSERT: Senator Lott has said, "Pickering will be confirmed or else." What does "or else" mean?

SEN. BROWNBACK: I can't speak for Trent, what he's saying on that. But the Senate is virtually evenly divided, and we really do need to be working together to be able to get things on through because we've got a lot of major legislation, passed the House, been held up in the Senate.

MR. RUSSERT: Senator Feinstein, let me pick up on a point that Senator Brownback raised and that is the destruction of judicial nominees. This is what The Washington Post had to say. They said there are a lot of grounds to oppose Pickering. But "...opposing a nominee should not mean destroying him. And the attack on Judge Pickering has become an ugly affair. His critics have focused for the most part not on his qualifications, temperament, approach to judging or on the quality of his judicial work. The judge's opponents, rather, have tried to paint him as a barely reconstructed segregationist. To do so, they have plucked a number of unconnected incidents from a long career...None of these incidents, when examined closely, amounts to much, but opponents string them together, gloss over their complexities and self-righteously present a caricature of an unworthy candidate."

Reaction?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Well, my reaction is this, and I've looked rather carefully at his background, and I think you have a person who has very strong right-wing views, both politically and personally. The question always comes: Can you put those views entirely aside? This is a lifetime appointment. If you can't be assured that the individual is really going to put those views aside, what happens is two years into the term those views creep forward again. And, generally, when you say, "Well, we're going to follow precedent," there are enough edges around precedent that an individual's views do come into it. That's my finding after nearly a decade on that committee.

I think there's another thing. President Bush did not have a large mandate. There is no mandate, in my view, to skew the courts to the right. And so I think you're going to see a Judiciary Committee that's really going to be looking for mainstream judges, and those judges that they find outside of the mainstream I do not believe will have Democratic support.

MR. RUSSERT: If the Judiciary Committee votes against Pickering 10-to-9, is the nomination dead?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: I believe so.

REV_00140810

MR. RUSSERT: There's no way to bring it to the floor?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: No. I do not believe there is, unless there's a vote to bring it to the floor. If the committee wants to keep it in the committee, the committee can do so. If there is a separate vote to bring it to the floor, then it will go to the floor.

MR. RUSSERT: Would that happen, a vote would go to the floor without recommendation or a negative recommendation?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Well, I can't say for sure. I don't know. We have only, you know, discussed this informally amongst ourselves, so I can't answer that.

SEN. BROWNBACK: And I would hope we wouldn't have litmus tests on judges. It used to be that, OK, Ronald Reagan was accused of a litmus test on judge. We shouldn't have a litmus test from the left or the right on judges. And I think it'd be fair to say that that should be a standard for both sides.

MR. RUSSERT: Let me turn to another...

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Let me just say one thing 'cause I can't let that one go. This isn't a federal district court. This is an appellate court. For most people, the appellate courts are very much like the Supreme Court. They decide the cases. There are big cases to be decided. There are points that many of us feel passionately about, one of them being Roe vs. Wade. Sam and I would disagree on Roe vs. Wade. I don't want to see Roe overturned. I'm in a position where I'm going to be very careful that a judge that I vote for to go to a circuit court will not do that. And I think I have every right to do so. It's not a question of a litmus test. It's a question of following established law and keeping that law intact.

SEN. BROWNBACK: I think that was defined as a litmus test under Ronald Reagan what Senator Feinstein just articulated.

MR. RUSSERT: We want to come back and talk about cloning. We're going to take a quick break. Another complicated controversial issue, cloning, either reproductive or therapeutic, right after this.

Judge Charles Pickering pleads case to Democratic Judiciary Committee for spot as judge; the NAACP and other minority groups protest his appointment

ABC News
World News Tonight Sunday
February 24, 2002 Sunday

CAROLE SIMPSON; anchor

This Thursday, the Senate Judiciary Committee is expected to vote on a fiercely contested judicial nomination. The battle began when President Bush tapped Mississippi federal judge Charles Pickering for a seat on the fifth circuit federal appeals court. At issue, Pickering's record on civil rights and abortion.

Judge CHARLES PICKERING: The charges that have been made against me have been hurtful, and they have been painful. SIMPSON: (VO) This was 64-year-old judge Pickering fighting for his troubled nomination before the Democratic-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee.

Judge PICKERING: I have a record of standing up for equal protection, respecting the rule of law.

SIMPSON: (VO) But critics of the conservative Republican strongly disagree. Among them, the NAACP.

Mr. KWEISI MFUME (NAACP President): Our challenge is not against him the individual; it's against his record which has demonstrated over the years an insensitivity and a lack of tolerance, particularly on civil rights issues.

SIMPSON: (VO) His opponents point to a 1959 article Pickering wrote in law school against interracial marriage. As a state legislator in the '70s, they say he supported funding for the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission, an avowed segregationist organization. And his critics say as recently as 1994, Judge Pickering engaged in extraordinary lobbying to try to get a reduced sentence for a young man who participated in a cross burning. The White House says the judge is being unfairly maligned.

Mr. ALBERTO GONZALES (White House Counsel): If you go to the people that know him best, the people in his home town, including the established black community, they firmly support Judge Pickering.

SIMPSON: (VO) Judge Pickering was born and raised in Laurel, Mississippi, population 18,000. The town was hot bed of Ku Klux Klan activities in the 1950s and '60s. It made international headlines when the Klan firebombed the home of a local civil rights leader. Vernon Dahmer was killed in that blaze. A local Klan leader, Sam Bowers, was tried in the case, and Judge Pickering, then a local prosecutor, testified against him. Today in Laurel, people still respect Pickering for what he did.

Mr. THADDEUS EDMONSON (Laurel City Council President): This man has put his own life on the line against the Ku Klux Klan in this city.

SIMPSON: How?

Mr. EDMONSON: By testifying against the imperial wizard of the state of Mississippi, which in 1967, '69, was not a popular thing to do.

SIMPSON: Judge Pickering's black supporters say that the judge is part of the new South. He has changed over the past 40 years, just as the town of Laurel has changed.

Ms. ANNE CLAYTON (Laurel City Council): Just because of the past, what has happened in a person's past, I don't think we should condemn them and feel like they cannot ever change.

Mr. LARRY THOMAS (Pharmacist): I still view Charles Pickering as a--a right-wing Republican. But then on the other hand, I saw him open his arms to try to embrace change palatable to both races in south Mississippi.

SIMPSON: (VO) But for a coalition of 50 civil rights, human rights and women's groups, that is not enough.

Mr. MFUME: While there are some people on the ground in Mississippi who say, well, perhaps he's changed, perhaps he has, but I don't think we have the--the wherewithal and the freedom to run that risk because once the judge is there, there's nothing that can remove him except death.

SIMPSON: Sources on the Judiciary Committee staff say there is a chance that Judge Pickering's nomination may not make it out of the Democratic-led Judiciary Committee. Its members may seek payback for Republicans' failure to approve some of President Clinton's nominees.

Battle brewing on Capitol Hill over Bush's nomination of Charles Pickering to Federal Appeals Court

NBC News Transcripts
NBC Nightly News
February 24, 2002 Sunday

ANCHORS: JOHN SEIGENTHALER

REPORTERS: JOE JOHNS

JOHN SEIGENTHALER, anchor:

On Capitol Hill, a battle is brewing over the confirmation of the president's nominee to the Federal Court of Appeals. NBC's Joe Johns reports.

JOE JOHNS reporting:

Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi faced two confirmation hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee, but his Federal Appeals Court nomination is in trouble. Senator DIANNE FEINSTEIN (Democrat, California): It would be a tremendous mistake to put someone as polarizing in this position now.

JOHNS: More opposition coming from powerful groups including the National Organization for Women.

Ms. KIM GADNY (National Organization for Women): He has an extreme bias towards the enforcement of women's rights laws and particularly civil rights laws.

JOHNS: The NAACP is opposed, too, even though some blacks in Pickering's home state support him.
Reverend GEORGE BARNES (Mississippi Minister): I do not hold people accountable for something that happened 25 or 30 years ago.

JOHNS: The judge, as recently as last Thursday, calling for racial reconciliation.

Unidentified Man: I look forward to the day, hopefully during my lifetime, when all Mississippians, regardless of race, can get around the table and discuss our differences in a constructive way.

JOHNS: The 12 regional courts of appeals get the final word on the vast majority of important federal cases. There are 29 vacancies. The Senate has voted on seven appeals court judgeships, but Pickering is the biggest confrontation so far.

REV_00140814

Senator SAM BROWNBACK (Republican, Kansas): This is a good man that--that people are really trying to smear in a--in a way that is--that is not becoming of the institution.

JOHNS: Some observers call this a dress rehearsal for future battles between the White House and Senate Democrats over the Supreme Court.

Mr. PAUL ROTHSTEIN (Georgetown University Law School): It's a warning sh--shot across the bow of the ship of state led by President Bush that, 'Please do not give us conservative Supreme Court nominees.'

JOHNS: A vote on the nomination could come later this week, setting down a new marker between the White House and the Senate over federal judges. Joe Johns, NBC News, Washington.

Political Activity Overview
(February 20, 2002)

General Principle

- In general, Executive Office of the President political appointees (EOP)[1] and Senate-confirmed officials (PAS) may engage in a wide variety of political activity (other than expressly soliciting contributions) including while on duty and in the office. The government must be reimbursed for additional costs associated with that activity -- that is, the costs beyond what the government otherwise would have incurred.
    - Certain investigative and national security agencies have more restrictive rules and policies; each such agency is responsible for appropriate guidance.

The Major Rules for EOP and PAS Officials

- Fundraisers
    - may appear and speak at fundraisers, but no explicit fundraising
- Use of Title
    - no use of actual title in invitations to political events
      (attempt to review invitations in advance)
    - may use "The Honorable" if applicable; former political titles appropriate
    - the official title may be used in a biography distributed at the event itself, in the introduction of the speaker, and in other similar ways at event
- Travel Costs
    - appropriate political entity pays costs associated with political travel
    - mixed trips: reimbursement determined by "total activity time"
    - security-related costs are official costs
    - corporate aircraft policy (do not use absent extraordinary circumstances)
    - Events in government buildings
        - no fundraising events on government property
        - appearance issues with donors qua donors
- Equipment
    - generally permissible for EOP and PAS officials to use equipment such as computers, printers, telephones, and FAXes for reasonable political activity because there are no additional costs incurred by government except incidental costs of paper
        - appearance issues from excessive use

[1] Such officials ordinarily work beyond normal work hours and outside the normal duty post as contemplated by the regulations.

Official versus Political

- Few bright-line rules; often a case-by-case judgment (1982 OLC opinion)
- The definitional issue is relevant primarily for use of title and travel purposes.
- Political activity is activity primarily related to an election, a campaign, a political party event, or a political party's operations.
    - Speaking at or attending an event held by a political party or political organization is ordinarily considered "political" unless the speaker is speaking only on official policy matters; if the event is a fundraiser or a campaign event, however, it ordinarily should be considered political regardless of content.
    - An otherwise official event is official notwithstanding that it may somehow incidentally assist the popularity of a political party or candidate (for example, if the event is in a district of a political candidate or if a political candidate such as a House member attends the event).
        - Speakers at an official event should avoid expressly advocating the election of a candidate.
    - Being knowledgeable about the political environment and the status of particular races can be relevant to one's official duties, for it is all but impossible to understand Congress or state or local government without being knowledgeable about the overall political/electoral environment in Congress and the states. Therefore, a briefing on the political environment and the status of particular races can be considered official activity depending on the overall context of the briefing.
    - Being knowledgeable about public opinion and public approval similarly can be relevant to one's official duties, and briefings on such issues ordinarily should be considered official activity depending on the overall context of the briefing.
- Informing the public about public policy issues, about the official and ceremonial activities of the President and the Administration, about activities in Congress, and about the Administration's legislative strategy is official activity (and indeed can be an official responsibility).

Principle for non-EOP, non-PAS employees

- Other Executive Branch officers and employees (again, except those in certain investigative and national security agencies) may engage in a wide variety of political activity, but they may do so only while off duty and not on government property.

- The law also recognizes, however, that certain Executive Branch employees who are not themselves White House or PAS officials may be required in the performance of their official duties to accompany or assist White House or PAS officials engaging in political activity (for example, ordinary duties related to security, scheduling, or typing). Such assistance is permissible, and the government need not be reimbursed for the compensation and expenses associated with such assistance.

Specific Rules

- Except for those in certain investigative and national security agencies, the permissible range of political activities includes:

    - participation in political organizations, which includes:

        - being a member of a political party;
        - serving as an officer of a political party;
        - attending and participating in nominating caucuses;
        - organizing a political party;
        - participating in a political convention or rally; and
        - serving as a delegate to a political convention.

    - participation in political campaigns, which includes:

        - displaying political pictures, signs, stickers, or buttons (although employees other than White House and PAS appointees cannot do so while on duty or in their offices);
        - circulating a nominating petition;
        - canvassing for votes;
        - endorsing or opposing a candidate in an advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material (so long as one's official title is not used, except for that of the President and Vice President);
        - addressing a convention, caucus, rally, or similar gathering of a political party or political group; and
        - actively managing the political campaign of a partisan political candidate or candidate for political party office.

    - participation in elections, including:

        - voting;
        - acting as officer or watcher at a polling place;
        - serving as election judge or clerk; and
        - driving voters to polling places.

    - participation in fundraising:

Other than the President or Vice President, Executive Branch officers and employees may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions. However, Executive Branch officers and employees (other than those in certain investigative and national security agencies) may:

- make political contributions;
- attend political fundraisers;
- manage or organize political fundraisers behind the scenes;
- speak at political fundraisers, so long as one's official title is not used (the term of address "The Honorable" may be used);
- be listed as a guest speaker on the invitation for a fundraiser, so long as the invitation does not use one's official title (again, the term of address "the Honorable" may be used);
- solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services from any individual, without using one's official title (however, a superior may not ask his or her subordinate employee to provide such services, nor may he or she ask a company or entity with official matters pending before the agency to provide such services).

- As the above summary reveals, certain kinds of political activities are forbidden:
  - no soliciting, accepting, or receiving political contributions, except by President and Vice President (but officials may organize, manage, appear at, and speak at fundraisers)
  - no fundraising on government property
  - official's name cannot appear on an invitation as a "sponsor" of a fundraiser, but can be identified as a guest speaker
  - official's title cannot be used in connection with political events, but can use "The Honorable"
  - general misuse of official authority
    - cannot ask regulated entities or those under investigation to engage in political activities; however, one can speak to a diverse group that includes individuals within those categories
    - cannot ask subordinates to engage in political activity; however, superiors and subordinates may interact on political matters when both are involved in same political activity or organization
  - other than President and Vice President, cannot run as a candidate in a partisan election except under specified circumstances

Subject: Victims Rights

If anyone has any concerns with the text of the victims rights constitutional amendment as Viet presented it to us, please let me know by the end of the day on Wednesday. As we discussed at the meeting, the Department is interested in potentially having a White House ceremony announcing the President's support for the amendment during National Crime Victims Week, which is April 21-27. Thank you.

Congressman Wants FBI Records
By Melissa B. Robinson
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON)) The chairman of a House committee said Wednesday he may try to hold President Bush in contempt of Congress for failing to turn over Justice Department records on the FBI's handling of mob informants in Boston in the 1960s.
Rep. Dan Burton, R-Ind., chairman of the Government Reform Committee, said during a hearing on the Boston case that his panel's legal staff "is preparing a contempt citation."
If Bush and Attorney General John Ashcroft "continue to be recalcitrant, I hope everyone on this committee will support me in getting the House to move this forward," Burton said.
It's unclear how long Burton will wait for the documents before deciding to bring the citation before his committee for consideration. If he does, and the committee approves it, he would then have to convince the House's Republican leaders to bring the citation against a GOP president to the full House for a vote.
Bush ordered Ashcroft to withhold the documents from the committee in December. He cited executive privilege, a doctrine recognized by the courts that ensures presidents can get candid advice in private without fear it will become public.
Bush argued that releasing records could have a chilling effect on prosecutors' willingness to discuss criminal matters.

Committee members of both parties have argued the documents should be released to Congress so it can fulfill its responsibility of monitoring the executive branch's activities.
With regard to the Boston case, they want to ensure that past excesses of the FBI aren't repeated. Among the facts Burton's committee has learned since it began looking into the issue is the FBI's knowledge that an innocent man was convicted of a murder actually committed by an FBI informant.

"As Congressman Burton is well aware, the Department of Justice, at the direction of the White House, has been meeting with Congressman Burton's staff to determine which of the Boston documents his Committee has established a genuine need to review. Congressman Burton's staff has already conceded that it has no legitimate interest in several of the documents. Consistent with the President's directive, the Department of Justice is working with Congressman Burton's staff to resolve disputes as to the other documents. Talk of a contempt citation may attract the press's attention, but it does not advance the process that is already underway."

Brett - Hi, I'm the senior counsel in Barbara's office at DOJ Public Affairs. Here are some of the relevant Burton stories you thought everyone should be emailed. I'll send a daily email with additions on the subject. Take care.

The Associated Press, February 27, 2002
HEADLINE: Congressman Wants FBI Records
BYLINE: MELISSA B. ROBINSON

Faced with a contempt threat, the Justice Department agreed Wednesday to give a congressional committee records on the Boston FBI's handling of mob informants in the 1960s, the committee chairman said.
"My committee has been investigating this tragic case for over a year," said House Government Reform Chairman Dan Burton. "We've finally reached an agreement with the Justice Department to see the documents we need to see to move forward with this investigation."
A department spokesman declined comment, saying he was reviewing the details.
For now, the agreement settles the showdown between Burton and the White House over its use of executive privilege to shield prosecutorial documents from congressional scrutiny. The dispute had led to charges by both Democrats and Republicans that Bush was trying to run an "imperial" presidency.
At a committee hearing Wednesday, Burton said he might try to hold President Bush in contempt because he and Attorney General John Ashcroft had yet to comply with a subpoena for the documents.
After department officials and committee aides met later, the department agreed to provide five documents in question, the aides said. The committee had sought 10 records, but four were found to be irrelevant to the case or not responsive to the subpoena. One was provided earlier.
Executive privilege is a doctrine recognized by the courts that ensures presidents can get candid advice in private without fear it will become public.
Bush invoked it in December when he ordered Ashcroft not to turn the Boston records over. He argued that releasing the records could have a chilling effect on prosecutors' willingness to discuss criminal matters.
Burton has focused on revelations that Joseph Salvati of Boston spent 30 years in prison for a murder he did not commit even though the FBI had evidence of his innocence.

HEADLINE: Burton drafting contempt citation against Bush to get FBI records from the 1960s
BYLINE: By MELISSA B. ROBINSON, Associated Press Writer

The chairman of a House committee said Wednesday he may try to hold President Bush in contempt of Congress for failing to turn over Justice Department records on the FBI's handling of mob informants in Boston in the 1960s.
Rep. Dan Burton, R-Ind., chairman of the Government Reform Committee, said during a hearing on the Boston case that his panel's legal staff "is preparing a contempt citation."
If Bush and Attorney General John Ashcroft "continue to be recalcitrant, I hope everyone on this committee will support me in getting the House to move this forward," Burton said.
It's unclear how long Burton will wait for the documents before deciding to bring the citation before his committee for consideration. If he does, and the committee approves it, he would then have to convince the House's Republican leaders to bring the citation against a GOP president to the full House for a vote.

Bush ordered Ashcroft to withhold the documents from the committee in December. He cited executive privilege, a doctrine recognized by the courts that ensures presidents can get candid advice in private without fear it will become public.
Bush argued that releasing records could have a chilling effect on prosecutors' willingness to discuss criminal matters.
Committee members of both parties have argued the documents should be released to Congress so it can fulfill its responsibility of monitoring the executive branch's activities.
With regard to the Boston case, they want to ensure that past excesses of the FBI aren't repeated. Among the facts Burton's committee has learned since it began looking into the issue is the FBI's knowledge that an innocent man was convicted of a murder actually committed by an FBI informant.

HEADLINE: UNLIKELY FRIENDS, ENEMIES BURTON PROBE RILES BUSH, WINS PRAISE FROM DEMOCRATS
BYLINE: By Wayne Washington, Globe Staff

WASHINGTON - Dan Burton is a conservative Republican who has been liberal in his scorn for Democrats.
Few Republicans in Congress are seen by their Democratic counterparts as more partisan, more scandal-raking than Burton, a 10-term representative from Indiana. As chairman of the House Committee on Government Reform, he has conducted hearings on Bill Clinton's White House and presidential pardons, Democratic fund-raising, and the Clinton administration's handling of the FBI raid in Waco, Texas.
So how come Massachusetts Democrats have started saying such nice things about Burton? Representative William D. Delahunt of Quincy calls him "passionate." Representative Barney Frank of Newton says some of Burton's recent actions have been "impressive."
The surprising praise stems from Burton's investigation into how the false testimony of a murderous FBI informant sent four men to prison in 1967 for slaying Edward "Teddy" Deegan in Chelsea, a crime they did not commit. Two of the men died in prison. Two served about 30 years each before their convictions were overturned.
Burton will continue digging into the case today, when another committee hearing is scheduled.
For more than a year now, the Government Reform Committee has trained a sharp focus on what the FBI knew about the informant, the lengths it went to protect him, and its willingness to allow innocent men to be imprisoned on testimony the agency knew to be false. That focus has put Burton at odds with the Justice Department and the Bush White House.
Delahunt, a former Norfolk County district attorney with an interest in the case, says he originally preferred to have the House Judiciary Committee do the investigating. Three Massachusetts congressmen - Delahunt, Frank, and Martin T. Meehan - serve on Judiciary, and they would have surely gotten involved in a Boston-related case.
Republicans control the House, however, and that panel's Republican chairman, F. James Sensenbrenner Jr. of Wisconsin, had little interest in pursuing a case that would almost certainly be a headache for the Bush administration.
To the surprise of many Democrats, Burton pressed ahead. He decided to conduct hearings and invited the Massachusetts Democrats to participate.
The invitation was more than mere congressional courtesy. Delahunt, for example, was dispatched to Boston last week to take the deposition of a retired FBI agent who declined to travel to Washington to provide testimony.
Delahunt said his working relationship with Burton has been terrific.
"He's treated me with respect, and we've gotten full cooperation," Delahunt said.

Mark Corallo, spokesman for the Government Reform Committee, said fairness and justice are Burton's main interests.
"Contrary to popular belief, the chairman has always believed you have to look at the issues objectively," Corallo said. Democrats "know he's still a conservative Republican, but there are instances where everybody can come together," he said.
Well, not everybody.
The Justice Department has refused to comply with a committee subpoena for FBI records in the case. President Bush has issued an order contending that executive privilege allows his administration to keep the documents secret.
That position has infuriated Burton, who contends officials at the highest levels of the FBI, including then-director J. Edgar Hoover, knew the men being convicted were not guilty.
"He knew it, and his name should not be emblazoned on the FBI's headquarters," Burton said on "60 Minutes" last month. "We ought to change the name of that building."
Such fiery rhetoric is typically aimed at Democrats.
"Burton's willingness to take on the Bush administration has been impressive," Frank said. "His willingness to go after the memory of J. Edgar Hoover is impressive."
In the past, Frank has been one of Burton's sharpest critics.
"I thought his Clinton stuff was wacky," he said. "I'm critical of his positions. I'm less critical now of his motives."
Frank said he's particularly struck by the timing of Burton's actions.
"We've been in this atmosphere where we're giving more power to law enforcement," Frank said. "We should give law enforcement more power. They're the good guys. They're protecting us. But Burton is showing what can happen when that power is abused."
Still, some Democrats squirm at the news that Burton is getting praise from members of their party. Frank said colleagues have told him, "Don't be so nice to the guy."
Frank said he and his Massachusetts colleagues are giving praise where praise is due.
"Yes, I dislike Dan Burton," Frank said. "If he went back to doing some of the Clinton stuff, I'd be critical. But what goal is served by not encouraging him to go after these FBI abuses? Why would I not want to encourage that?"
Delahunt said he has sensed no reluctance from Burton about confronting the administration.
"In my mind, Dan Burton has proven himself beyond any reasonable doubt that he's interested in the facts of this case," Delahunt said.
Corallo, the Government Reform Committee spokesman, said Burton, who spent last week at home in Indiana with his sick wife, feels vindicated by the praise of Democrats. The relationship between Burton and Democrats has gone a long way toward bridging a partisan gap that developed during the Clinton administration, Corallo said.
"When you can start smiling at each other in the halls again, that's nice," Corallo said.

HEADLINE: Bush White House, Congress in a Tug-of-War over Balance of Power
BYLINE: By James Kuhnhenn

WASHINGTON -- The Bush White House provoked a major lawsuit and is angering even its political allies in a campaign to increase its control over federal spending and public information.
At stake are public access to White House deliberations, the fate of federal projects in communities across America, and the ever-shifting balance of power between Congress and the presidency.
Last week, the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, sued Vice President Dick Cheney to learn who participated in meetings he chaired while formulating the administration's energy policy.

The suit was the latest move in a series of clashes that illustrate the administration's determination to reverse what it believes is a decades-long erosion of presidential authority.
Congress is fighting back on other fronts as well.
Some influential lawmakers, including senior Republicans, are bristling at efforts by the White House Office of Management and Budget to limit spending on projects in their home districts. And when the White House rejected a request by Rep. Dan Burton, R-Ind., for Justice Department documents on organized crime dating to 1967, Burton threatened to hold President Bush in contempt of Congress.
Power struggles between Congress and the White House date to the nation's founders. But the current quarrels are distinguished by the administration's unyielding stance and the bipartisan furor it has aroused. They are especially noteworthy given a president who promised an administration characterized by openness and affability.
"It's hard to be an open populist when you're trying to protect presidential power," said Marshall Wittmann, a Republican strategist and fellow at the Hudson Institute, a conservative policy research center.
But for Cheney and Bush, fortifying the presidency is as much a policy goal as cutting taxes and building up the nation's defenses.
"One of the things that I feel an obligation on, and I know the president does, too ... is to pass on our offices in better shape than we found them," Cheney said recently on ABC's "This Week." "We are weaker today as an institution because of the unwise compromises that have been made over the last 30 or 35 years."
That view has brought the GAO lawsuit and the thundering contempt-of-Congress threat from Burton, the chairman of the House Government Reform Committee.
It has also led to a confrontation over what many lawmakers maintain is their fundamental right under the Constitution -- the power to decide how to spend taxpayers' money.
The White House and its budget office are out to limit Congress' practice of adding to spending legislation special projects for the folks back home.
Upon delivering the budget to Congress earlier this month, White House Budget Director Mitchell Daniels declared that such spending "has gotten out of hand." The administration took a swipe at Congress in the budget document, singling out an $ 80,000 grant to a Wisconsin county sheriff's department for the purchase of an Ice Angel Windsled, used for winter rescues on frozen Lake Superior.
It was no coincidence that the Republican Bush administration zeroed in on a project championed by the ranking Democrat on the Appropriations Committee, Wisconsin's David Obey. Obey was furious.
But Daniels had angered Republicans, too. To make up for a shortfall in a federal education program, he wanted to eliminate hundreds of health and education projects that members inserted into spending legislation last year.
Appropriations Committee Chairman Bill Young, R-Fla., fumed.
"All wisdom on the allocation of federal grant funding does not reside in the executive branch," he wrote Daniels on Feb. 6. "Unless the Constitution is amended, Congress will continue to exercise its discretion over federal funds and will earmark those funds for purposes we deem appropriate."
National moods, scandals and the personalities of the individuals occupying the White House have dictated the power swings from White House to Congress over the years. Congress was at its peak of power in the post-Watergate period.
"As time has passed, it has swung back to the executive," said Gary Bass, executive director of OMB Watch, a research group that advocates openness in government. "And this administration has put much greater stock in protecting executive turf."
In the end, the Bush White House may not win all these confrontations. But by drawing a line across Pennsylvania Avenue and daring Congress to cross it, Bush and Cheney have done more to assert presidential power than previous administrations.
But the White House faces significant political risks. The public may be more likely to believe that a president is hiding something rather than protecting a constitutional principle. Among the energy industry executives who advised

Cheney last year was Kenneth Lay, then Enron Corp. chairman, and a major fund-raiser for Bush's presidential campaign. By fighting the GAO, the White House gives fuel to critics who say that Cheney, a former energy company executive himself, was drafting a policy to benefit the administration's industry friends. Others say that Enron and energy policy aside, a successful White House stand could dramatically alter how Congress performs its job as a check on the executive branch.
"This could have huge, huge policy implications," said Bass of OMB Watch. "I do believe that Cheney and the White House are pursuing a principled issue on the energy task force. ...This is beyond Enron and the work of the Cheney task force. This is an issue about executive power."

SECTION: A SECTION; Pg. A19; WHITE HOUSE NOTEBOOK DANA MILBANK
HEADLINE: Pizza Crust, Principles and Politics
BYLINE: Dana Milbank

It was the modern political equivalent of Moses and the Burning Bush. On Inauguration Day 2001, Bush presidential aides entered the White House to discover the Miracle of the Warm Pizza Crust.
The famous crust was found, appropriately enough, in a pizza box that had been left on a desk when a Bush aide arrived for work on the new administration's first day. The discovery was included in a list of alleged vandalism of White House offices by departing Clinton aides, furnished by the Bush White House to the investigative arm of Congress, the General Accounting Office. But when presented with the warm-crust allegation, Clinton officials pointed out that no Clinton aides assigned to that office were even in the White House complex after Jan. 19 -- the day before inauguration.
This means that even if the Clinton aides left at midnight the night before and the Bush aides showed up at noon on Inauguration Day, the pizza crust stayed warm for 12 hours.
That the Bush administration would cooperate so freely in the GAO investigation of such matters as pizza temperature in the Clinton White House stands in stark contrast to the administration's stand against another GAO investigation, this one involving Vice President Cheney's energy task force. In protecting the identities and requests of outsiders who met with the task force, top White House officials have indicated they may challenge the constitutionality of the law empowering the GAO -- a move that, if successful, would pretty much put the 80-year-old office out of business.
In the GAO's Clinton vandalism probe, due to wrap up in April, the Bush administration has furnished the agency with a list of allegations.
"We are saddened that especially after the events of September 11, 2001, the White House continues to push this matter," two former Clinton aides in charge of White House administration, Mark Lindsay and Mike Malone, wrote to the GAO last month.
Lindsay and Malone pointed out some apparent flaws in the catalogue of Clinton vandalism, including the Warm Pizza Crust incident. The Bush team gave the GAO a photo of a dirty room in the White House complex, but the Clinton aides wrote that "the office featured in the photograph was vacated at least one week prior to Inauguration Day, and had been in fact completely cleaned by the morning of January 20th."
Then there was the case of Room 145 in the building next to the White House. The Bush administration said "historical artifacts" had been taken from the office. "We understand that at least one of the artifacts, an historic fireplace mirror, can be found hanging over the fireplace in [Bush] Chief of Staff [Andrew H.] Card's office," Lindsay and Malone wrote.
The GAO itself, in its suit filed last week against Cheney over the energy task force records, argues that the White House worked to "facilitate the investigation" into alleged Clinton vandalism. The suit points out that before President Bush came to office, "the executive branch has complied with countless GAO requests for information." The Clinton White House gave GAO the names of outside consultants who met with its health care task force and "thousands of documents" from a task force on trade relations with China.

Even the Nixon administration, no standard of transparency, relented during the Watergate years when the GAO wished to examine White House records. "To litigate the GAO's authority would bring only negative publicity and defeat," former Nixon counsel John Dean has said.

Apples and oranges, says the Bush White House. Previous GAO requests did not involve requests for information about meetings of the president or vice president, Bush aides say, while the current request is for meetings held by Cheney in his role as head of the task force. "This would be something we've never seen before," a senior Bush aide says.

But that principle is a bit murky. While the GAO had not previously asked the current White House for information regarding the contacts of the president or vice president, the Bush White House has been quick to relinquish to Congress such information from the Clinton White House.

Last September, Rep. Dan Burton (R-Ind.), chairman of the House Government Reform Committee, asked for e-mails from the Clinton White House to see whether campaign contributors had inappropriate influence over President Bill Clinton and Vice President Al Gore. The National Archives, noting that Bush "agreed to this release," turned over 2,000 pages of e-mails two months later, including those to Gore from his staff and between senior Gore staff.

Also last year, Bush raised no objection to handing over to Burton's committee 2,475 pages of Clinton documents related to the Marc Rich pardon -- including phone records, a list of visitors cleared to enter the White House and notes of Clinton conversations with a foreign leader.

Clinton did not object. But such flexibility was learned the hard way. Lanny Davis, who was Clinton's special counsel, says Bush is right to stiff the GAO, and Clinton was right to try to block earlier congressional "encroachments," too. Problem is, it never works.

"Been there, done that," Davis said. "We abandoned principle under the pressure of politics, and unfortunately, that's going to happen here."

Thought this was pretty good, in case you haven't seen.

Marc, I think we need to have another call on this. I'd like to bring everyone up to date on our conversations with Schumer's office.

Also, what would the group think about my setting up a meeting with Bob Hunter of CFA to talk with him and try to share perspectives? His skepticism on this issue is hurting us with some of the key players on the Dem side. I think it would be helpful to have White House representation at such a meeting.

Let me know.

Assessing Terror and Related Legislative Risks

- Earnings and valuation risks are real
  We assess potential impact on real estate, banking, brokerage and nonlife insurance sectors of another 9/11-size attack and the government response.
- Current valuations don't seem to reflect attack risk
  In all these sectors, we think current valuations do not reflect impact of another attack without a terrorism bill in place.
- Insurance stocks most vulnerable to attacks with no bill
  Insurers, lacking data, may be allowing exposures to expand with insufficient safeguards; reinsurers are managing exposures better.
- REITs are caught in the middle
  Lenders and insurers can impose higher rates, and REITs and landlords can pass along only some of the increased costs.
- Capital markets-focused firms seem least exposed
  Fallout on borrowers could ripple through mortgage-backed market; however, investment banks could come up with innovative products as alternatives.

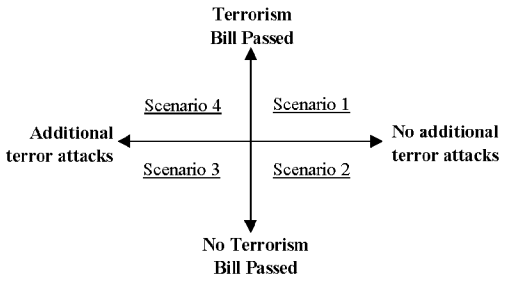
Please see the important disclosures at the end of this report.

Assessing Terror and Related Legislative Risks

Summary
September 11 changed the world's perception of risk. Insurers and reinsurers were the first to react, moving to exclude losses from future terrorist attacks in policy language. Congress immediately began work on a bill to provide the coverage but failed to pass legislation before year-end. The issue is back before Congress but passage of a bill is uncertain. Whether another terrorist attack occurs with or without a bill in place has significant implications for the banking, brokerage, asset management, real estate and insurance industries' earnings and valuations.

Morgan Stanley's analysts who cover these sectors have produced this report to weigh the likely impact on these sectors of a federal terrorism insurance bill passing or not, depending on whether another World Trade Center-size attack occurs in the US. (For discussion purposes, we are ignoring the worst-case scenario of a major nuclear, chemical or bio-terrorism attack because of the enormous, unpredictable consequences on the economy and society. Only the government can address this risk, in our view.) We assume that if a bill were to pass, it would resemble some compromise between the current House bill and last year's failed Senate version (under which the federal government would pay as much as $90 billion of terror attack losses over a three-year period, with insurers paying the first $10 billion of losses). Our aim is to identify the degree to which stocks are discounting in terrorism and the winners and losers under the four possible scenarios (Exhibit 1):

Exhibit 1
The Terrorism Matrix



Source: Morgan Stanley Research

We are currently in Scenario 2. No bill has passed (and the likelihood of one passing this year remains uncertain without action from the Senate). No follow-up massive attack has occurred although some seem to have been averted (and investors — and even some businesses — seem to be assuming that none will occur any time soon). The government has indicated that terrorism remains a very real risk, and our aim is to provide investors with a framework for thinking about the implications of the four possible scenarios, without necessarily assigning probabilities to whether a bill will pass or another massive attack occurs.

The 9/11 event by itself showed that the terrorists are much more coordinated, capable and determined than was generally thought prior to the event. Since then, the government's stepped-up efforts to gather intelligence has turned up new evidence that the terrorists are determined to plan and execute additional attacks. Preventive efforts also have been ramped up and appear to have thwarted some attacks. The risk of terrorism should be reduced over time; however, in a recent speech, former CIA Director Robert Gates indicated it would be at least 5-10 years before the level of terrorism risk is economically insurable. Accordingly, we believe the message in all this new information is that the risk of massive losses from terrorism in the near future needs to be weighed in terms of its impact on property owners, lenders, insurers and their investors.

Investment conclusion. Our overall conclusion is that the stocks currently reflect the assumption that no terrorism insurance bill will pass, and no WTC-size loss will be repeated any time soon. Weighing the business and stock valuation impact of political behavior and terrorist attacks is tricky for the same reason we believe terrorism losses are uninsurable. It is practically impossible to assign a probability of recurrence to an unprecedented event of the magnitude of the September 11 attacks. One thing we now believe, however, is that such a massive attack is possible. In all our scenario analysis, we think a negative scenario — another attack occurring today without a terrorism bill in place — is the one investors need to think about most, because this is the one scenario we think is currently least priced into the market. Under this scenario, we believe:

- The property/casualty insurance companies (the first derivative in the financial sector chain of events) and their stocks would suffer the greatest blow, offset by further acceleration in insurance rate increases. We believe the primary insurers would likely take a significantly bigger hit than reinsurers, with the insurance brokers, as non-risk-bearing intermediaries, possibly gaining. Government intervention financially, however, would probably be swift and might reverse the valuation dynamics. The question is whether the government would restore capital as well as pay claims. We also do not think capital would rush into the industry as quickly as it did after 9/11, because the level of risk would be perceived as greater. The financial impact of a second event could be more severe than the impact of the WTC event for some companies, assuming a comparable amount of losses despite post-9/11 efforts to reduce exposures, because of the already weakened financial condition of certain insurer balance sheets.

- Real estate investment trusts (REITs), in addition to incurring the actual loss of property, could be hit by both lower liquidity and lower real estate values as well as by higher borrowing costs, higher security costs and higher insurance costs and reduced insurance availability for properties that most closely fit the profile of the terrorists' targets. Developers might find asset-backed financing harder to complete and be forced to move toward corporate debt issuance, which can be costlier.
- Lower down on the impact scale would be credit-sensitive financials, depending on whether another wave of attacks would negatively affect interest rates. We think interest rates could be vulnerable in the aftermath of another attack without a terrorism bill in place, depending on the size of the losses and the method the government would use to fund those losses under financial-crisis conditions. Offsetting this impact would be how the event could lead to stricter credit standards, higher loan interest rates and an acceleration of efforts to improve loan portfolios in terms of credit quality. Individual financial institutions that have excess concentrations in affected properties would suffer losses.
- Capital markets financials could be hurt by the impact on the collateralized mortgage backed securities market as well as any post-attack weakness in the equity markets akin to what happened after 9/11. At the same time, another attack might create the opportunity to generate innovative property financing alternatives created by the impacts on the real estate market and interest rates.

Who holds the risk? Our view is that the bulk of the financial risk in a terrorist attack resides with those who finance and own commercial real estate, the companies that occupy the space, and those who insure real estate and the businesses and lives of the people who occupy those spaces. This would include central business district real estate, regional shopping malls, and large hotels. This does not mean, however, that the risk is non-existent for suburban offices, small hotels and shopping centers — only that the risk may be lower in those locations.

We are aware, for example, that insurers are not excluding terrorism coverage on properties and businesses that do not seem like obvious terrorist targets — a motel on a sparsely populated highway. On the other hand, we think it is a mistake to assume that only major cities like New York and trophy real estate like the World Trade Center constitute the only potential targets. As a recent Swiss Re report pointed out, a terrorist destroyed a major federal office building in Oklahoma City — not an especially high-profile property in a medium-sized city.

Exhibit 3 gives an indication of how much value is tied up in US commercial property and how much property-related financing was outstanding at year-end 2000. This represents the total value at risk — to varying but essentially unknowable degrees — in a terrorist attack. This does not cover residential real estate, but once again, that does not mean we think residences are immune to terrorist actions. For example, terrorists are known to have worked on launching attacks involving nuclear, biological and chemical weapons. Many insurers and reinsurers are specifically excluding losses from these types of attacks, but fire losses following a nuclear attack are not excluded, and fire following any act of terrorism is not excludable in 29 states, including the major industrial states such as California and New York. Nor can workers' compensation losses or group life be excluded. Nuclear, chemical, and biological terrorism may not be excluded from personal insurance. Life and disability covers all risks.

Exhibit 4 shows the extent to which some of the sectors referred to in this report are exposed to commercial real estate in terms of equity and debt ownership. Not surprisingly, the commercial banking sector has the largest exposure to commercial real estate loans, while corporations have the largest exposure to real estate owned.

Insurance covers only a fraction of value. Perhaps the most striking reality is the relatively small amount of net premiums US property/casualty insurers collect — $19.8 billion in 2000 — for commercial multiperil coverage, which includes insuring the $5.5 trillion replacement value of all US commercial structures plus another $5.1 trillion in inventory, equipment and software. This also compares to total property/casualty industry capital ("surplus") of about $282 billion at year-end 2001, which is the entire US property/casualty industry's capacity to pay claims of all types (including personal coverages). We estimate the capital of the commercial lines industry, for all types of coverages including casualty, is about $125 billion. The premiums collected for commercial multiperil are 13.4% of all commercial lines premiums. To put these numbers in context, for covering every dollar of commercial-structure replacement value and contents, property insurers collect about two tenths of a penny of premium and maintain surplus of approximately the same amount.

While insurance performs an extremely important economic function, by design it covers a finite amount of risk that is, in the aggregate, somewhat predictable over time. Events that fall outside this definition of insurability due to their potential size and lack of predictability are not insurable because the economic cost to set aside capital to cover such a risk is too high for the economy to bear. This is the point at which the government steps in, and this is what the debate over terrorism is all about.

Terror bill background. The September 11 terrorist attacks brought to light a new level of risk that clearly had not been previously contemplated. Nearly every kind of insurance coverage was triggered — including personal and commercial property (with business interruption), aviation liability, workers' compensation, personal and commercial auto, commercial property, liability and others, along with life insurance and accident & health. It involved an unprecedented concentration of property loss, economic losses and loss of life — more than 3,000 lives, four commercial airliners, hundreds of companies and thousands of their employees who survived but were affected in various ways.

Reinsurers immediately began to notify clients they would renew expiring contracts with exclusions for claims from future similar terrorist attack losses. At the same time, however, reinsurers as well as insurers quietly started looking for ways to write the coverage in limited ways and away from locations they deemed to be obvious terrorist targets — high-profile urban trophy properties, power plants, airports, and major events. Publicity focused on the immediate threat of property owners and developers and commercial enterprises facing potential default notices from lenders citing the lack of terrorism coverage.

Starting in October, Congressional aides began to write legislation to provide a government guarantee to cover such losses, without which it was assumed banks would be unwilling to make any commercial and industrial real estate loans. At that time, no one seemed to question the assumption that the inability to get terrorism coverage would lead to an economic crisis triggered by lenders calling in property loans with covenants requiring the coverage. The bill that emerged would authorize the Treasury Department to pay as much as $90 billion of losses above the first $10 billion that the insurance industry would cover.

By the end of the year, the bill had stumbled. The two parties split over a provision for tort reform, which President Bush had set as a requirement for his signature. The inability to compromise on this point killed the bill. Once it was clear there would be no bill by year-end, a reinsurance renewal logjam, caused by the wait-and-see over the terror bill, broke open.

Bill's current status. The urgency to pass a bill diminished after year-end, partly because no obvious evidence emerged of a brewing economic crisis. Bank regulators and industry trade associations indicated that lenders were not wholesale calling in loans or turning away borrowers over terror insurance exclusions. Examples of deals derailed by lack of terror-cover availability were the exception rather than the rule. However, as of this writing, the House Financial Services Committee was reconvening hearings on a bill, including testimony from the Government Accounting Office pointing to the need for a federal backstop. Still, we think that the farther away we get from September 11 without another catastrophic event, the harder it gets to push a bill through Congress. Meanwhile, insurers, developers and lenders keep finding ways to do business — essentially by increasing their exposures and costs — without a backstop.

Why a bill is still needed. We believe, however, that such a bill is as necessary as ever. Repeated terrorist attacks of the WTC magnitude are essentially uninsurable risks. It is practically impossible to estimate the probability of recurrence. Politically motivated intentional criminal acts resist actuarial analysis. The lack of a bill puts property and business owners in the position of having to pay much higher insurance rates — 50-100% and greater for central business district real estate — for less coverage and self-funding the balance of the exposure under pressure from lenders.

If and when a catastrophic event occurs, these owners will absorb a far greater share of the loss than they did on 9/11. As a result, some businesses could fail, unless they tied up much more capital in advance to cover the risk — capital that normally would be available to finance normal operations and growth. Without a terror bill, we think lenders will be imposing stricter requirements on an increasing portion of their loan portfolios as those portfolios mature. Insurers, meanwhile, are still over-exposed, because they can exclude only as much terrorism coverage as state governments allow (which is not a lot) and can buy

Please see the important disclosures at the end of this report.

very little reinsurance affordably to limit their exposure. In effect, all these businesses collectively are gambling on either dodging the next massive attack or having the government step in after the fact and efficiently provide the capital.

Most important to recognize is that the 9/11 attack was not a fluke, nor was it entirely unforeseen. It was a second attempt on the same property perpetrated by sophisticated, well-funded terrorists. Since 1968, more than 10,000 acts of terrorism have been recorded, including 14 events with more than 100 fatalities. In 1999, the Hart-Rudman Commission on National Security in the 21st Century concluded "Americans will die on American soil, possibly in large numbers" as a result of terrorism. The National Commission on Terrorism in June 2001 said the "#1 priority" of the US should be to address loose affiliations of transnational terrorists seeking to inflict large numbers of casualties.

Yet the economy continues to absorb such exposure. In the end, we think it would be better for the federal government to establish a structure for covering uninsurable losses from the next major attack than to do nothing. Any after-the-fact response would probably involve emergency funding that could have inequitable outcomes. Congress has been widely criticized for bailing out the airlines just 10 days after 9/11, then not acting on other parts of the economy. Such disparate outcomes are avoidable.

Experts have noted that the historical roots of the current Islamist terrorism to some extent lie in the distant past. For example, Osama bin Laden refers to Western culture as "Crusaders."

Real Estate Investment Trusts

The current lack of affordable terrorism insurance coverage for many types of real estate has already generated negative impacts for a variety of REITs. Significant uncertainty continues to surround the possibility of government intervention as well as the possibility of another terror attack. In order to help investors better navigate these uncertainties, we provide some initial conclusions about the prospects of the real estate industry (as well as various property sectors and REITs). (See Terrorism and Insurance Risks: Assessing Sensitivities by Gregory Whyte, Matthew Ostrower and Robert Stevenson being published simultaneously with this report.).

Initial conclusions. The terrorist attacks of September 11 and the enormous and tragic loss of human life and property that accompanied them led to significant new uncertainties in the real estate sector, which was already beginning to feel the brunt of a national economic downturn. Among these uncertainties was how real estate owners would continue to obtain insurance coverage for their assets, particularly those with high rise ("skyline") characteristics. This issue was exacerbated by: 1) the fact that most insurance policies (and the terrorism insurance that has traditionally been a part of them) expire on December 31 of each year, and 2) most secured loans (mortgages) would fall into technical default without some kind of ongoing terrorism insurance.

With no backstop legislation in place, the negative consequences of no terrorism coverage have begun to set in for real estate landlords, and, we believe, ultimately tenants as well. Certain real estate asset types and companies are clearly more affected than others are (Exhibit 7). However, we believe it is possible to draw some broad conclusions. We believe the current lack of terrorism legislation has, and will continue to have several negative effects:

1) Real estate borrowing will likely become more difficult and more expensive. We expect mortgage spreads to rise in response to increased insurance risk, the collateralized mortgage-backed securities (CMBS) market may continue to balk at single loans with trophy/skyline collateral, and REITs will likely increasingly resort more to the (generally) higher spread corporate market.

2) General insurance costs will likely continue to remain higher than pre-9/11 levels (we believe earthquake insurance is already up sharply, with meaningfully higher deductibles). We expect these costs to continue to rise, but to rise less dramatically if a terrorism insurance bill is eventually passed.

3) Building security costs will likely remain higher

4) The absence of suitable insurance coverage will likely affect the general real estate lending market, which could impact real estate valuations, particularly for asset types seen as vulnerable to attack: central business district (CBD) office buildings, certain regional malls, and assets located near sites perceived as risky.

Issue Sensitivity Spectrum

In the event terrorism insurance legislation is ultimately passed, we believe the short-term impacts will be lower insurance and debt costs, providing the most relief to those companies and asset types that were most adversely affected by the current lack of coverage. Given the negative impacts on the real estate industry in just the past 8-10 weeks, we now believe that a bill is more likely today than it would have appeared even four weeks ago. We believe even the passage of a bill and no new attack will still see the real estate industry worse off than pre-9/11, but it is still the best case scenario. In an effort to assess the degree of negative impact, we have outlined the consequences of each of four different scenarios on the industry below. We believe companies in the most sensitive sectors (e.g. BXP, BPO, EOP, VNO, RSE, and SPG) will be the biggest winners in positive scenarios (such as Scenario 1) and the biggest losers in the negative scenarios (Scenario 3). (Current prices: BXP $37, BPO $18, EOP $28, VNO $42, RSE $30, SPG $31.)

Scenario Analysis: Real Estate and REITS

Scenario 1: A bill is in place, no attack occurs. As it pertains to the real estate industry, and with particular focus on the landlord (often time the public landlords are REITs), we believe:

- After rising to exorbitant rates post 9/11 (and becoming unavailable in many circumstances) market rates on new terrorism insurance policies begin to fall. Terrorism insurance again becomes widely available.
- The passage of a bill would eventually see the return of liquidity to mortgage and single asset CMBS markets, particularly those involving higher profile "trophy" assets (e.g. skyline CBD assets).
- Although some asset classes allow for occupancy costs to be billed back to tenants (e.g. commercial and retail), we believe higher insurance costs are effectively shared by landlords and tenants regardless of property type. For this reason, the somewhat lower costs that would likely accompany a terrorism bill would benefit both landlords and tenants.

Please see the important disclosures at the end of this report.

Potential winners/losers. We believe valuations of companies in the most sensitive sectors already reflect some of the negatives associated with the current lack of easily available terrorism insurance (though they do not appear to reflect any major discount as a result of potential exposure to another terrorist event). The passage of a terror bill would lead to more extensive insurance coverage, and potentially lower insurance and borrowing costs for companies such as BXP, BPO, EOP, VNO, RSE, SPG, etc. Less sensitive companies/sectors that are currently experiencing fewer impacts would benefit, but to a lesser extent.

Scenario 2: No bill is passed, no attack occurs. The absence of any passage of a terrorism bill, even without an additional terror attack, is clearly a negative for the REIT sector. We believe this scenario would lead to:

- A sharp rise in operating expenses to cover extremely high insurance and security costs. Landlords begin to question the ability of insurers to meet future terror claims.
- Some landlords may choose to forego expensive terrorism insurance, which would have ramifications on borrowing conditions:
  1) Borrowers may fall into technical default on secured loans, which could precipitate some adjustment to both terms and rate.
  2) Rating agencies might respond with cuts to credit ratings, making alternative, non-secured borrowing more costly and less accessible.
  3) Construction financing and takeout financing become landlord headaches.

- CMBS liquidity becomes more limited and may even dry up, particularly for those real estate assets perceived as more vulnerable. Initiating new single skyline asset CMBS transactions becomes impossible; rates on multi asset CMBS deals also go up, reflecting higher risks.
- Reduced liquidity in the real estate market negatively impacts real estate valuations, particularly for those assets typically financed with secured debt.
- Banks likely eventually begin originating secured loans, but increasingly seek cross-collateralization or recourse when high profile assets are involved.
- Rental rates slow further than they already have as tenants respond to rising occupancy costs.
- For the tenants, occupancy costs may rise up to or even exceed expense stops. Most affected assets will likely be office/high-rise, or other perceived-to-be-vulnerable properties (e.g. regional malls).

Potential winners/losers. The lack of a terrorism insurance bill (despite the lack of terror attack) would serve to raise operating and borrowing costs as well as cause the most exposed companies to take on more risk by self-insuring. We believe that the values of stocks in the most sensitive sectors only partially reflect these negatives, and could therefore face more multiple contraction if it becomes clear that no affordable terrorism insurance will become available. As in Scenario 1, the less sensitive sectors will also be negatively affected, but to a lesser extent.

Scenario 3: No bill is in place, an attack occurs. This represents the worst scenario for real estate owners. In assessing the impact on the industry (and on REITs specifically), we believe it is necessary to examine the initial and longer term impacts:

- Initial impacts:
  1) There will be a sharp rise in operating costs due to much higher insurance costs (expect tenants to experience higher occupancy costs up to the entire expense stop limitation).
  2) The CMBS market (both single- and multi-asset transactions) likely freezes for all asset types, but particularly for the skyline assets and the asset class targeted in the attack.
  3) Landlords assess the value of continuing with terrorism insurance coverage given the potential inability of insurers to meet future claims.
  4) Secured borrowing rates spike, limiting liquidity in this market.
  5) Non-secured corporate borrowing for REITs is the only remaining alternative, but higher perceived risk drive rates up sharply after rating agencies focus on ratings.
  6) Real estate values fall sharply due to limited insurability and dramatic drop in real estate debt liquidity.
- Longer-term impacts:
  1) Congress ultimately establishes some sort of federal backstop or "Pool Re" program.
  2) This will likely result in the return of some normalcy in the real estate markets, with values appreciating, but operating costs still higher than pre-9/11 levels.

Please see the important disclosures at the end of this report.

REV_00140968

Potential winners/losers. We believe all REITs would experience significant negative short-term valuation impacts if a terror attack were to occur in the absence of any terrorism insurance legislation. Investor fears about further equity losses in the event of future attacks, potentially unavailable terrorism insurance, higher borrowing spreads and the limited availability of debt capital would cause significant multiple contraction. This phenomenon would likely occur most for the most sensitive property sectors. These negative effects would likely be greatly mitigated if the federal government were to quickly enact a terrorism insurance backstop/bailout following the second attack.

Scenario 4: A bill is passed, an attack occurs. Despite the passage of a terrorism bill, whereby there is a federally funded backstop, we believe overall costs of obtaining insurance after an attack will likely rise — particularly for the affected asset type(s). From the landlord's perspective, we believe the impact from this scenario includes:

- Higher property operating expenses
- Higher borrowing costs on debt renewal, as the asset class is seen to be riskier, both in the CMBS and corporate borrowing arena
- Security costs rise again.
- The secured lending market would probably become even more focused on adequate insurance coverage for loan collateral.

Potential winners/losers. The passage of a terrorism insurance bill (and the more extensive, affordable terrorism insurance and debt capital) likely would not prevent some negative valuation impact if another terror attack were to occur. In this case, we believe REITs with skyline and high profile assets would clearly be most impacted, while their lower profile peers would likely be spared. It is worth mentioning, however, that the more sensitive companies would likely be deemed winners in between the passage of the insurance bill and the actual attack.

Banks, Brokers and Asset Managers

Initial Conclusions. We think that investors may be too focused on credit issues (Enron, K-Mart and now Global Crossing) and off-balance sheet disclosures to think about the implications of the passage / non-passage of the terrorism bill. We do not fault them, but we do believe that the outcome of the terrorism bill legislation could have a significant impact on banking and brokerage stocks. A key issue, as we see it, is whether lenders will continue to lend to what are perceived to be high-risk properties if the real estate companies cannot secure adequate insurance protection. Also, if the commercial mortgage-backed market does slow, what does this mean for trading profits for the BIG fixed income players in this area?

In evaluating the possible impact on the stocks in our universe based on the four scenarios, our primary conclusion is that in all scenarios, capital markets based firms seem to fare slightly better than the credit sensitive firms (except if a major terrorist attack does irrevocable damage to the securities industry's infrastructure).

On the other hand, we do think that traditional lending companies face marginal risks if the bill is not passed and another attack occurs. Under this scenario, more properties would be damaged potentially limiting the repayment of those loans to some banks and the insurance industry may become increasingly fragile limiting the effectiveness of current insurance policies. Longer term, credit spreads against commercial real estate would also likely rise, although the positive impact to the income statement would be offset by a slower pace of real estate activity.

According to Betsy Daniels, who is working on picking up the regional banks, banks are thinking through how they want to approach lending in a world without terrorism coverage on property. There is no "one-size-fits-all" approach. The banks can take several paths, ranging from renewing the loan, changing the terms on the loan, asking the borrower to get a terrorism rider, asking the borrower to self-insure for terrorism, or pulling the loan. Banks are choosing what makes sense for them given their business mix and risk appetite and decisions are likely to be made on a loan-by-loan basis. The key point is that the banks are thinking about these issues and are trying to create a game-plan to limit their exposure to further terrorist property destruction.

These issues are more likely to impact the traditional lending companies than the capital markets companies. Construction and commercial real estate loans were 19.5% of total average loans at US commercial banks as of September 30, 2001. At JPM and Citigroup, though, these loans represent just a fraction of overall business. Indeed, based on our analysis, we think that around 0.99% of Citi's total loans are related to domestic real estate, while we believe that 2.27% of JPM's total loans are related to domestic real estate (at the end of 3Q01, latest available data). At the moment, we retain our Neutral rating on JPM and maintain our Outperform on Citigroup.

Within the brokerage sector, we think that Lehman Brothers (LEH, $56, Outperform-V, target $73) and Goldman Sachs (GS, $81, Outperform-V, target $92) are most levered to the commercial mortgage back industry (which would obviously slow if real estate companies were not able to obtain financing at will), ranking second and fourth, respectively, in U.S. public and Rule 144A CMBS (collateralized mortgage backed securities) offerings. However, Goldman is traditionally not a major player in this market (i.e., the company had some big trades at the end of the 2001 that boosted it in the rankings). Separately, Credit Suisse First Boston (a unit of Credit Suisse), ranked first in this CMBS market in 2001. All told, according to Thomson Financial Securities Data, $63.0 billion of CMBS were offered in 2001 (Exhibit 8).

Interest rate impact. Looking at the big picture, we also are intrigued by the possible impact of the passage of the terrorism bill on the treasury market. If the terrorism bill is passed, the Federal Government becomes the reinsurer of terrorism related risks. Would government bondholders demand a terrorism risk free premium? If yes, then would the long-term benchmark risk free rate rise significantly? An increase in the benchmark rate would increase lending costs for all borrowers, which could be a negative for companies with high leverage ratios. Also, if real estate companies (REITS) were not able to secure mortgage financing and had to use the capital markets via straight debt issuance, we actually think that this opportunity could be an interesting one for the capital markets that we cover, particularly firms with a strong presence in the investment grade market.

Scenario Analysis: Banks and Brokers

Scenario 1: A bill is in place, no attack occurs. We believe that the passage of the bill with no incidence of further terrorist attacks in the near future would be a marginal positive for the credit sensitive names like C and JPM. Key to our thinking is government protection would allow lenders to still allocate capital to real estate companies with little residual impact from "event risks" like the tragic events of September 11, 2001. Separately, we believe that this scenario would entail healthier economic growth and stronger equity markets (due to the absence of any external shocks) — a significant positive for the broker/dealers and equity focused asset managers in our universe. In addition, the factors favoring economic growth (lower costs of doing business — specifically, insurance and security costs) would also positively impact the expense lines for all the stocks we cover. However, we do expect a marginal increase in documentation costs for banks as lending agreements incorporate various terrorism related clauses, and a marginal increase in insurance rates for policyholders.

Potential winners/losers. We think that this scenario would be a marginal positive for all the stocks in our group for the reasons highlighted above. As such, under this scenario, we do feel comfortable reiterating our investment thesis: From a macro perspective, we continue to believe that capital markets firms outpace credit sensitive and fee-based companies. In diversified financials we continue to favor Citigroup (C, $44, Outperform, target $59) over JPMorgan Chase (JPM, $29, Neutral). In the small cap asset management arena, we remain bullish across the board: Affiliated Managers (AMG, $67, Outperform, target $73), BlackRock (BLK, $44, Outperform, target $48), Waddell & Reed (WDR, $30, Outperform, target $35), and Federated Investors (FII, $31, Strong Buy, target $35). Finally, we have a mixed bag on the Arms Dealers. Specifically, we like companies like Investment Technology Group (ITG, $45, Outperform, target $46) (play on cost, speed, globalization, and value-added), while we remain cautious on other names, including Instinet (INET, $7, not rated).

Scenario 2: No bill is passed, no attack occurs. Our second scenario would essentially entail continuation of the status quo (we don't have a terrorism bill and fortunately there have been no more terrorist attacks). As we think that investors in our stocks have not yet focused on these issues, we do not expect any major impact on stock prices. However, we expect companies to spend more on security especially since terrorism related insurance coverage would be more difficult to secure.

Lenders continue to expect insurance against terrorist acts on the credits they extend — either through insurance policy coverage or through borrower self-insurance. Some lenders may look to cash in some of their "bad chips" by charging higher rates or refusing to extend funds to some credits on the grounds that they are not willing to underwrite loans that do not have terrorism related coverage. We believe that lenders may selectively take this approach towards certain credits. We do not expect widespread application, as it would result in the lender self-selecting out of the real estate lending market. Targeted pruning could marginally improve asset quality at some lenders.

Another related development would be a slowdown in some sectors of the CMBS market — especially for securities backed by high profile assets like tall office buildings and big regional malls. As a result we expect real estate firms to borrow funds at the corporate level rather than accessing capital markets through asset backed securities leading to a 20 to 30 basis point increase in their cost of funds. We think that investment banks will look upon this development as an opportunity and would come up with innovative financial products to solve the financing needs of real estate firms.

Potential winners/losers. Given that this scenario entails continuation of the Status Quo and the additional risk of muted revenue growth for the credit sensitive names, we are sticking to our investment theme (as highlighted in scenario 1). However we do want to point out that as in scenario 1, credit sensitive firms with lower credit standards could display higher growth rates than peers who have tighter credit standards.

Scenario 3: No bill is in place, an attack occurs. Our third scenario, which is also our worst case scenario, evaluates the impact of a major terrorist attack in case the terrorism bill has not been passed. As in scenario 4, the development could be a significant negative for firms like GS, MER ($47), and LEH if it leads to another disruption in the nation's capital markets. For the credit sensitive names, we expect major credit losses as a direct result of the attack as most exposures would not be backed by insurance. In addition, the shock to the economy could lead to a deterioration in the overall credit situation, driving both provisions and credit costs materially higher. The shock to the equity markets could also depress earnings at capital markets based firms and equity focused asset managers. The occurrence of another attack would also lead to increased security expenses by businesses.

Potential winners/losers. We believe that credit sensitive names will come under the most pressure under such a scenario. Although we believe that the federal government would intervene to prevent a breakdown of the financial system, we believe that credit sensitive names could experience a "double whammy". Specifically, in addition to the direct credit losses they would experience as a result of the attack, the external shock to the nation's economy would increase credit costs going forward (even if the companies had no exposure to the areas/ businesses directly impacted by the attack). We would expect capital markets firms to outperform other financials, as the rebuilding effort would require a significant amount of capital to be raised. Within asset managers, we believe that fixed income focused firms would outperform their equity focused counterparts.

Scenario 4: A bill is passed, an attack occurs. Irrespective of whether a terrorism bill has been passed, we believe that the initial reaction of the market will be negative for most of the stocks in our coverage universe. The development could be a significant negative for capital markets based firms if it leads to another disruption in the nation's capital markets.

However we do not expect any major credit losses at the credit sensitive firms as a direct result of the attack as most exposures would be backed by insurance. That said the shock to the economy could lead to a deterioration in the overall credit situation, leading to higher credit costs at the firms we cover. In addition, the shock to the equity markets could depress earnings at capital markets based firms and equity focused asset managers. The occurrence of another attack would also lead to higher insurance rates for policyholders and increased security expenses by businesses.

Potential winners/losers. If the attack does not lead to a disruption in the nation's capital markets and equity markets rebound soon after the attack, we believe that capital markets firms will outperform credit sensitive and fee-based companies (as happened after 9/11). We also expect capital markets firms to outperform other financials, as the rebuilding effort would require a significant amount of capital to be raised. We think that the attack could amount to another external shock to the nation's economy, leading to a deterioration in credit that could raise credit costs at Citigroup and JPMorgan Chase. Within the credit sensitive names, we would expect firms with better credit management practices to significantly outperform their peers because of two reasons: 1) they would have pruned their uninsured terrorism risk exposure, and 2) they would also have lower credit costs if the economy were to head into a recession.

The Property/Casualty Sector

As noted in the February 22, 2002, issue of P/C Insurance & Risk Briefing, we believe the equity markets generally do not appear to be discounting in insurers' material risk from terrorism in the absence of a terrorism bill. Nevertheless, we believe many primary commercial lines insurers (and, to a lesser extent, personal lines insurers) retain considerable residual terrorism risk. Therefore, we believe that investors need to reconcile their willingness to accept terrorism risk, other offsetting factors they may find attractive in a stock, and their return requirement.

Initial conclusions. We believe that most primary insurers and some reinsurers cannot adequately measure their exposure aggregations from a hypothetical event. They are only just beginning to gather exposure information, such as employee locations for workers' compensation. Meantime, virtually all primary insurers talk about limiting exposure as much as they can, but they do not provide enough information to determine how a particular insurer would fare under a worst-case scenario. They do not, for example, provide a probable maximum loss estimate (PML) as they ordinarily do with other types of catastrophic risks. Nor are we aware of any insurer taking an across-the-board approach of simply non-renewing policies without terrorism losses excluded.

Insurers imposing exclusions using nonadmitted policy forms are assuming that the ban on exclusions in some states is trumped by their nonadmittance status. There is a slight risk, however, that policyholders and regulators might challenge that interpretation in an effort to broaden available coverage after the fact. We also believe insurers are assuming they can invoke the war exclusion in another attack; however, we assume that issue would ultimately be litigated. Additionally, we believe that the primary exclusions that have been approved may be insufficient to prevent insurer insolvency, especially for insurers that write workers' compensation, group life, and significant amounts of property insurance (Exhibits 9 and 10).

In short, we think investors cannot assess the risk of terrorism in a portfolio of insurance stocks any better than an insurer can assess the terrorism risk in its insurance portfolio. However, investors can control their exposure to risk, by limiting the amount they invest in such stocks to an amount within their risk tolerance from such an event. Accordingly, we are not averse to investing in terrorism-exposed insurance stocks, but we believe investors should not over-concentrate in these stocks. We also believe that investors should require a higher return in exchange for this additional, and unquantifiable, risk. Comparisons to historical valuations should take note of this higher level of risk. We would consider stocks with the same valuation as pre-9/11 as now more "expensive."

Please see the important disclosures at the end of this report.

REV_00140972

This approach to investing is similar to one we would follow for cat-exposed insurers that do not buy earthquake or hurricane reinsurance, although with added uncertainties: 1) we do not know as much about the level of risk for individual insurers as we normally do for other types of catastrophic risks; 2) we know nothing about the overall frequency and severity of terrorism risk.

Scenario Analysis: Property/Casualty Insurers

Scenario 1: A bill is in place, no attack occurs. This is the second-best scenario for short-term earnings and the best case for valuation. Reinsurers and property insurers would have greater certainty about their exposures and could price accordingly.

While rates might not rise as sharply as without a bill, the existence of a federal backstop would remove a large balance sheet vulnerability. Under this scenario, we assume no WTC-size event occurs this year, presumably giving insurers that much time to rebuild surplus — including additional capital-raising. Brokers' earnings upside from commissions and fees might be slightly muted, taking their portion of rates that might not be as sharply higher as they would be without a terror bill. Valuations could probably be higher with a terror bill in place because of the perception of reduced shock-loss risk and volatility. However, since we believe the market is not discounting terrorism risk, the impact could be limited.

Potential Winners/Losers. Our current market-weight position on the brokers would stand. For the commercial primary insurers, this could be a positive, removing the uncertainty. Our position on the reinsurers would also shift toward the positive.

Scenario 2: No bill is passed, no attack occurs. This is the best-case scenario from an earnings perspective in the short term and the second-best scenario from a valuation perspective. It is also the current scenario, and our current market-weight position on the commercial insurance industry reflects this status quo. In our view, this is a positive for reinsurers and brokers and for property insurers on non-customized coverages. Insurers and reinsurers are charging steeper rates for more restricted coverage of an unpredictable risk that under this scenario does not recur this year.

The more prudent insurers are excluding the coverage altogether. Some are offering it as a steeply priced add-on with much tighter limits on what they perceive to be the most exposed properties. Terrorism is a negative for valuation, however, because the risk premium should be higher to cover the uncertainty of another costly attack occurring without a federal backstop in place. We would expect this premium to decline over time, as risk declines.

Potential winners/losers. We think that only the most disciplined commercial insurers and reinsurers with the strongest balance sheets, best ratings and compelling valuations are desirable amid the protracted uncertainty of no federal backstop and no guarantees that terrorists will never again strike with the ferocity of 9/11. We are skeptical that exclusions will remain as firm as they are currently.

Scenario 3: No bill is in place, an attack occurs. Rates likely would soar, we believe, along with demand, but capacity would likely shrink as losses mounted. Earnings, in our view, would be depressed for many large commercial insurers and reinsurers, and net investment income would come under pressure from the likely impact on capital markets in the wake of another attack. The government might step in with some form of emergency funding, with an uncertain and possibly inequitable impact. The capital markets might be reluctant after the second major attack to commit another round of funding. In a second attack, some of the stronger players, in our view, could have impaired balance sheets and have difficulty maintaining their financial strength and credit ratings. A capacity crisis could develop. The post-9/11 measures taken to limit exposures would probably have a minimal effect, because we think those measures would not have had a chance to permeate insurers entire books. The following legal questions could quickly arise under this scenario:

- Was the attack an act of war, and excludable?
- Might states try to force policies written on an excess & surplus lines basis to cover terrorism after the fact?
- Would anyone bear liability exposure?
- Would Congress be more inclined to grant liability relief from terrorism-related events?
- Would foreign insurers and reinsurers doing business in the US follow US laws and practices?

Potential winners/losers. We would expect reinsurance and insurance broker stocks to gain under this scenario and primary insurer stocks to lose. We think reinsurers, which are not subject to state regulation on terrorism coverage exclusions, have generally been reducing their exposures to terror risk faster than primary writers and writing new contracts that offer more limited coverages at high rates. Brokers, again as the intermediaries, would benefit from what we think would be another surge in rates, as well as demand. Primary insurers, in our view, would be much more vulnerable, having achieved limited success in excluding terrorist losses and in finding affordable, effective reinsurance.

Scenario 4: A bill is passed, an attack occurs. This could actually be one of the better scenarios for earnings, again depending on the shape of the bill passed, and third best for valuation. We view this scenario as a net positive. Underwriters would know exactly where their exposures begin and end, and could price and set deductibles, limits and exclusions more accurately. Yet the private market would still bear the insurable portion of the risk.

Potential winners/losers. We assume the impact on insurers and reinsurers would be far more predictable than without a bill—analogous to any other catastrophe (i.e., positive).

Please see the important disclosures at the end of this report.

V = More volatile. We estimate that this stock has more than a 25% chance of a price move (up or down) of more than 25% in a month, based on a quantitative assessment of historical data, or in the analyst's view, it is likely to become materially more volatile over the next 1-12 months compared with the past three years. Stocks with less than one year of trading history are automatically rated as more volatile (unless otherwise noted). We note that securities that we do not currently consider "volatile" can still perform in that manner.

I assume that hell will freeze over before Daschle lets us have the Sarbanes deal. If we're going to make another run at it, I'm wondering whether it makes sense to say uncle on punitives and, instead. try to get them to bite on consolidation plus a provision that businesses are only jointly and severally liable if they are more than 20% (or 25% or 15% or whatever) liable. I don't know what Larry and Glenn would think, but I think it could be substantively helpful, and it's hard to argue w/ the fact that only nominally liable American businesses should not be made to subsidize terrorists. These defendants would still pay their share, but not the terrorists'. Just a thought.

Judiciary Democrats Grill Pa. Judge

Jesse Holland
AP Online
February 27, 2002 Wednesday

Two Republican judges looking to step up to the Court of Appeals level will have to wait at least until next week before finding out whether the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee will send their nominations to the full Senate.

U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith faced grilling from Judiciary Democrats on Tuesday at his nomination hearing. They questioned his failure to step down immediately when a fraud case involving a bank where his wife worked came before his court. Smith, whom President Bush has nominated for the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia, said he disqualified himself after a month because of the appearance of conflict of interest, although he wasn't required to.

"I wish I had recused myself earlier," Smith said.

Under committee rules, senators now must wait at least a week before they can even bring up Smith's nomination for a vote.

The committee also put off a vote scheduled Thursday on U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering, whose conservative record as a state lawmaker and a federal judge has been questioned by Democrats.

It will be next week at the earliest before the panel considers Pickering's nomination by Bush to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., asked the committee to give Pickering extra time to answer a "long list" of written questions submitted by senators after his second confirmation hearing.

REV_00141077

"Judge Pickering should have the opportunity to respond to the questions," Lott said.

At least two Democrats aren't waiting on Pickering's answers. Sen. John Edwards of North Carolina joined California Sen. Dianne Feinstein in going public with his intention to vote against Pickering.

His "record as a judge clearly demonstrates that he is willing to put his own views above the law," Edwards said.

The Senate confirmed without dissent two new district judges on Tuesday: Cindy Jorgenson of Arizona and Robert Blackburn of Colorado. They were confirmed by 98-0 votes.

Like Pickering, Smith's supporters said the judge's record is being distorted, and he deserves to be on the higher court. "There is a lot of misinformation about him out there," Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa., told the committee.

Democrats questioned Smith, 50, for overseeing for a month in 1997 a fraud trial involving Mid-State Bank.

Smith's wife, Karen Smith, was vice president of the lending department at Mid-State Bank at the time. The Smiths also held Mid-State stock.

Smith said Tuesday he didn't know Mid-State Bank would be involved, and there wasn't enough of a conflict later on to trigger an automatic disqualification.

"I was still satisfied ... there was no specific information that had been presented to me that was sufficient to suggest a basis for recusal," Smith said.

Smith issued several rulings before taking himself out of the trial, but the Justice Department cleared him of any wrongdoing.

Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., questioned Smith's frequency of taking paid educational trips. He said Smith has taken more such trips than all but four judges in the nation. Feingold said the trips' total value was about $30,000, and some were to resort locations like Hilton Head Island, S.C.

Smith said the trips were purely for educational purposes, but he would not attend similar seminars if elevated to the appeals court unless he was sure it would not cause an appearance of conflict of interest.

Dems Lose in Redistricting Fight

A new Mississippi congressional map drawn by three Republican-appointed judges is moving closer to becoming a reality.

Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia denied an emergency appeal filed by an attorney who wants a Democrat-backed map drawn by a state judge. Scalia's denial on Tuesday came hours after the three federal judges in Jackson ordered that the state use their map. The lawyer, Robert McDuff of Jackson, immediately refiled his emergency appeal with Justice David H. Souter. McDuff said Souter can take up the appeal or, more likely, forward it to the full court.

"This is obviously a setback," said McDuff, who expected some word from the court within a week.

Mississippi was forced to give up one of its five U.S. House seats after Census figures showed slowing population growth in the 1990s.

The redistricting ended up in the courts after state lawmakers were unable to agree on their own map. Democrats sued in chancery court and Republicans sued in federal court.

Hinds County Chancery Judge Patricia Wise drew up the plan backed by Democrats, while the federal judges came up with their own.

In ordering that their map be used, the federal judges said it's unconstitutional for a chancery judge rather than the Legislature to draw a redistricting plan.

The federal judges said their plan would be used until the state produces a redistricting map that the Justice Department agrees is fair to minorities.

"We're obviously very pleased that the U.S. Supreme Court denied the emergency petition of the Democrats," said Grant Fox of Tupelo, an attorney who has represented Republicans in state and federal court redistricting fights.

No matter which plan is used, Rep. Chip Pickering, a Republican, and Rep. Ronnie Shows, a Democrat, will meet in a new consolidated district.

The federal judges' plan puts heavily Republican, suburban Jackson precincts in the new district where Pickering and Shows will face off.

Wise's plan puts those precincts in a district that dips down from northern Mississippi and gives the new district a higher concentration of black voters, who often vote Democratic.

Congressional candidates' qualifying deadline is Friday. Primaries are June 4 and the general election is Nov. 5.

Scalia handles emergency appeals from the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which covers Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas.

Scalia presided over Pickering's first swearing-in ceremony to Congress in 1997.

The justice also has spoken in Mississippi several times since the early 1990s. One trip in 1996 was arranged by Pickering's father, U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering, who is awaiting Senate action on his nomination to the 5th Circuit.

War begins over bench nominees

Peter Grier and Seth Stern
The Christian Science Monitor
February 27, 2002, Wednesday

The nomination of a little-known Mississippi judge to a federal appeals-court seat has mushroomed into the Bush administration's first big judicial-choice battle.

The fight over Charles Pickering Sr. hasn't reached the intensity of a full-scale struggle over a Supreme Court nominee, such as the one sparked by Clarence Thomas in 1991. But it does seem like something of a warm-up for skirmishes to come. All the familiar elements are there, from the pugnacious conservative Senate defenders to the attack coalition of liberal groups that says it is outraged by the nominee's past record.

There are some interesting twists on that lineup in this case - but more on that later. First, the main substantive issue. What's more important: the person Judge Pickering once was, or the man he has become?

A key Senate Judiciary Committee vote on the nomination could come this week.

"This is a very public debate over a candidate's record," says Nan Aron, president of the Alliance for Justice, one of the groups that opposes the Pickering nomination.

Aron and other opponents say that Pickering's past actions position him far to the right of the American mainstream, particularly in regard to minority rights.

They point, for instance, to a 1959 law review article Pickering wrote suggesting changes in Mississippi's law banning interracial marriage that would make it more effective.

In 1964, critics add, Pickering - then a state senator - bolted the Democratic party in part because he opposed efforts to integrate the Mississippi delegation to the Democratic National Convention.

REV_00141080

Since his appointment to the federal bench, he has criticized the creation of largely African-American political districts as a means to remedy past racial discrimination. Critics question his record on job discrimination and other civil rights cases.

"The bottom line is that we believe he is a right-wing ideologue," says Ralph Neas, president of People for the American Way.

Pickering's defenders point out that many of the objections to his record deal with items in the long-ago past, when white Southern politicians operated in a very different political context.

Nor do the criticisms tell the whole story, they say. In 1967 Pickering lost a reelection race for county attorney after testifying against a Ku Klux Klan leader on trial for killing a civil rights leader.

Furthermore - and here's where the twist part comes in - the black establishment in Pickering's hometown of Laurel, Miss., overwhelmingly supports his elevation to the appeals bench. They consider him someone who has at least tried to foster racial reconciliation by supporting the funding of medical clinics in poor districts, and other actions.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has received some 27 letters of support for Pickering from members of the African-American community, said Sen. Orrin Hatch (R) of Utah, ranking GOP member of the panel, at the opening of a Feb. 7 hearing on the nomination. "Those fighting Pickering's nomination, in contrast, seem to consist primarily of a host of Washington lobbyists," said Sen. Hatch.

A FEW years ago, the Pickering nomination might have attracted much less attention. It doesn't involve the power and prestige of the Supreme Court, for one thing.

As a close friend of the top-ranking Republican in the Senate, Sen. Trent Lott of Mississippi, he might reasonably have expected to be whooped through confirmation on grounds of senatorial courtesy.

But the bitter battles over such high court picks as Robert Bork, the Reagan nominee who was defeated in 1987, and Clarence Thomas, the eventually-confirmed choice of George H. W. Bush, have left behind an ideological infrastructure of judicial confrontation.

Both conservative and liberal groups have institutionalized "opposition research" for court nominees, consisting of detailed scrutiny of past decisions and writings, including unpublished ones. The result: a sort of rote warfare that now extends down several layers deep into choices for lower-level federal courts.

Pickering is not the only appeals court pick who will face opposition, for instance. Nominee D. Brooks Smith, a Pennsylvania judge, is now facing charges of misconduct involving financial conflicts of interest from liberal opponents. "The strategy is one of defeat through caricature," says Thomas Jipping, a judicial expert at the Free Congress Foundation, a group that supports Pickering and other Bush nominees.

The new intensity of struggle over judicial nominees also reflects the realization that the federal bench profoundly affects US life, of course. Bush has been open about his desire to make US courts more conservative - as were his father and Ronald Reagan before him.

Pickering's future now turns on Democratic unity. If all 10 Democrats on the judiciary panel vote "no," his nomination won't make it to the Senate floor. "He will not be confirmed," predicted panel member Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D) of California on Feb. 24.

Senate postpones vote on Pickering nomination

Ben Bryant
The Sun Herald
February 27, 2002, Wednesday

At the request of Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., the Senate Judiciary Committee has postponed a vote on the nomination of Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The vote, originally scheduled for Thursday, will take place "sometime next week," said Mimi Devlin, a spokesman for the committee's Democratic majority. Lott said he asked for the postponement to give Pickering more time to respond to written questions submitted to the judge by committee members three weeks ago. He said one senator, whom he did not identify, gave Pickering 78 questions. "I think that Judge Pickering has been treated very poorly," Lott said.

Meanwhile, four Pickering opponents from Mississippi took their case to Lott and Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., in private meetings Tuesday. One of the judge's foes, Kathy Egland of Gulfport, Miss., said his confirmation would mean "retrogression" on civil rights issues.

Egland said the news media has distorted the level of support among Mississippi blacks for the judge, who has been endorsed by blacks in his hometown of Laurel and by Charles Evers, brother of slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers. But Pickering's home-state black proponents are more loud than large, said Egland, a veteran of the NAACP who is serving her second term on the organization's national board of directors.

"Charles Pickering would open a gateway of horror in our own back yards," she said, citing decisions Pickering issued against plaintiffs in employment discrimination cases. "I can't speak for anybody else, what's on their hearts."

Pickering's nomination has been criticized by Democratic senators and interest groups that have called his legal record "insensitive and sometimes even hostile" to civil rights. They have also questioned whether he violated judicial ethics by intervening on behalf of a cross-burning suspect in 1995.

Egland and the rest of the four-person delegation from Mississippi assailed the judge for calling the cross burning, which took place in Walthall County, Miss., in 1993, a drunken prank."

Pickering asked federal prosecutors to reduce the charges against one of the three suspects, whom he deemed less responsible for the crime than the others.

"That (Pickering) would call burning a cross 'a drunken prank,' I can't tell you how offensive that is to me," said Richard Glisson, president of Students Envisioning Equality through Diversity at the University of Mississippi. "In fact, I'll go far enough to say that Sen. Lott is racially insensitive for nominating him."

Glisson and Egland were joined by Jolivette Anderson and Betty Thompson, both of Jackson, Miss., for the meetings with Lott and Cochran, who both said they still support Pickering.

But staffers for the Democratic senators on the Senate Judiciary Committee predicted the vote would go against the judge and said the delay would make no difference in the vote.

"We're pretty unified on this side," one said, echoing comments made Sunday by Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., a committee member.

Campaign-finance bill will pass this year, Daschle vows

Paul Leavitt
USA TODAY
February 27, 2002, Wednesday,

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., promised Tuesday that legislation revamping campaign-finance laws will be passed this year, and Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., who has been the bill's leading opponent, signaled that he won't try to block passage with a filibuster. Supporters want the Senate to pass the version that cleared the House last month. That would avoid a conference committee of House and Senate members to iron out differences. President Bush has indicated he likely would sign the legislation. -- Jim Drinkard

Senate battling over judicial nominations

U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith defended his record at his Senate confirmation hearing for the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia. Opponents say Smith ruled in a case in which he had a financial interest. He oversaw for a month a trial in 1997 in which Mid-State Bank was accused of complicity in a defendant's fraud scheme. His wife, Karen, was a bank officer, and he had stock in the bank. Smith said Mid-State's role wasn't apparent, but when it arose, he took himself off the case. "None of the parties, lawyers or judges, nor the trustee has questioned my conduct," Smith said.

The Judiciary Committee delayed a vote on another nominee, Charles Pickering of Mississippi, for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., sought the delay so Pickering could respond to more questions. Critics question his views on civil rights, but some blacks in his state have come to his defense.

Bush pushes marriage in welfare plan

President Bush's proposed changes to welfare include new federal spending on programs to promote marriage and sexual abstinence. He wants to spend $ 200 million in federal money and $ 100 million from states on programs such as premarital counseling and education. He also wants $ 135 million to discourage premarital sex among youth. Abstinence prevents "unwanted pregnancies and sexually transmitted diseases," he said. "When our children face a choice between self-restraint and self-destruction, government should not be neutral." -- Judy Keen

Federal Panel Imposes Miss. Redistricting Plan; Outcome Favors Republican Rep. Pickering

Thomas B. Edsall
The Washington Post
February 27, 2002, Wednesday,

A three-judge federal panel yesterday imposed a Mississippi congressional redistricting plan putting Rep. Charles W. "Chip" Pickering Jr. (R) and Rep. Ronnie Shows (D) together in a district that favors the Republican.

An appeal to Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia was rejected hours later.

The outcome infuriated Democrats and civil rights advocates who argued that black voters will have far less influence under the federal court plan than they would have under a state court plan ruled unconstitutional by the federal panel. The state and federal courts entered the dispute after the state legislature was unable to agree on new congressional district lines. The federal court acted in part because the Justice Department had delayed granting "preclearance" approval to the state plan as required by the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Districts had to be in place so that candidates preparing to run could meet the March 1 filing deadline for federal office in Mississippi.

Rep. Martin Frost (D-Tex.), who has overseen national Democratic redistricting strategy, attacked political appointees at the Justice Department, charging they "cynically manipulated the Voting Rights Act to help Republicans by hurting African American voters. . . . The Bush Justice Department has abused its most fundamental duty -- fairly enforcing America's civil rights."

REV_00141084

Yesterday, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) submitted written questions to Attorney General John D. Ashcroft asking whether career attorneys recommended approval of the state plan and whether they were overruled by political appointees.

Asked whether that was the case, Justice Department spokesman Dan Nelson said, "We don't comment on internal deliberative documents," referring to recommendations made by the career staff. "I couldn't give you any guidance on that." He said no one from the White House tried to influence departmental consideration of the Mississippi case.

Career lawyers in the voting rights division at Justice declined to discuss their recommendations or views about the Mississippi case. Former career lawyers contended, however, that the preclearance delays were based on questions that are not a legitimate part of a voting rights review. The questions raised by Justice involved the legality of a Mississippi Chancery Court ordering a redistricting plan.

Paul Hancock, a former deputy assistant attorney general for civil rights, said preclearance review is limited to just one question: "only whether the submitted plan is retrogressive in purpose or effect." He said the Justice letter questioning the state court plan "seems to be much more political in nature than programatic."

The three-judge panel, all GOP appointees, went substantially beyond the preclearance issue in ordering its own plan into effect.

The federal judges -- E. Grady Jolly, Henry T. Wingate and David C. Bramlette -- wrote that under Article 1, Section 4 of the Constitution -- "The Times, Places and manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof" -- the state court had no authority to draw new congressional districts.

"We can only conclude that the requirements [of the Constitution] were not met in this case, as there has been no indication that the chancery court had any legislative authority to draw the state's districts."

Under the rejected state court plan, Shows and Pickering would have been placed in a district in which blacks, a heavily Democratic constituency, made up 37.5 percent of the voting age population. Under the federal court plan, blacks make up 30 percent.

Scalia, who handles emergency appeals from the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, has a number of ties to the Pickering family. In 1997, the Associated Press reported that Scalia presided over Pickering's first congressional swearing-in ceremony and that Pickering's father, U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering, arranged a trip for Scalia to Mississippi to give a speech.

Scalia Denies Miss. Dems' Appeal

February 26, 2002 Tuesday

A U.S. Supreme Court justice on Tuesday denied an emergency appeal filed by Democrats in Mississippi's congressional redistricting dispute, which could clear the way for the state to use a map drawn up by three GOP-appointed judges.

After a decade of slow population growth, Mississippi must give up one of its five U.S. House seats.

Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia on Tuesday denied the appeal filed by attorney Robert McDuff of Jackson. McDuff wanted the court to order the state to use a congressional map drawn by Hinds County Chancery Judge Patricia Wise that was backed by Democrats. Scalia's denial came hours after three federal judges in Jackson ordered that the state use a map they drew. All three federal judges were appointed by Republicans.

McDuff immediately refiled his emergency appeal with Justice David H. Souter. The attorney said Souter can take up the appeal or, more likely, forward it to the full court.

He said he expected some word from the court either later this week or early next week.

No matter which plan is used, Rep. Chip Pickering, a Republican, and Rep. Ronnie Shows, a Democrat, will meet in a new consolidated district.

The federal judges' plan is thought to favor Pickering, while the rival plan was thought to favor Shows.

"We're obviously very pleased that the U.S. Supreme Court denied the emergency petition of the Democrats," said Grant Fox of Tupelo, an attorney who has represented Republicans in state and federal court redistricting fights.

McDuff said he also would ask the full Supreme Court to consider his appeal. He said it could be heard in the fall.

"This is obviously a setback," McDuff said.

Congressional candidates' qualifying deadline is Friday. Primaries are June 4 and the general election is Nov. 5.

Scalia handles emergency appeals from the 5th U.S. Circuit of Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas.

Scalia presided over Pickering's first swearing-in ceremony to Congress in 1997.

REV_00141086

The justice also has spoken in Mississippi several times since the early 1990s. One trip in 1996 was arranged by Pickering's father, U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering, who is awaiting Senate action on his nomination to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Mississippi redistricting landed in the courts after state lawmakers were unable to agree on their own map. Democrats sued in chancery court and Republicans sued in federal court.

In ordering that their map be used, the three federal judges said it's unconstitutional for a chancery judge rather than the Legislature to draw a redistricting plan.

The federal judges said their plan would be used until the state produces a redistricting map that the Justice Department agrees is fair to minorities.

The federal judges' plan puts heavily Republican, suburban Jackson precincts in the new district where Pickering and Shows will face off.

Wise's plan puts those precincts in a district that dips down from northern Mississippi and gives the new district a higher concentration of black voters, who often vote Democratic.

Panel Grills Pa. Judge on Ethics

A Pennsylvania judge who is up for a promotion told senators Tuesday he did nothing unethical by temporarily overseeing a fraud case involving a bank where his wife worked.

U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith said during his confirmation hearing for the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia that he recused himself from the trial after a month because of the appearance, even though he wasn't required to.

"I wish I had recused myself earlier, but I did it because it was the right thing to do," Smith said.

Democrats and liberal groups have questioned Smith's qualifications for the court, which covers Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and the Virgin Islands. Some senators are worried about his chances in front of the Democratic-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee. "I'm just hoping they'll be fair when the time comes," said Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz.

Smith's supporters said his record is being distorted and he deserves to be on the higher court. "There is a lot of misinformation about him out there," Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa., told the committee.

REV_00141087

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., who sits on the committee, said, "I'm satisfied that Judge Smith has completely responded and answered any questions that have been raised."

It was not immediately known when the committee will vote on Smith.

The committee also delayed a planned Thursday confirmation vote for U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, whose conservative record has brought criticism by liberal groups.

Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., said Tuesday he would join Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., in announcing publicly their intention to vote against Pickering. His "record as a judge clearly demonstrates that he is willing to put his own views above the law," Edwards said.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., asked the committee to give Pickering extra time to answer a "long list" of written questions submitted to him by senators after his second confirmation hearing.

It will be next week at the earliest before Pickering, who wants to be elevated to the 5th U.S. Circuit Appeals Court in New Orleans, is considered.

"Judge Pickering should have the opportunity to respond to the questions," Lott said.

Justice Department officials told the committee they expected Pickering to finish answering the questions before the day was out, a committee spokesman said. "There's been no indication from the White House or the Department of Justice that there would be any difficulty in Judge Pickering responding to the written questions," spokesman David Carle said.

Democrats questioned Smith, 50, for overseeing for a month in 1997 a fraud trial involving Mid-State Bank.

Smith's wife, Karen Smith, was the vice president of the lending department at Mid-State Bank at the time. The Smiths also held Mid-State stock.

Smith said Tuesday there was nothing at the outset of the case that indicated that Mid-State Bank would be involved, and there wasn't enough of a conflict later on to trigger an automatic disqualification.

"I was still satisfied ... there was no specific information that had been presented to me that was sufficient to suggest a basis for recusal," Smith said.

Smith issued several rulings before taking himself out of the trial, but the Justice Department cleared him of any wrongdoing.

Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., questioned Smith taking paid educational trips, saying Smith has taken more such trips than all but four judges in the nation. Feingold said the trips' total value was about $30,000, and some were to resort locations like Hilton Head Island, S.C.

Smith said the trips were purely education-related but he would not attend similar seminars if elevated to the appeals court unless he was sure it would not cause an appearance problem.

Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., threatened to filibuster Smith if he refused to answer questions because he might have to make a ruling on the issues later. Biden pointed out that in 1993 Smith talked about the Violence Against Women Act, which was going to be challenged in court, in front of the conservative Federalist Society.

"If you suggest to me that you cannot respond in the same way you responded as a sitting federal judge on the Violence Against Women Act, then I will do everything in my power to defeat you, including moving to the Senate floor to take an action I've never taken in my life as a United States senator, a filibuster," Biden said.

Biden left before Smith could respond. It was not immediately known whether Smith, like Pickering, would be required to come to a second hearing.

The Senate also confirmed two U.S. District Court judges on Tuesday: Cindy Jorgenson of Arizona and Robert Blackburn of Colorado. They were both confirmed by 98-0 votes.

U.S. Supreme Court denies Dems' initial redistricting appeal

A U.S. Supreme Court justice on Tuesday denied an emergency appeal filed by Democrats in Mississippi's congressional redistricting dispute, possibly clearing the way for the state to use a map drawn up by three GOP-appointed judges.

After a decade of slow population growth, Mississippi must give up one of its five U.S. House seats.

Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia denied the appeal filed by attorney Robert McDuff of Jackson. McDuff wanted the court to order the state to use a congressional map drawn by Hinds County Chancery Judge Patricia Wise that was backed by Democrats. Scalia handles emergency appeals from the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which includes Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas.

His denial came hours after three Republican-appointed federal judges in Jackson ordered that the state use a map they drew.

McDuff immediately refiled his emergency appeal with Justice David H. Souter. The attorney said Souter can take up the appeal or, more likely, forward it to the full Supreme Court.

McDuff said he expected some word from the court either later this week or early next week.

No matter which plan is used, the state's two junior congressmen - Republican Chip Pickering and Democrat Ronnie Shows - will meet in a new consolidated district.

The federal judges' plan is thought to favor Pickering, while the rival plan was thought to favor Shows.

Scalia presided over Pickering's first congressional swearing-in ceremony to Congress.

The justice also has spoken in Mississippi several times since the early 1990s. One trip in 1996 was arranged by Pickering's father, U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering, who is awaiting Senate action on his nomination to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Shows spokeswoman Cassie Sheldon would not comment on Scalia's connections to the Pickering family.

Speaking for Shows, she said of Scalia's denial of Democrats' initial appeal: "We're disappointed but we're not going to give up the fight for what's fair. We are going to run no matter what and we are going to win."

Chip Pickering's campaign manager, Henry Barbour, said Scalia has been hunting with Judge Pickering but the Pickerings' acquaintance with the justice has nothing to do with the redistricting case.

"This is an issue of the facts and the law," Barbour said. "If the other side wants to whine or complain, I think people are getting tired of that."

Barbour also said Chip Pickering plans to run "an aggressive, strong, grass-roots campaign."

During a budget hearing in Washington Tuesday, U.S. Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., gave Attorney General John Ashcroft a list of questions about the Justice Department, including its handling of Mississippi redistricting, said Leahy spokesman David Carle.

Leahy is chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, where Judge Pickering's confirmation is pending.

REV_00141090

Grant Fox of Tupelo, an attorney who has represented Republicans in state and federal court redistricting fights, said he expects the federal court's plan to be used in this year's elections.

"We're obviously very pleased that the U.S. Supreme Court denied the emergency petition of the Democrats," Fox said.

McDuff said he also will ask the full U.S. Supreme Court to consider more extensive arguments on Mississippi redistricting. He said those arguments could be heard in the fall.

"This is obviously a setback," McDuff said Tuesday. "We knew that an emergency application to the Supreme Court was an uphill ride and the hill has just gotten little steeper with this initial denial."

Congressional candidates' qualifying deadline is Friday. Primaries are June 4 and the general election is Nov. 5.

Mississippi redistricting bounced into the courts after state lawmakers were unable to agree on their own map. Democrats sued in chancery court and Republicans sued in federal court.

In ordering that their map be used, the three federal judges said it's unconstitutional for a chancery judge rather than the Legislature to draw a redistricting plan.

McDuff said previous court rulings from other states show the federal judges' ruling Tuesday is "totally wrong."

He said the state court didn't steal legislators' ability to draw a map.

"The Legislature dropped the ball and walked away," McDuff said.

The federal judges said their plan would be used until the state produces a redistricting map that the Justice Department agrees is fair to minorities.

The federal judges' plan puts heavily Republican, suburban Jackson precincts in the new central district where Pickering and Shows will face off.

Wise's plan puts those precincts in a district that dips down from northern Mississippi and gives the new central district a higher concentration of black voters, who often vote Democratic.

The three federal judges in Jackson said last week that they would order their plan to be used if the U.S. Justice Department by late Monday didn't approve Wise's map. That approval didn't come.

The Justice Department has been checking Wise's plan to ensure it's fair to minorities. The federal judges' plan does not need Justice clearance.

REV_00141091

Democrats, including Shows, have accused the Justice Department of stalling on the state map to give Republicans an edge.

Mississippi has had one of the nation's most contentious redistricting fights, and the outcome could help determine the partisan balance of power on Capitol Hill.

Judiciary Democrats grill Pa. judge on ethics; Pickering vote delayed for a week

Pickering Defeat Looms as Democrats Hold to Tough Line

James W. Brosnan
The Commercial Appeal (Memphis, TN)
February 26, 2002 Tuesday

President Bush faces defeat for one of his judicial picks Thursday, when the Senate Judiciary Committee is scheduled to vote on the nomination of Mississippian Charles Pickering to the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

One Democrat, Dianne Feinstein of California, is predicting Pickering's defeat and that seems to be borne out in the tough line taken by Democrats, who hold a 10-9 majority, in written questions submitted to Pickering, a 64-year-old U.S. District Court judge, in the wake of two contentious hearings.

Sen. Herb Kohl (D-Wis.), who has been reticent about Pickering in public, asked the judge about his statement in a 1993 voting rights case that the one-person, one-vote doctrine might be "obtrusive" and give people "more government than they want." "What could be more important in this country than an equal right to vote?" wrote Kohl.

Several Democrats asked Pickering about a 1994 cross-burning case in which he forced Justice Department prosecutors to drop one charge against defendant Daniel Swan. Pickering did not want to sentence Swan to 7 years in prison as required by sentencing guidelines.

According to a memo from Linda Davis, head of the criminal section of the Justice Department's civil rights division, Pickering told prosecutors "that in the current racial climate in that part of the state, such a harsh sentence would serve only to divide the community."

Sen. Joe Biden (D-Del.) asked Pickering if the sentence would be more divisive "than the act of burning a cross on the lawn of a minority or mixed-race family."

In a letter sent to Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), Pickering said that unlike a 17-year-old co-defendant, who pled guilty and got probation, Swan had no history of racial violence.

REV_00141094

"As repugnant as this crime was, I nevertheless felt this was the worst case of disparate sentencing that had come before me during my tenure on the bench," said Pickering.

He also said there was a split in the appellate courts about whether the most serious charge, use of a fire in commission of a felony, applied in cross-burning case.

"A Fair-Minded Judge"

Byron York
National Review
February 26, 2002

In a new twist in the battle over the nomination of Charles Pickering to a place on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, a former top Clinton Justice Department official - who also happens to be former Vice President Al Gore's brother-in-law - has given the Senate Judiciary Committee a strong endorsement of Pickering's character.

The former official is Frank Hunger, who headed the Justice Department's Civil Division from 1993 until 1999. Like Pickering, Hunger is a Mississippian, and the two men have known each other for almost 30 years. Hunger is the man Pickering called in early 1995 when Pickering, a federal district judge in southern Mississippi, was trying to decide how to sentence a man convicted in a cross burning case. Pickering had become frustrated by the Justice Department's reluctance to answer questions about sentencing practices for similar crimes and complained to Hunger, who told him the problem was outside his area of responsibility. Democratic senator John Edwards, in a harsh interrogation at Pickering's February 7 confirmation hearing, accused Pickering of violating judicial ethics by calling Hunger. In a February 12 letter to committee chairman Patrick Leahy and ranking Republican Orrin Hatch, Hunger takes issue with those allegations. "I have little or no recollection of the call," Hunger writes. "The significance of this to me is had I felt at the time that there was anything inappropriate or improper about Judge Pickering's call I would most assuredly remember it today." Hunger says he has read Pickering's account of the matter and has "no reason whatsoever to take issue with anything he [Pickering] has said about the call."

Hunger's letter continues with an endorsement of Pickering as a judge and a man. "I have known Judge Pickering for nearly thirty years and have the utmost respect for him as a fair-minded judge who would never knowingly do anything improper or unethical," Hunger writes. "He is a person of great integrity, strong moral character, courage and compassion who treats all who come before him in a fair and dignified way." Hunger concludes by saying that Pickering has been "a distinguished judge and I think it most regrettable that his nomination has become controversial."

Despite the lift provided by Hunger's letter, there is increasing pessimism among Republicans about Pickering's chances. Many were deeply discouraged on Sunday after the appearance of Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein on NBC's Meet the Press, in which Feinstein declared her opposition to Pickering and said every Democrat on the committee agreed with her. "I believe that there's virtually unanimous opinion on the Democratic side of the Judiciary Committee that he will not be confirmed," Feinstein said. "In other words, he will not be voted out of the Judiciary Committee."

"So all ten Democrats will oppose him?" host Tim Russert asked.

"I believe so," Feinstein answered.

From a Republican perspective, what is even more disturbing than the fate of the Pickering nomination is the fear that Democrats are making good on threats to adopt a no-conservatives-allowed policy of evaluating nominations to the federal bench. "I've looked rather carefully at [Pickering's] background, and I think you have a person who has very strong right-wing views, both politically and personally," Feinstein said. "The question always comes: Can you put those views entirely aside? This is a lifetime appointment. If you can't be assured that the individual is really going to put those views aside, what happens is two years into the term those views creep forward again."

Finally, in the most disheartening development for Republicans, Feinstein returned to an argument against President Bush that Democrats have not used publicly in many months, certainly not since Sept. 11: the contention that the narrowness of Bush's victory in the 2000 election disqualifies him from appointing conservatives to the bench. "President Bush did not have a large mandate," Feinstein said. "There is no mandate, in my view, to skew the courts to the right. And so I think you're going to see a Judiciary Committee that's really going to be looking for mainstream judges, and those judges that they find outside of the mainstream I do not believe will have Democratic support."

A committee vote on Pickering is likely by March 7, but some key Republicans now believe Pickering's defeat is just a formality. "I still had hope until Sunday," said one GOP aide after watching Feinstein on Meet the Press. Now, that hope appears to be gone.

Unwarranted charges of racism

Stanley Kurtz
National Review
February 26, 2002, Tuesday

Racism is wrong. That's for certain. The trouble is, accusations of racism have also been turned into easily abused tools of personal destruction.

We've seen how opponents of Charles Pickering's appointment to the federal bench have tried to ruin him by pretending to discover in his judicial conservatism the taint of personal racism. Now a false charge of racism has brought a call for the dismissal of Candace de Russy, an outspoken trustee of the State University of New York, who dared to publicly criticize the SUNY system's African-American-studies programs for political bias and lack of rigor. The United University Professions, the 27,000-member union of faculty and staff at the SUNY system, has passed a resolution calling for de Russy's dismissal from the board. De Russy's crime was to be quoted in Newsday arguing that most black studies departments have become "flabby feel-good programs that carry an anti-American bias and do little to advance knowledge." De Russy happily concedes that there has been a good deal of distinguished African-American scholarship in recent years, pointing to the work of William Julius Wilson, for example. What bothers her is that black-studies departments have come under the control of professors with a single point of view, pushing students to come to predetermined political conclusions. The views of conservative black scholars such as Shelby Steele and Thomas Sowell, for example, are rarely presented.

Of course, the de Russy affair is only the latest in a long line of incidents in which open critics of black studies programs are tarred with charges of racism. Readers will recall the dust-up at Harvard over President Lawrence Summers's criticisms of Cornel West, but the problem has a much longer history. Last year, there were the attacks on the offices of student papers that had published the David Horowitz ad opposing slave reparations.

And remember the attempts to silence Harvey Mansfield's campaign against grade inflation at Harvard, simply because he argued that affirmative action played a role in promoting the practice? A lesser-known incident was the assault last November on Professor Barry Shain of Colgate University. Like de Russy, Shain had expressed concerns about black-studies courses that focused more on politically tinged consciousness raising than on mastery of a body of knowledge. And like de Russy, Shain was worried that such courses tempted students with easy grades for de facto group-therapy sessions. Seventy students, many of them black, occupied the Colgate admissions office and put their demands against Shain.

As with the de Russy flap, the real motive in the Shain affair was to destroy the one professor at Colgate who regularly shows the courage to criticize the plans and programs of a left-leaning faculty.

The list of such incidents and tactics can be extended indefinitely, going back to the origins of black-studies programs in the late sixties. At SUNY Stony Brook, for example, the black-studies program was instituted in 1968 after black students shut down the campus for days. The most famous incident of all was at Cornell in 1969, where black radicals armed with shotguns took over an administration building and threatened the lives of faculty who opposed their demands for, among other things, a program in black studies.

There can be no doubt that slavery and racism together constitute the most shameful chapter in American history. The study of that sad past, like the study of the struggles and positive achievements of black Americans, was unjustly neglected prior to the late sixties. But there is plenty of room for legitimate disagreement about the best way to integrate the study of minorities and women into the academic curriculum. The legacy of slavery and racism is tragic, real and important. Yet in the last 35 years, another disturbing legacy has taken root in the United States. It is the legacy of intimidation launched against any who dare to demur at the demands of organized minorities. We shall know that racism has finally been defeated in the United States when the "demands" of America's minorities can be subject to the same sort of rough and tumble criticism as the views of anyone else. In the meantime, we must do what we can to defend the freedom and integrity of brave souls like Barry Shain and Candace de Russy.

President to propose changes to welfare

Paul Leavitt and Richard Benedetto
USA TODAY

EXCERPT
The Senate Judiciary Committee takes up two controversial judicial nominations this week.

The American Bar Association said D. Brooks Smith is qualified to be a judge on the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia, but opponents say he wrongfully made rulings in a case in which he and his wife had a financial interest. Smith oversaw for a month a fraud trial in 1997 involving Mid-State Bank, which was accused of complicity in fraud. Smith's wife, Karen, was a bank officer. He also listed $ 100,000 to $ 250,000 of the bank's stock on his financial disclosure form. Smith later took himself off the case, and the Justice Department cleared him of wrongdoing.

Later this week, the committee is scheduled to vote on Charles Pickering for a seat on the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. Opponents say he is hostile to civil right issues. Supporters say he testified against the Ku Klux Klan in Mississippi and has worked at racial reconciliation in the state.

More Questions for Pickering With confirmation vote looming, senators have new queries for 5th Circuit nominee.

REV_00141098

With a Senate Judiciary Committee vote on Charles Pickering Sr. slated for Feb. 28, the appeals court nominee appears to beheaded for a narrow party-line rejection, Senate observers say.

In their last chance to screen Pickering, several senators have submitted written questions for the district judge from Mississippito answer before the vote. Nothing in the questions seems likely to arouse hopes among Pickering's backers that a Democrat ortwo would cross party lines and support him.

At a Feb. 7 hearing, Democrats, who hold a 10-9 edge on the committee, queried Pickering intensively about his views onracial issues, his rulings as a trial judge, and his views on the Constitution and the right to privacy. The vast majority of the written questions came from Democrats with serious reservations about Pickering's nomination. The queries track many of the issuesraised at the hearing, but some new allegations also emerged.

Sen. Herb Kohl of Wisconsin, the only Democrat who did not attend the Feb. 7 hearing, posed six questions that suggest Kohlshares many of his colleagues' concerns.

Kohl cited a Pickering voting rights decision from 1993 in which the judge expressed doubt about whether federal law requiresdrawing lines that divide towns and communities in order to equalize the population of voting districts. He concluded in Fairley v.Forrest Countythat he was "bound to follow the precedents established by prior controlling judicial decisions."

But he also wondered "if we are not giving the people more government than they want and more than is required in definingone-man, one-vote too precisely."

Commenting on this language, Kohl asked, "What could be more important in this country than an equal right to vote?"

Pickering, with the help of officials at the Justice Department's Office of Legal Policy, has sent in some written responses. ButMimi Devlin, a committee spokeswoman, says Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) will not release the replies until all have been received.

Pickering declines comment. On his behalf, Justice Department Director of Public Affairs Barbara Comstock says, "JudgePickering takes the inquiries of the Senate Judiciary Committee very seriously and is working diligently to provide them with thorough and accurate responses as quickly as possible."

Both Kohl and Sen. Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.) asked about Pickering's support in 1974 of a resolution asking Congress to repeal the Occupational Safety and Health Act. Pickering was then a state senator in Mississippi.

According to Kohl and Kennedy, the resolution referred to OSHA as "ridiculous, outrageous, and wasteful" and assailed the act as unduly burdensome to business.

"Do you still hold those views about OSHA?" Kohl asked. "Do your views expressed toward OSHA demonstrate your thoughts generally about the role of the federal government in issues concerning worker safety?"

Though Pickering's written response was not available at press time, a Department of Justice official rejects the implication that Pickering is opposed to OSHA enforcement.

"Thirty years after OSHA was first passed, Judge Pickering believes that the federal government has an important role to play in ensuring the safety of America's workers," the official says. "As a practicing lawyer in the 1980s, Judge Pickering remembers using OSHA regulations and standards to protect the rights of workers."

Adds the official: "It is the responsibility of federal judges to enforce statutory enactments. The judge did so as a district court judge and intends to do so as a circuit court judge, if given the opportunity."

Sen. Russ Feingold (D-Wis.), the lone Judiciary Committee Democrat to support the nomination of Attorney General John Ashcroft, questioned why Judge Pickering dismissed a number of pro se cases filed by federal prisoners as frivolous and threatened to impose sanctions against the prisoners.

The senator pointed out that a 1996 law specified two types of sanctions against prisoners' frivolous claims. He queried why Pickering authorized other sanctions-such as ordering prison officials to restrict the inmate's prison privileges-without citing any basis in federal law.

"On what specific legal authority were you relying when you threatened to impose these sanctions?" Feingold asked.

The only Republican to ask questions was Sen. Jeff Sessions of Alabama, whose queries were framed in broad terms, unlike the confrontational tone that many Democrats adopted.

"Please describe your views on the availability of habeas corpus relief to prisoners," Sessions asked.

While Pickering appears to lack support from any committee Democrats, some observers speculate that Leahy may agree to send the nomination to the Senate floor with a negative recommendation rather than bottle it up in committee.

Pickering has strong support from Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.), and at least two Democrats in the closely divided Senate-Ernest Hollings of South Carolina and Zell Miller of Georgia-have said that they would vote to confirm Pickering if his name reached the floor.

Members of Leahy's staff declined comment on whether Pickering's name would get out of committee if he is voted down. Ron Bonjean, Lott's press secretary, declines comment.

Pickering Battles Face Decisions on Two Fronts

Paul Kane
Roll Call
February 25, 2002

With charges and countercharges flying from Mississippi to Capitol Hill, the father-son duo of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering and Rep. Chip Pickering (R-Miss.) may face their respective political days of reckoning this week.

In decisions that will have ripple effects throughout all three branches of the federal government, the Pickerings are engaged in racially charged fights, with interest groups on both sides mounting furious campaigns.

Judge Pickering, seeking an elevation to the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, has faced a nearly endless volley of charges that he has been racially insensitive as a state politician and on the federal bench. The Senate Judiciary Committee is tentatively slated to vote on Pickering Thursday, with his nomination desperately in need of support from one Democrat on the panel to gain a vote on the Senate floor. Rep. Pickering is facing a redistricting battle that will pit him against Rep. Ronnie Shows (D-Miss.) in the fall, but a legal fight between state and federal courts has not yet resolved the precise shape of the new district. If the Justice Department does not sign off on a state-backed plan by today, a three-judge federal panel has said it will impose its own district - which is much more favorable to Chip Pickering because of its lower percentage of voting-age black residents - by tomorrow, in time for the March 1 filing deadline.

While the two cases are seemingly independent of each other, the cast of characters waging fights over the Pickerings' futures are virtually the same, and each side has made vague allegations against the other about linking the two battles for its own advantage.

Rep. Bennie Thompson (D-Miss.), who has been the most outspoken Congressional Black Caucus opponent of Judge Pickering's and the CBC leader in the redistricting fight, went to great lengths to note that the redistricting plan favoring Republicans was designed by three GOP-nominated judges. One of the three, U.S. District Judge Henry Wingate, wrote a letter to the Judiciary Committee in support of Judge Pickering's nomination, and another, District Judge David Bramlett, serves with Wingate and Pickering on the same federal court.

"And now they craft a plan that's more favorable to their colleague's son than the [state-backed plan] that's under review by the Justice Department," Thompson said, adding that it's not too far a stretch to say the judges are seeking retribution for Democratic opposition to the judicial nomination. "It certainly could be made to [look] that way."

REV_00141101

Rep. Pickering, who has been the most outspoken supporter on behalf of his father's nomination, has argued just the opposite, that Congressional Democrats are holding up Judge Pickering's nomination as leverage in the redistricting battle.

The nomination fight has become a pivotal one in the Senate, with Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) - a friend of Judge Pickering's for 30 years and former boss of Rep. Pickering - vowing retribution if Democrats defeat the judicial nomination. Some Senate Republicans have even talked of holding up all legislative matters through parliamentary tactics, freezing the Senate floor, if the Pickering nomination goes down, according to aides.

But interest groups from the People for the American Way to the NAACP have ratcheted up the pressure on Judiciary Democrats, arguing that Pickering's record as a state Senator and federal judge is replete with insensitivity to civil rights.

According to one aide to a Judiciary Democrat, the anti-Pickering coalition began a fax, phone and e-mail campaign Thursday, with form letters from across Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi accusing Pickering of "insensitive and extreme views."

Despite favorable stories in the national press about home-state support for Pickering among blacks, the coalition is arguing that those supporters only know Pickering as a person, not as a judge. "We're not looking into his heart, we're looking into his record," said Ralph Neas, president of People for the American Way.

Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) has scheduled a business meeting to vote on nominations Thursday, when it is "likely" Pickering's nomination will be handled, according to David Carle, Leahy's spokesman.

Aides and observers noted that a decision to hold a vote so quickly after the return from the Presidents' Day recess does not bode well for Pickering's chances. But, Carle stressed, "No final agenda [for the hearing] will be set until closer to Thursday."

By that time, Rep. Pickering's future may already be virtually certain. The Justice Department, under the Voting Rights Act, must approve any redistricting plan in Mississippi, and originally faced a deadline today for approving or rejecting the state-backed plan. But two weeks ago Justice's Civil Rights Division requested more information from Mississippi regarding its plan, which would leave a Pickering-Shows district with 37 percent of the voting-age population being African-American.

Justice thus created a new 60-day deadline for later in the spring, but the filing deadline for candidates continues to be March 1. The three-judge panel, however, has drawn up its own district - 30 percent African-American - and said that redistricting must be in place by the filing deadline, requiring the federal map to be imposed Tuesday if Justice does not clear the state-backed plan by today.

Thompson, Shows and Mississippi Democrats have accused Justice of intentionally delaying its decisions on the state plan to guarantee that the map more favorable to the GOP would be imposed by the federal court.

If the redistricting fight isn't connected to the judicial battle, it is, at a minimum, dirty politics, they contend. "I have never seen such blatant political manipulation. Instead of enforcing the Voting Rights Act, they are carrying the water of Chip Pickering," said Rob McDuff, a Democratic attorney from Jackson, Miss.

Democrats fear that a district with only a 30 percent African-American voting population may not even be competitive for Shows, whose current district has a population of 43 percent black voters.

Republicans contend that the plan violates the civil rights laws because it was written up by a local judge, an African-American voted into office as an independent from an overwhelmingly Democratic region. Alocal judge should not be drawing up a statewide Congressional map, Republicans contend, an allegation Justice has been inclined to listen to so far. "That's something that has never been done before," said Dan Nelson, a department spokesman.

Nelson said the various political scenarios will not be a factor in the decision, but he couldn't guarantee a decision will come in time to avoid the federal judges' takeover of the redistricting process.

Judge Defends Ethics in Handling of Case

The Commercial Appeal (Memphis, TN)
February 27, 2002 Wednesday

A Pennsylvania judge who is up for a promotion told senators Tuesday he did nothing unethical by temporarily overseeing a fraud case involving a bank where his wife worked.

U.S. Dist. Judge D. Brooks Smith said during his confirmation hearing for the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia that he recused himself from the trial after a month because of the appearance of conflict of interest, even though he wasn't required to.

"I wish I had recused myself earlier, but I did it because it was the right thing to do," Smith said.

Democrats and liberal groups have questioned Smith's qualifications for the court, which covers Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and the Virgin Islands. Some senators are worried about his chances in front of the Democratic-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee.

"I'm just hoping they'll be fair when the time comes," said Sen. Jon Kyl (R-Ariz.).

REV_00141103

It was not immediately known when the committee will vote on Smith.

Democrats questioned Smith, 50, for overseeing for a month in 1997 a fraud trial involving Mid-State Bank.

Smith's wife, Karen Smith, was vice president of the lending department at Mid-State Bank at the time. The Smiths also held Mid-State stock.

Smith said there was nothing at the outset of the case that indicated that Mid-State Bank would be involved.

"I was still satisfied . . . there was no specific information that had been presented to me that was sufficient to suggest a basis for recusal," Smith said.

Judge wins Senate approval

The Denver Post
February 27, 2002 Wednesday

EXCERPT

The U.S. Senate on Tuesday voted 98-0 to approve Robert Blackburn's nomination to serve as a judge on the U.S. District Court in Colorado.

Blackburn, 51, of Las Animas was appointed as a state district judge in Bent County in 1988. He practiced law for 13 years before that. He earned his law degree at the University of Colorado.

He will be sworn in sometime in April, said Sean Conway, spokesman for Sen. Wayne Allard, R-Colo.

Enviros Criticize Third Judicial Nomination, Two others; Head to Senate

Brian Stempeck
Greenwire
February 27, 2002

As two controversial appeals court nominations head before the Senate Judiciary Committee this week, environmental groups are raising concerns about President Bush's nomination for the U.S. Court of Federal Claims. Bush's pick is an extremist when it comes to decisions related to the Fifth Amendment's takings clause, according to the groups, though property rights advocates say the nominee actually holds moderate views.

In a letter to Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.), 23 environmental groups, including Defenders of Wildlife, American Rivers and Friends of the Earth, expressed concerns about Lawrence Block, nominated to the Court of Federal Claims. The court is almost solely responsible for many takings decisions, said Glenn Sugameli, senior legislative counsel for the Earthjustice Legal Defense Fund, another of the groups involved in the letter. Property owners often argue a 'taking' occurs when a government regulation or seizure causes a major loss in revenue or development ability, though there is no set rule for what constitutes a taking. Conservation groups worry that changing definitions of takings would force state and federal governments to pay landowners for meeting environmental standards. "Mr. Block's record and his answers to the Senate Judiciary Committee Questionnaire for Judicial Nominees suggest... that he would apply an extreme approach to takings law that would conflict with unanimous Supreme Court rulings," the groups said in the letter. "An ultra-conservative interpretation of the Takings Clause could be extremely damaging, redefining property rights at the expense of neighboring property, public health, and the environment. Federal Claims Court rulings could require that taxpayers fund prohibitively expensive windfall payments to property owners who obey pollution-control and other laws. The cost of these payments would chill enforcement and implementation of a wide array of laws that protect the American people."

Sugameli called Block a "very strong, outspoken advocate of expansive private property takings provisions." As senior counsel to former Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), Block worked on a bill backed by the National Home Builders Association, said Sugameli. That bill "would have changed the standards and procedures for takings claims against local governments," he said, and if passed, would have been "a hammer to the head of local officials."

Sugameli said he fears Block would not follow precedents, based on strong opinions he has put forth in personal statements, during his time with Hatch, and in the nominees questionnaire. "The problem is he either is unable to tell what precedent is or unwilling to admit it," said Sugameli.

But conservative groups say Earthjustice and the others are exaggerating Block's record. Chuck Cushman, executive director of the American Land Rights Association, said he didn't think the Bush administration would nominate an extremist to any court. "They don't have a record of appointing extremists to anything," he said. Environmentalist claims accusing Block of extremism are "nonsense," said Cushman. "I don't have any sense of that at all."

Cushman said he had spoken to Block on a number of occasions when Block was with Hatch and called constituents. "I have a sense of his views on some of these things," said Cushman. "He sounds like a pretty moderate guy to me."

Other conservative groups similarly supported Block. "What I find shocking about those environmentalists who oppose property rights is how little they understand the issue," said Roger

Pilan, vice president of legal affairs for the Cato Institute. "They don't seem to appreciate that environmentalism is rooted in property rights theory. The whole of nuisance law -- which is environmentalism writ small -- is about protecting the rights of some property owners from the abuses that might follow from the uses that other owners of their property. Property rights constitute the foundation of environmental protection," he added.

PICKERING, BROOKS GO BEFORE SENATE

Though Block will not go before the Senate Judiciary Committee for several weeks, two other controversial appeals court nominations are slated for review this week.

Judge Charles Pickering, the Bush administration's pick for the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, goes before the committee Thursday. Pickering has a history of denying citizens access to federal courts, according to Earthjustice, such as when he dismissed "claims filed by victims in toxic tort cases concerning an EPA Superfund site." The real conntroversy surrounding Pickering, however, is related to his civil rights record, which could prevent his passage. Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.) said on NBC's "Meet the Press" that the 10 Democrats on the committee will oppose Pickering's nomination.

Environmental groups have also criticized Judge D. Brooks Smith, nominated to the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, saying he is lax on punishing polluters (Greenwire, Feb. 14).

But similar to Pickering's situation, other aspects of Smith's background may prevent his affirmation. In 1997, Smith presided over an investment fraud case for nearly a month, without revealing that his wife and he had a financial interest in the case, as was reported in the Washington Postand other papers. Smith appeared before the committee yesterday and was questioned on the fraud case and his views opposing the Violence Against Women Act, according to David Carle, press secretary to Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.). A vote on Smith's confirmation has not yet been scheduled, he said.

Lott gains a delay on vote for Bush judicial nominee; Postponement gives GOP time to counter criticism

Michael Petrocelli
The Houston Chronicle
February 27, 2002, Wednesday

WASHINGTON - Scrambling to salvage President Bush's nominee to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Senate Republican leader Trent Lott won a delay Tuesday on a critical vote by the Democrat-controlled Judiciary Committee.

The committee - which must clear all judicial nominations before they reach the full Senate - had been scheduled to vote Thursday on the nomination of Charles Pickering, but committee chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., pushed the vote back to next week.

REV_00141106

David Carle, a spokesman for Leahy, said the chairman agreed to postpone the vote "as a courtesy" to Lott, a Mississippi Republican.

Pickering's nomination to fill a vacant seat on the 5th Circuit, which includes Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi, has been embroiled in questions about his record on race relations and abortion rights. The nomination of Pickering, 64, who currently is a federal judge in Mississippi, is the first of what is expected to be a number of tough confirmation fights for Bush judicial nominees.

A Pennsylvania judge who is up for another appeals court seat told senators Tuesday that he did nothing unethical while overseeing a fraud case involving a bank where his wife worked. Democrats and liberal groups have questioned U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith's qualifications for the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia.

Democrats questioned Smith, 50, about his waiting a month before stepping down from a 1997 fraud trial involving a bank at which his wife was vice president of the lending department. The judge and his wife also owned stock in the bank.

Tuesday's postponement of the vote on Pickering gives Lott and fellow Republicans another week to counter growing criticism of the nomination, but it may only delay an inevitable rejection by the Judiciary Committee or the Senate.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., a member of the committee, predicted Sunday on NBC's Meet the Press that Pickering's nomination would not make it to the Senate floor.

"I believe that there's virtually unanimous opinion on the Democratic side of the Judiciary Committee that he will not be confirmed. In other words he will not be voted out of the Judiciary Committee," she said.

Democrats hold a 10-9 advantage on the committee.

White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said Bush will fight to get Pickering confirmed. "The president continues to have every bit of confidence in Judge Pickering and will continue to support him and urge his passage," Fleischer said.

"I think what you're seeing is an unfortunate part of the politicization of the way judges, circuit court judges are picked in this country," he said.

A spokesman said Lott asked for the delay to give Pickering time to respond to questions submitted last week by Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., a member of the committee.

The announcement of the delay came on the same day a group of activists from Texas was making the rounds on Capitol Hill, urging Senators to reject Pickering.

The confirmation fight has revisited chapters from Mississippi's resistance to racial integration.

REV_00141107

Pickering's supporters have sought to portray him as a courageous proponent of civil rights, while his opponents have painted him as a barely-reconstructed segregationist.

The NAACP has challenged Pickering on an article he wrote in 1959 as a University of Mississippi law student, encouraging tougher laws against interracial marriage. He also has drawn criticism for his contacts with the Mississippi SovereigntyCommission, a state agency that was created to help maintain segregation.

During Judiciary Committee hearings into his nomination, Pickering acknowledged that in a case before his court in 1994, he opposed a mandatory five-year sentence for a man convicted of burning a cross on the lawn of an interracial couple. The judge also acknowledged contacting a Justice Department official urging prosecutors to agree to a lighter sentence than required by law.

Pickering's supporters have pointed to the fact that in 1967, as a county attorney in Laurel, Miss., he testified against a Ku Klux Klan leader on trial for the murder of a civil rights leader. Doing so cost him his re-election, they say, and put him in physical danger in a town with many people sympathetic to the Klan.

Edwards opposes Bush nominee

John Wagner
The News and Observer (Raleigh, NC)
February 27, 2002 Wednesday

Washington -- U.S. Sen. John Edwards on Tuesday formally outlined his objections to elevating a Mississippi judge to a federal appeals court, contending that President Bush's nominee would "put his own views above the law."

Edwards, a North Carolina Democrat, was among the most aggressive questioners earlier this month when Judge Charles Pickering appeared before the Senate Judiciary Committee for his confirmation hearing. Bush has nominated Pickering, a U.S. District Court judge, to a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

During the hearing, Edwards strongly implied that Pickering had acted inappropriately in a 1994 case that involved a cross-burning on the lawn of an interracial couple. Several days later, Edwards touted his tough posture during a political appearance in California that was designed to showcase him as a potential 2004 presidential candidate. Although Edwards' questioning of Pickering drew praise from Democratic leaders, his tactics were heavily criticized by Richard "Dickie" Scruggs, a well-known Democratic trial lawyer from Mississippi, who said Edwards badly distorted Pickering's record.

REV_00141108

Edwards also drew fire from conservatives, with The Wall Street Journal accusing him of "race-baiting to liberal crowds" in an editorial Tuesday. "This is a man who wants to be President," the editorial stated.

On Tuesday, Edwards released statements from three law school professors, all of whom concluded Pickering acted inappropriately in the 1994 case.

During his questioning at the hearing, Edwards implied that Pickering violated a judicial code of conduct, first by meeting privately with one side of the case and then by intervening at the U.S. Justice Department.

Pickering maintained that he was merely expressing frustration at a situation in which prosecutors had gone easy on the main culprit in exchange for a guilty plea but come down much harder on a lesser player.

The three law professors who backed up Edwards on Tuesday were Stephen Gillers of New York University, John Leubsdorf of Rutgers University and Stephen Lubet of Northwestern University.

In his statement Tuesday, Edwards also noted that Pickering's rulings in other cases have been reversed 15 times by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for his failure to follow "well-established principles of law."

Pickering's supporters maintain that such a figure is not unusual, given that he has issued thousands of opinions during his tenure.

The confirmation of Pickering has become a highly partisan fight between Senate Democrats and President Bush. Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, a Mississippi Republican, is a staunch supporter of Pickering and has threatened to retaliate against Democrats if Pickering is not confirmed.

The Judiciary Committee had scheduled a vote on Pickering's nomination Thursday, but it now appears the vote will be put off at least until next week. Some Democrats on the committee have predicted that Pickering's nomination will not be cleared by the panel.

In his statement, Edwards also noted that he has voted to confirm all 38 other individuals nominated by President Bush for federal judgeships.

That total, however, does not include Judge Terrence Boyle of North Carolina, whom Bush has nominated to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Edwards has blocked Boyle from receiving a confirmation hearing as part of a long-running feud with U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms over nominees from North Carolina.

Another confirmation fight is brewing, with Democrats expressing concern about a fraud case involving a bank where the nominee's wife worked.

Judge D. Brooks Smith, who temporarily oversaw the case, said he recused himself a month into the trial even though he didn't have to. Smith is up for a position on the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which covers Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and the Virgin Islands.

Thornburgh Fails to Make Case Against Judge's Critics

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
February 27, 2002 Wednesday

Lawyers know judges professionally better than anyone else. Yet if you're a reporter profiling a judge, and you go in search of lawyers who will make on-the-record comments, two things are bound to happen:

Those with positive things to say will be glad to say them for attribution, and those with critical opinions will either keep their mouths shut or speak only on condition that they not be identified, which means their quotes are unlikely to appear.

Newspapers, by and large, are loath to publish anonymous quotes, with good reason. It's too easy to take potshots for which one cannot be held accountable. But the lack of counterbalance has a tendency to skew judicial profiles in the judges' favor. If, for example, I were doing a piece on Allegheny County Common Pleas Judge Patrick McFalls, and I went out today in search of lawyers' input, I'd have no problem getting anecdotes about his good humor and great storytelling. But if I asked about judges getting drunk and taking off their pants in neighborhood bars, I'd be hard-pressed to get a single disapproval on the record.

This kind of reticence is a simple fact of self-preservation. No lawyers in their right minds are going to antagonize the very people who determine the fates of their cases, clients and careers.

Sucking up, on the other hand, never hurts.

Objection, your honor! No fair characterizing lawyers as suck-ups just because they happen to sincerely like a judge or truly believe that she or he is fair, honorable and upright.

OK, withdrawn. Such wholesale damnation is out of bounds.

By the same token, given that lawyers don't feel safe in going public with negative comments about a judicial nominee, it is every bit as out of bounds to dismiss all criticism from other organizations as the illegitimate ravings of "extreme interest groups."

REV_00141110

Yet that is what Dick Thornburgh did this week in his op-ed defense of D. Brooks Smith, the chief judge of U.S. District Court here whose nomination to the 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals is drawing some opposition fire.

Thornburgh, who entered politics as a moderate Republican and then grew increasingly conservative during his tenure as Ronald Reagan's and George Bush's attorney general, used the phrase "extreme interest groups" not once but three times in attacking Smith's critics.

How convenient for him that these groups -- extreme or not -- were the only ones in a position to publicly raise questions about Smith's propensity for luxury trips paid for by corporate sponsors, and his failure to immediately recuse himself from the John Gardner Black fraud case involving the bank where his wife was a vice president.

These are legitimate areas of inquiry. And given the array of accolades heaped upon Smith by Republicans and Democrats alike, you wouldn't think that a closer look would be seen as so outrageously partisan.

Because Thornburgh was a trustee of the defrauded school districts in the Black case, he was in a unique position to give his opinion of the judge's actions in that case. He should have stopped there. But the old pol just couldn't resist piling on.

Ah well, give him this much: At long last, the former attorney general has found a reason to come out against partisan critics of a president's judicial picks.

Too bad he didn't feel the need to speak up in defense of Democrats John Bingler and Lynette Norton. Both are highly regarded and highly qualified lawyers from Pittsburgh. Both were nominated -- twice -- to the federal bench by President Clinton. Both were blocked by Republican Sen. Rick Santorum in a bare-knuckle act of political aggression.

But while Little Ricky was crossing his arms and taunting the president with the equivalent of "Bil-ly, you've got some 'splainin' to do!" Thornburgh never wrote a single op-ed piece defending Bingler or Norton, or lamenting the undue harm that Santorum's partisanship was inflicting on the grossly understaffed district court in this region.

Now that the nominee is a Republican with longtime ties to Thornburgh, the ex-AG has suddenly gotten religion on this matter. But his criticism of Smith's opponents would carry a lot more weight if, when the chips were down for two well-regarded Democratic nominees, he'd stood up to Santorum, an extreme interest group of one.

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
February 27, 2002 Wednesday
CORRECTION/CLARIFICATION

National. A Post-Gazette story last Wednesday may have left the wrong impression about two aspects of U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith's handling of the John Gardner Black investment fraud case, a subject of Smith's confirmation hearing in the Senate yesterday.

The controversy has to do with whether Smith recused himself quickly enough after it became clear that Mid-State Bank, where his wife was an officer and where he and his wife had invested more than $100,000, might have helped Black hide losses from investments he managed for dozens of Pennsylvania school districts and a handful of municipalities. The Securities and Exchange Commission sued Black Sept. 26, 1997, and was granted a temporary restraining order freezing all assets in question. A month later, at the request of the SEC and court-appointed trustee Dick Thornburgh, Smith allowed investors access to half of their assets, pending a final resolution as to how much each district was owed.

In doing so, Smith continued to treat similarly those districts whose assets sat in a pooled account at Mid-State Bank, where most of the investment losses occurred, and those whose assets were placed elsewhere and had not incurred heavy losses. The Feb. 20 story described this as Smith "pooling" the assets of all districts but might more accurately have described it as continuing to pool their losses, just as the original freeze had done.

The story went on to point out that Smith's ruling did not stand, suggesting that U.S. District Judge Donetta Ambrose, who took over the case after Smith recused himself, found fault with Smith's October order. In fact, Ambrose approved his order in December.

It was not until five months later, after receiving new information on remaining assets and a flurry of legal briefs, that Ambrose rearranged the case. She ruled that the districts whose assets had not been pooled at Mid-State be given access to all their holdings. Those who suffered losses in the pooled account at Mid-State would get 90 percent of their share of the assets that remained.

The 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld her decision in December 1998 and said the non-pooled assets should not have been frozen. Therefore, while Smith's ruling did not ultimately stand, it was initially upheld and altered only after the case had progressed.

Altoona Judge Fails to Satisfy Biden's Concerns; Lack of Candidness Could Spur Filibuster

Ann McFeatters
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
February 27, 2002 Wednesday

District Court Judge D. Brooks Smith of Altoona, fighting hard to win Senate confirmation as President Bush's nominee for the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, still faces a barrage of questions from Sen. Joseph Biden, who warned yesterday that he would filibuster against the judge on the Senate floor if Smith were not "candid" in his replies.

Time ran out at yesterday's hearing for Smith before the Senate Judiciary Committee, as several senators who said they still had questions for the nominee had to hasten to the floor for votes. Smith's hearing finally was adjourned when Biden, D-Del., was delayed, and Smith was told that he would get a batch of written questions next Tuesday. But the impact of answers to written questions is rarely as great as an open hearing's give-and-take between lawmakers and witnesses. Pennsylvania's two Republican senators, Arlen Specter and Rick Santorum, both spoke strongly on behalf of Smith, 50, whom President Ronald Reagan named to the District Court in 1988, when the nominee was 36. Santorum said Smith has "incredible support" from an "incredible array" of people," including 17 members of Congress. He said "national interest groups" -- representing environmental, civil rights and women's issues -- were "weighing in" to try to discredit the judge.

Smith was accompanied by a phalanx of supporters, including nearly a dozen lawyers. Among the group were Timothy Lewis, a former 3rd Circuit judge who returned to private practice in 1999, quitting the seat that Smith has been nominated to fill; Duquesne University law professor Ken Gormley; and Reps. Melissa Hart, R-Bradford Woods, and William Coyne, D-Oakland.

The concerns raised yesterday over Smith's nomination were from Democrats and focused on three areas: His legal seminar attendance at resorts, judicial philosophy and his delay in recusing himself in a controversial case.

Sen. Russell Feingold, D-Wis., characterized the 12 seminars at resorts around the country that Smith attended as intended to influence judges in cases affecting large corporations. Feingold said only four other federal judges have attended more such seminars.

Smith responded that it is his job to hear "different points of view on a daily basis; it's what we're about. I can hear these points of view without being influenced."

When Feingold asked why Smith hadn't reported the seminars' value, which were estimated to be worth about $30,000, the judge said it was his understanding that he didn't have to. He said he had made "more than one phone call" to try to discover the seminars' funding and learned that they came from 'dead men's [foundation] money.' "

When Feingold noted that Bethlehem Steel had been a sponsor of at least one and that Smith had presided in several cases involving that company, the judge said he hadn't been aware of that sponsorship. But Smith sought to assure the committee that in the future, "until I can be satisfied that funding is not a problem, I won't attend" such seminars.

Biden asked about a 1993 speech that Smith gave to the Pittsburgh Federalist Society, in which Smith raised constitutional questions about the Violence Against Women Act. The measure, which the senator had sponsored, gave women the right to seek federal court redress under civil rights laws. The Supreme Court later struck down part of the law.

In his speech, Smith had laid out a view of federalism asserting that if the Constitution doesn't specifically grant a power to the federal government, Congress can't pass a law dealing with it. Some critics suggest that if such a view were to prevail on the federal bench, it would negate many civil rights and environmental laws.

Biden said he accepted Specter's word that Smith has the temperament and character for the appellate job, but he still had other questions for Smith. Biden said that if he felt Smith were not being candid or advanced the argument that he couldn't discuss issues that might come before him, "I'll filibuster on the floor of the Senate" to defeat Smith, even though he had "never taken that step in my life." Biden and Smith appeared to differ sharply in their view of states rights vs. federal rights.

Several senators asked Smith why he hadn't recused himself sooner in a case involving a U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission's suit against former Altoona investor J. Gardner Black, now serving 41 months in jail for defrauding 75 school districts through risky investments. Black's bank, Mid-State, which employed Smith's wife and in which the couple had at least $100,000 of stock, was involved in the case, though not a direct party. Still, the bank later had to pay a settlement of $51 million to the districts.

Because it was not a party to the suit, Smith said, he saw no sufficient reason to recuse himself under federal law until he saw a report by Dick Thornburgh, the case's trustee and a former Pennsylvania governor and U.S. attorney general. Thornburgh said the bank might be more involved in the case than it had seemed at first. Smith said he had issued rulings in the case for a month, some of which seemed to favor the bank, "with the belief that Mid-State Bank was nothing more than a depository."

Four days after receiving Thornburgh's report, he recused himself, citing his wife's employment but not his own financial interest. The law does not require judges to give a reason for stepping aside.

Later, Smith also presided for about five months in a criminal case the federal government brought against Black until the defendant himself requested that the judge recuse himself.

Smith's supporters maintain that he acted properly. But under continued Feingold questioning, Smith himself said, "With the benefit of hindsight, I wish I had recused earlier."

Specter noted that of 5,298 cases Smith has handled as a federal judge, only 526 were appealed and 53 reversed -- just about a 10 percent reversal rate. That, he said approvingly, is less than the 11.7 percent rate for the 3rd Circuit as a whole.

Judge Defends Role In Seminars, Bank; Senators Question Appellate Nominee

February 27, 2002, Wednesday

U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith defended himself before the Senate Judiciary Committee yesterday as Democratic senators questioned his expense-paid attendance at legal seminars sponsored by conservative groups and his handling of a 1997 case that involved a bank where his wife worked and in which he had a substantial financial interest.

Smith, who has been nominated by President Bush for a seat on the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, said the seminars were "educational" but had not influenced his judicial views. "Judges are accustomed to hearing different points of view," he said. "It's what we do." Defending his decision to preside over the 1997 case for a month before he removed himself, Smith said he did not think at the outset of the proceeding that Mid-State Bank of Altoona, Pa., was anything more than the "depository" for funds that an investment adviser was accused of defrauding from several school districts in western Pennsylvania.

But after a while, Smith said, he "became uneasy" about the bank's role in the case and recused himself, citing his wife's job. He said he did not disclose his financial interest in the bank because he did not consider the bank to be financially liable in the case.

Smith's wife, Karen, was a vice president of Mid-State at the time. The couple jointly owned at least $ 100,000 in stock in a holding company that controlled the bank.

While most of the questions at yesterday's hearing concerned Smith's travels to the seminars and the 1997 fraud case, the most serious threat to his nomination was voiced by Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr. (D-Del.).

Biden said he was most concerned about Smith's "judicial philosophy" and warned the judge that if he attempted to duck questions by saying that the issues might come before him on the circuit court, "I will do everything I can to defeat you," including resort to a filibuster.

But during the 10 minutes allotted to him, Biden asked only one question, then left the hearing room before Smith could answer and did not return for a second round of questioning.

Sen. Russell Feingold (D-Wis.) said that between 1992 and 2000, Smith attended 12 seminars sponsored by the Foundation for Research on Economics and the Environment and George Mason University's Law and Economics Center, which espouse conservative legal views and paid about $ 30,000 to cover Smith's expenses.

Smith said he would not attend such seminars again unless he were satisfied that funding for groups sponsoring them did not come from corporations or others who had issues before his court.

Smith, 50, chief judge of the U.S. District Court for Western Pennsylvania, has come under fire from several liberal groups that accused him of too often siding with "powerful interests" while neglecting "the rights and needs of ordinary Americans." The groups have cited a 1993 speech Smith gave to the Federalist Society of Pittsburgh that assailed the constitutionality of the Violence Against Women Act, a portion of which was later struck down by the Supreme Court. Smith said yesterday that he was "absolutely committed to adhering" to the portions of the law that were not struck down.

Republicans on the committee defended Smith throughout the questioning, which Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah) said was inspired by "the usual liberal lobbyists and interest groups in Washington."

Meanwhile yesterday, the committee postponed for a week a vote on the nomination of U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

2nd judicial nominee hit in Senate; Democrats criticize Smith; GOP cries foul over 'pattern'

Audrey Hudson
The Washington Times
February 27, 2002, Wednesday

Senate Democrats yesterday broadened their criticisms of President Bush's judicial nominees to another circuit court candidate, in what Republicans said was a growing pattern of delay and character assassination.

District Judge D. Brooks Smith, chief judge of the Western District of Pennsylvania, faced tough questioning from Judiciary Committee Democrats, as a vote on another embattled nominee was delayed.

"It is absolutely a pattern," said Sen. Jeff Sessions, Alabama Republican and Judiciary Committee member.

"They are taking a series of insignificant and isolated events in a person's life and creating a caricature of that person. Then they ask the Senate to vote down the caricature, not the person," Mr. Sessions said. Led by People for the American Way, liberal groups oppose Judge Smith's views on states' rights, civil rights, the environment and consumer protection. The groups and Democrats also question the conservative nominee's judicial ethics and recusal from a fraud case.

Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr. said he would maintain an open mind with regard to Judge Smith's nomination, but in the same breath threatened to defeat the nominee if he were not completely forthcoming to all questions from Democrats.

"I will do everything in my power to defeat you, including moving to the Senate floor to take action I've never taken in my life as a United States senator, a filibuster," Mr. Biden said.

In a 1993 speech to the Pittsburgh Federalist Society, Judge Smith criticized the Delaware Democrat and his efforts to pass the Violence Against Women Act, some portions of which were overturned by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Judge Smith maintains that states, not the federal government, have power over domestic-violence laws.

Mr. Biden recognized that Judge Smith's foresight was correct but said he was more interested in the nominee's future behavior.

"I care about your judicial philosophy. I don't care where you went; I care about where you are going," Mr. Biden said.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican, agrees that a pattern is emerging with regard to circuit judge nominations that are delayed or not even considered by Democrats who control the Senate.

The Senate has approved 33 district judges and seven circuit judges, including two confirmed yesterday by a 98-0 vote: Robert Blackburn to the U.S. District of Colorado and Cindy K. Jorgenson to the U.S. District of Arizona. Still pending in committee are 22 circuit judges and 28 district judges.

"I'm not satisfied with the way the president's nominees for the federal judiciary are being treated," Mr. Lott said.

Mr. Lott requested that a committee vote tomorrow on District Judge Charles W. Pickering to a circuit post be postponed one week to allow him more time to answer additional written questions from Democratic senators.

"I do think that Judge Pickering has been treated very poorly," Mr. Lott said. Judge Pickering is one of five nominees who have had hearings but no committee votes.

In addition to two hearings and an intense examination of hundreds of Judge Pickering's written opinions, Mr. Lott said, one Democrat has submitted a list of 78 questions the Mississippi jurist is still answering.

"I think that at least Judge Pickering should have the opportunity to respond to the questions," Mr. Lott said.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, Vermont Democrat and Judiciary Committee chairman, said the process would move more quickly if the White House would work with home-state senators "to identify fair-minded, non-ideological, consensus nominees to fill these court vacancies."

"As we move forward, I have urged the White House to show greater inclusiveness and flexibility and to help make this a truly bipartisan enterprise," Mr. Leahy said.

Democrats peppered Judge Smith with numerous questions about the number of judicial seminars he had attended, a case in which he recused himself and the Federalist Society speech. A committee vote on the Smith nomination has not been scheduled.

"Anyone who has been reading the newspapers in the past few weeks knows that it would be impossible to comment on Judge Smith's credentials without mentioning the attack he has come under from the usual liberal lobbyist interest groups in Washington," said Sen. Orrin G. Hatch of Utah, the Judiciary Committee's ranking Republican.

"As President Reagan would say, 'There they go again,'" Mr. Hatch said.

Judge Smith took an untold number of trips to seminars totaling $30,000. Such trips are opposed by Sen. Russell D. Feingold, Wisconsin Democrat and a sponsor of legislation to ban such trips. Judge Smith told the committee he would not take any trips as a circuit court judge if they appeared improper or created a conflict of interest.

Judge Smith recused himself during a 1997 fraud case involving Mid-State Bank, where his wife, Karen, was vice president of lending. The Smiths also held $100,000 to $250,000 of Mid-State Bank stock and a 401(k) fund with the bank in the same amount.

The fraud charge was not leveled at the bank, but a client was accused of defrauding dozens of Pennsylvania school districts.

"At no time did I have an actual conflict of interest that required my automatic disqualification," Judge Smith said.

To avoid an appearance of a conflict of interest, Judge Smith said, he recused himself in the middle of the case, but the rulings he already had made were "neither illegal nor unethical."

"None of the parties, lawyers or judges nor the trustee has questioned my conduct," Judge Smith said.

Sen. John Edwards, North Carolina Democrat, asked numerous questions of state versus congressional authority, including whether Congress had the right to pass legislation making terrorist hoaxes illegal and to criminalize drug use.

"Absolutely," Judge Smith answered each time.

Mr. Sessions cited the American Bar Association's unanimous rating of Judge Smith as "well qualified" as a reason to support the judge.

"He will follow the law, even if he does not agree with it," Mr. Sessions said.

By opposing Pickering, Democrats deal blow to Lott

Ana Radelat

February 26, 2002, Tuesday

WASHINGTON -- Democrats may bury Judge Charles Pickering's nomination to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals this week, dealing a blow to the White House and to the judge's chief champion on Capitol Hill -- Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss.,

Lott, a 30-year friend and political ally of the Hattiesburg-based federal judge, promoted Pickering's candidacy at the White House and pressured the Democratic-controlled Senate to move on the nomination.

But Lott angered Senate Democrats -- especially Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., head of the Senate Judiciary Committee -- by accusing them of dragging their feet on consideration of nearly 100 other Bush judicial nominees. Lott also threatened to block legislation if Leahy's committee failed to schedule hearings on Bush nominees.

Democrats say they're processing Bush's candidates more quickly than Republicans handled President Clinton's judicial nominees when the GOP controlled the chamber. The fight over judicial nominations has left both sides bitter and may have strengthened Democratic resolve to oppose Pickering's candidacy. "In politics the cliche 'what goes around comes around' is truer than in any other field," said Martin Wiseman, head of the Stennis Institute at Mississippi State University.

The Senate Judiciary Committee -- composed 10 Democrats and nine Republicans -- may vote Thursday on Pickering's nomination. Only two committee members say they'll vote "no" on the nomination -- Sens. Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y., and Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif.

But Feinstein said "there is virtually unanimous opinion on the Democratic side" of the panel that Pickering will not be confirmed.

"I think that people on our side believe that it would be a tremendous mistake to put someone as polarizing in this position now," Feinstein said during a Sunday "Meet the Press" interview.

Democrats on the Judiciary Committee -- some of the most liberal members of their party -- and dozens of special interest groups ranging from the National Association for the Advancement of

REV_00141119

Colored People to the American Association of University Women, are concerned Pickering would increase the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeal's conservative tilt. Those opposed to his nomination hope it is buried by an unfavorable vote in the Judiciary Committee and the full Senate never has a chance to consider his candidacy.

But the fight over Pickering has other implications for the White House and for Lott, whose job as Senate minority leader is to promote Bush's judicial nominations.

Pickering's defeat would pave the way for the derailment of other controversial judicial candidates, including D. Brooks Smith, nominated for a seat on the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals; Miguel Estrada, a nominee for the District of Columbia Circuit of the U.S. Court of Appeals; and Jeffrey Sutton, a nominee for the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Wiseman said Pickering would not have had a problem if the Senate had not changed hands in the summer when Sen. Jim Jeffords, I-Vt., bolted from the GOP, throwing the majority to the Democrats. If the GOP had retained control of the Judiciary Committee, it's likely it would have swiftly approved the 64-year-old federal judge whom detractors have dubbed "Lott's judge."

There's some indication Lott thinks the partisan fight over the judgeship has a personal angle. He has accused Pickering's opponents of taking a "snooker shot" at him.

Lott spokesman Lee Youngblood hinted at retribution.

"I'm sure that if they don't confirm Pickering ... that Senator Lott will be fairly angry and will consider appropriate action," Youngblood said.

Wiseman said opposition to Pickering was an unusually tough challenge for Lott, who personally lobbied many Senate Judiciary Committee Democrats -- as well as the sole Republican on the panel who appears to have reservations about Pickering, Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa.

"As good as he is at behind the scene deal making, he's had problems with this one," Wiseman said. "And (Lott's) not been asleep at the wheel."

Meanwhile Democratic resolve to block Pickering seems to be hardening. The judge has received dozens of written questions from panel Democrats -- most about the same issues raised during a grueling Feb. 7 Judiciary Committee hearing on the confirmation. Pickering's written responses will not be released until later this week.

In addition, Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., has circulated a letter from Stephen Gillers, a vice dean at New York University's School of Law, that said it was improper for Pickering to solicit letters in support of his nomination from lawyers who regularly appear before him.

"Judge Pickering's conduct creates the appearance of impropriety, in part, because of the power federal judges, and particularly federal trial judges, have over matters that come before them," Gillers wrote.

Senate Confirms Robert E. Blackburn For Federal Bench in Denver

States News Service
February 26, 2002, Tuesday

The Senate officially confirmed State District Judge Robert E. Blackburn of Las Animas for a seat on the federal bench in Denver with a 98-0 vote on Tuesday morning.

Blackburn, 51, currently holds court in Crowley, Otero and Bent Counties. President Bush first nominated Blackburn for the position on Sept. 10 of this year.

The onetime Black Angus cattle rancher has practiced law as a private lawyer, a deputy district attorney, and state judge. Colorado Gov. Roy Romer, a Democrat, first named Blackburn to the state bench in 1988.

Blackburn is expected to be sworn in sometime this spring and for a spot with the U.S. District Court of Colorado in Denver that has been vacant since 1998.

Colorado's two Republican senators, Ben Nighthorse Campbell and Wayne Allard, first suggested Blackburn to the White House as a possible nominee to the federal bench following a recommendation from an independent judicial review committee formed by the two lawmakers.

Both Colorado Senators praised Blackburn following the final Senate confirmation vote.

"Tough, fair, and engaged in his work, Judge Blackburn is an asset to the judicial system," said Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, R-Colo. "These professional qualities are important characteristics that have served him well and will continue to do so in his new endeavors."

Noting that the federal bench in Denver has been in need of new judges, Allard enthusiastically welcomed Blackburn's final confirmation.

"For too long the people of Colorado have gone without their full compliment of judges," Allard said. "Today's Senate confirmation of Judge Blackburn, along with it's earlier confirmation of U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Marcia Krieger, will help greatly in addressing the delays citizens have been experiencing due to those unfilled vacancies on Colorado's District Court."

Lott delays vote on judge Pickering

Ben Bryant
The Sun Herald

REV_00141121

February 28, 2002, Thursday

WASHINGTON _ At the request of Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., the Senate Judiciary Committee has postponed a vote on the nomination of Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The vote, originally scheduled for Thursday, will take place "sometime next week," said Mimi Devlin, a spokesman for the committee's Democratic majority. Lott said he asked for the postponement to give Pickering more time to respond to written questions submitted to the judge by committee members three weeks ago. He said one senator, whom he did not identify, gave Pickering 78 questions. "I think that Judge Pickering has been treated very poorly," Lott said.

Meanwhile, four Pickering opponents from Mississippi took their case to Lott and Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., in private meetings Tuesday. One of the judge's foes, Kathy Egland of Gulfport, Miss., said his confirmation would mean "retrogression" on civil rights issues.

Egland said the news media has distorted the level of support among Mississippi blacks for the judge, who has been endorsed by blacks in his hometown of Laurel and by Charles Evers, brother of slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers. But Pickering's home-state black proponents are more loud than numerous, said Egland, a veteran of the NAACP who is serving her second term on the organization's national board of directors.

"Charles Pickering would open a gateway of horror in our own back yards," she said, citing decisions Pickering issued against plaintiffs in employment discrimination cases. "I can't speak for anybody else, what's on their hearts." Pickering's nomination has been criticized by Democratic senators and interest groups that have called his legal record "insensitive and sometimes even hostile" to civil rights. They have also questioned whether he violated judicial ethics by intervening on behalf of a cross-burning suspect in 1995. Egland and the rest of the four-person delegation from Mississippi assailed the judge for calling the cross burning, which took place in Walthall County in 1993, a "drunken prank."

Pickering asked federal prosecutors to reduce the charges against one of the three suspects, whom he deemed less responsible for the crime than the others.

"That (Pickering) would call burning a cross 'a drunken prank,' I can't tell you how offensive that is to me," said Richard Glisson, president of Students Envisioning Equality through Diversity at the University of Mississippi. "In fact, I'll go far enough to say that Sen. Lott is racially insensitive for nominating him."

Glisson and Egland were joined by Jolivette Anderson and Betty Thompson, both of Jackson, for the meetings with Lott and Cochran, who both said they still support Pickering.

But staffers for the Democratic senators on the Senate Judiciary Committee predicted the vote would go against the judge and said the delay would make no difference in the vote.

Judicial gridlock in Senate: same story, different setting

Noelle Straub
The Hill
February 27, 2002 Wednesday

Despite Republican accusations that Senate Democrats are moving too slowly on President Bush's judicial nominees, legal experts say the nominations are proceeding at a pace roughly on a par with previous congresses.

However, the same experts argue that the confirmation process still needs reforming, citing the fact that 95 of the 844 federal circuit and district court judgeships, or about 11 percent of the total, remain vacant.

For more than a decade, each party has blamed the other for holding up nominees on ideological grounds, a debate currently focused on Bush's controversial nomination of District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, and likely to grow louder if Bush has the opportunity to fill any vacancies on the U.S. Supreme Court.

The GOP complaints echo those made by Democrats in the 1990s, when many of President Clinton's nominees were held up for months or even years or never given a hearing by a Republican Senate.

But legal experts say this is a case of the pot calling the kettle black, with both sides treating nominees roughly the same when in control of the Senate. Sarah Binder, a fellow at the Brookings Institution and political science professor at George Washington University, said that much like previous years, the Senate is confirming district court nominees while nominees to higher-profile appellate courts get bogged down.

But Binder asserted that the parties do not hold up nominees solely for revenge. "My sense is that the Democrats aren't playing tit for tat. Both sides did it because they care deeply about the ideological makeup of the courts."

Michael Gerhardt, law professor at the College of William and Mary and author of The Federal Appointments Process, noted that the Senate Judiciary Committee faced an unprecedented situation in the past year. Democrats suddenly took control of the Senate in June and Vermont's Patrick Leahy (D) replaced Utah's Orrin Hatch (R) as chairman, and the panel had to expedite antiterrorism legislation after Sept. 11.

Democrats also insisted on waiting for the American Bar Association (ABA) to provide ratings on nominees before acting on them. Last March, Bush ended the 50-year practice of sending the names of judicial nominees to the ABA before sending them to the Senate.

REV_00141123

"I don't think we're off the chart with anything terribly unusual going on [in the Judiciary Committee]," Gerhardt said. "I don't think either side is without some blame. ... The pattern over the last decade has been that judicial selections have been relatively slow and filled with a lot of payback."

As of Monday, there were 50 Bush nominees for circuit and district court slots pending before the Judiciary Committee.

But the average number of days from nomination to confirmation for judicial nominees - a good indication of how quickly the panel is acting - has improved this session.

It took an average of 106 days for the process when Democrats controlled the Senate during President Reagan's last two years in the White House in 1987-88, according to Judiciary Committee statistics.

That number remained fairly steady during the next two Congresses - 106 days and 114 days - when Democrats still controlled the Senate and acted on the first President Bush's nominees.

The average dropped to 80 days during President Clinton's first two years in office but rose again after Republicans took back the Senate in 1994, peaking at 225 during 1997-98.

Since Democrats took control of the Senate last June, that number has again fallen, according to Sheldon Goldman, professor of political science at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and author of Picking Federal Judges: Lower Court Selection from Roosevelt through Reagan.

"The average number of days for those confirmed in 2001 is some 25 or 30 days less than what it took the Republicans during the previous Congress," he said.

Goldman stressed that, although Leahy and his staff are moving quickly on the noncontroversial nominees, the system needs an overhaul.

"That is so badly needed, because we've come to a crisis point where there is obstruction and delay instead of advise and consent on the part of a number of senators," he said. "It's not Senator Leahy who is obstructing and delaying, just as it was not Senator Hatch who was. But they cannot unilaterally change the rules."

With rising concern over the vacancy rate, both Leahy and Hatch, now the ranking member, cite different statistics to bolster their argument that they treated judicial nominees fairly.

REV_00141124

Leahy points out that from the day Democrats took control of the Senate through the end of 2001, the chamber had confirmed 28 of Bush's nominees. That increased to 37 by the start of the President's Day recess.

By contrast, the Senate confirmed 27 of President Clinton's nominees his first year in office, and 15 of former President Bush's nominees in his first year, 1989.

"In the six years that a Republican majority was considering President Clinton's judicial nominations, more than 50 nominees never received a hearing and a committee vote," Leahy told the Senate last month. "During those years, the Republican majority in the Senate went entire sessions without confirming a single judge for the Courts of Appeals."

But Republicans point to nominees who have not yet been given hearings and to the 50 Bush circuit and district court nominees pending before the Judiciary Committee.

Charles Fried, solicitor general under the first President Bush, said that Leahy's refusal to schedule hearings on George W. Bush's judicial nominees is "disgraceful and unjustified."

He added, "Which isn't to say that the Republicans didn't do the same thing, but I don't think they did it as much."

Hatch defends his record vigorously. Soon after Democrats took control of the Senate in June, he told the Judiciary Committee, "I would like to address some recent attempts to reinvent history by repeating the convenient myth that I, as chairman, blocked President Clinton's judicial nominees on the basis of political ideology."

Hatch cited the overall rate of confirmations under his watch. During Clinton's two administrations, the Senate confirmed 377 judicial nominees, only five short of the all-time record of 382 confirmed under President Reagan.

Goldman urged the Democratic and Republican leadership to change the ground rules for nominations, guaranteeing every nominee a hearing and vote no matter who controls the Senate and White House.

But he predicted the process will only be changed if both sides accept fault for the current situation.

"Everyone plays the blame game," he said. "You can trace it back to the 1980s. But there's no question that in the 1990s the Republicans ratcheted up the stakes here. ... The Democrats very understandably don't want to do this unilaterally because that's not going to solve the problem."

The situation has reached a crisis point, according to Dick Carelli, spokesman for the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

REV_00141125

"Vacancies now are at a level that is problematic for the federal courts," he said. "So is the lack of new judgeships. The Congress and the executive have not provided for a new judgeship bill since 1990. The caseload of the federal judiciary has mushroomed since 1990."

In the end, the controversy over the judicial nomination process comes down to specific seats that are left open for long periods of time because of controversial nominees.

"It's gotten to the point where we're jeopardized the ability of the judicial branch of government to do its job," Goldman said. "The process of obstruction and delay should end."

Mixed Signals in Senate Battle Over Appeals Court Nominee

Neil A. Lewis
The New York Times
February 28, 2002, Thursday

For a time, it appeared today that Senator Trent Lott, the Republican leader, was sending a classic Washington public hint to a friend.

Mr. Lott told reporters that Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. would have to decide on his own whether to continue his efforts to be confirmed to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, based in New Orleans. "I'm not advocating this, but he's got to decide whether he wants to go forward with a vote if the votes aren't there, whether he wants to terminate the process," said Mr. Lott, a Mississippi Republican.

The Senate Judiciary Committee postponed a vote scheduled for Thursday on the Pickering nomination at Mr. Lott's request as it appeared increasingly likely that the committee's Democrats, who hold a 10-to-9 majority, would band together and reject the nomination.

But this evening, Judge Pickering's son, Representative Charles W. Pickering Jr., said Senator Lott had assured him that he did not intend to nudge his father to withdraw. Aides to Mr. Lott said the same thing.

"My father has no intent of withdrawing," said Representative Pickering, Republican of Mississippi, "and we believe it's still a winnable fight and the right fight to have."

The Pickering nomination has turned into the Bush administration's first major judicial confirmation battle. Liberal groups have portrayed Judge Pickering, who has been a federal trial judge in Mississippi for 11 years, as hostile to civil rights plaintiffs. His supporters say that this is unfair and that Judge Pickering is a leading figure in racial reconciliation efforts.

REV_00141126

Judge Pickering's son signaled a possible strategy for getting his father confirmed when he said his father deserved a vote on the full Senate floor. That means that even if the Judiciary Committee votes against the nomination, Judge Pickering's supporters would seek to have the nomination reported to the full Senate. The Democrats hold a one-vote majority there, but the Pickering forces would try to win one or more Democrats to their cause.

Bush Makes Plea for Pickering Vote

Mark Preston
Roll Call
February 28, 2002

With tempers flaring in the Senate over the controversial circuit court nomination of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering, President Bush made a personal plea yesterday to Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.) to confirm the Mississippian.

The President's request for Pickering's quick confirmation came in the context of a larger conversation on the pace of judicial nominations in the Senate during a semiregular breakfast meeting with Congressional leaders at the White House.

"The President raised the subject and I expressed my concerns to Daschle, and the President joined in," said Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.), who noted this is the first time Bush has weighed in on the Pickering nomination "on a personal basis."

"In the case of Charles Pickering, I expressed my disappointment and my hurt," Lott said of remarks he made to Daschle during the meeting. "This really has become an attack on my state, and it is a very unfair characterization of the judge."

But Daschle disputed Lott's claim that the President made a personal plea to confirm Pickering, who has been a lightning rod for controversy since he was nominated for the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in September 2001.

"Senator Lott's and my recollection of the conversation is different," Daschle said. "The President didn't ask for a floor vote, he asked what the prospects were, and I said I didn't know.

"There wasn't any request of me to take it to the floor. He made his general views known about the need to move ahead on judges, and expressed the hope that we could confirm as many as possible."

A White House source supported Lott's account of what was discussed in the meeting.

"The President is very concerned about the way Charles Pickering is being treated," the source said. "He is a good man. He is worthy of confirmation and the President believes he should be confirmed."

REV_00141127

For now, Pickering's confirmation hearings have been put on hold at Lott's request, providing the Minority Leader with at least one more week to devise a strategy to move his friend's nomination to the floor. But Lott acknowledged that Pickering and Bush must mull their options, including the possibility of having the Mississippian voluntarily step aside to avoid defeat.

"I am not advocating this, but he has got to decide whether he wants to go forward with a vote if the votes aren't there," said Lott, who added that Bush must also assess "whether he wants to terminate the process or go to other people.

"You deal with the issues as they come to a head. Right now we are still hoping for and expecting a vote to report him out."

Even though the Senate confirmed two judges Tuesday, the Pickering battle has highlighted the deep ideological divide between Republicans and Democrats over judicial nominees. But a resolution on the Pickering nomination is unlikely to cool tempers in the chamber. In fact, earlier this week, Democrats and Republicans locked horns over another nomination, that of U.S. District Court Judge D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals.

While Lott said there is some progress being made on district court judges, he charged that the Democrat-controlled Judiciary Committee is purposely dragging its feet on circuit court nominees.

"They are trying their best to delay and not act on those circuit judges," Lott said. "In fact, a lot of those circuit judges were nominated last May and they have not even had a hearing."

A spokesman for Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) defended the pace, suggesting it had been going much quicker since a Democrat assumed the gavel last summer.

"Under Democratic leadership ... the Judiciary Committee has returned to regular hearings and has a solid record of bringing nominations to the Senate for confirmation," said David Carle, Leahy's spokesman.

So far the Senate has approved seven circuit court and 32 district court judges. There are currently 22 circuit court and 28 district court nominations pending in the Judiciary Committee.

As for his conversation with Bush about Pickering, Daschle said that they discussed the "history of the debate on judges over the years.

"But what I said was that that's a matter for the Judiciary Committee. If the Judiciary Committee doesn't vote the nomination, with or without recommendation, to the floor, then I would be hard-pressed to do anything on the floor. I respect the Judiciary Committee's decisions, and we have to accept those."

REV_00141128

While Daschle said he would not push for Pickering to get a hearing if the nominee is voted down in committee, the Majority Leader did reiterate his pledge to allow a vote by the full Senate on any Supreme Court nominee regardless of the Judiciary panel's recommendation.

"I'm reluctant to do that, but I think that matters of that [importance] oftentimes require that the full Senate have an opportunity to be heard," Daschle said. "But I can't extend that to all the nominees from the Judiciary Committee or you wouldn't have to have a Judiciary Committee; you'd just come to the floor with everything.

"And, of course, that's not a luxury that the Republicans afforded us when they were in the majority. But that's not the reason. The reason is it's just important for us to respect the jurisdiction and the responsibilities of the Judiciary Committee."

Judge Pickering's Record on the Right to Choose

The Washington Post
February 26, 2002, Tuesday

Opposition to the nomination of Charles Pickering for the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals stems from his hostility to a woman's right to choose, a record he has never repudiated. Mr. Pickering helped lead the Republican Party to its antiabortion stance at the 1976 convention and has twice sought constitutional amendments to ban abortion.

The states of the 5th Circuit -- Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas -- are among the most active in restricting a woman's right to choose; indeed, Louisiana sought in 1991 to reenact a criminal ban on abortion. Today, these states are enacting laws that attempt to regulate clinics out of existence and encourage ruinous lawsuits against them. Mr. Pickering says he is bound to follow precedent, but nothing in his record or his judicial philosophy suggests that he would see these infringements as unconstitutional. Judges who hold Mr. Pickering's views pose a double threat to equality, for the laws being enacted in the 5th Circuit fall particularly heavily on poor women and women of color. The Senate Judiciary Committee should not countenance such views by confirming Charles Pickering.

His Words Convict Him

Los Angeles Times
February 27, 2002 Wednesday

In two days of testimony earlier this month, Judge Charles Pickering made clearer than ever why the Senate Judiciary Committee should block his elevation to the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals. One question remains. After poring over Pickering's record and grilling him during the hearing, will the senators who pronounced themselves "troubled" match their rhetoric with the "no" votes this nomination deserves? Responding to sometimes testy questions from committee members, Pickering tried but failed to justify two glaring ethical lapses: Why, as a judge, did he have a forbidden conversation with prosecutors in 1994 to get a reduced sentence for a convicted cross burner, and why, in recent months, did he lean on lawyers who have appeared before him to write letters supporting his nomination?

Senators also took Pickering back over now-familiar ground: his court decisions that reveal his predisposition to disbelieve claims of racial discrimination, sexual harassment and voting rights violations, and his outspoken and unrelenting opposition as a Mississippi state senator to abortion, except to save the pregnant woman's life.

Pickering's answers didn't help his case, and since the hearing some Democratic committee members have announced their intention to vote against his nomination, probably next month. Democrats hold a 10-9 majority on the committee. But as opposition to Pickering mounts, so does the ire of Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, who has vowed that his friend and fellow Mississippian will be confirmed "or else."

Lott insists that this confirmation fight is about churlish Democrats who, by imposing litmus tests on judicial nominees, seek to deny a Republican president his prerogative to make appointments. It's not. It's about a nominee whose past actions and judicial record amply show him to be at odds with the principles of fairness, independence and equal opportunity that guide our courts and our nation.

If Democrats sink Pickering's nomination in committee, Lott is reportedly considering asking the full Senate for a "motion to discharge" the nomination from the Judiciary Committee, clearing the way for a vote on the floor that he is likely to win. The use of such a motion would be unprecedented in a judicial nomination fight, not to mention a baldfaced affront to the integrity of the Senate's committee structure.

If Republicans mean what they say about wanting to avoid a polarizing contest, President Bush should withdraw Pickering's nomination. If Lott's pigheadedness pushes the matter to a final battle on the floor, responsible senators must vote no.

It shouldn't come to that. The Constitution's drafters meant the Senate to be a check on the president, and the confirmation process a way to ensure that federal judgeship nominations are more than just payback for political favors. That means when a nominee isn't up to the job--and Pickering isn't--senators on the Judiciary Committee must reject him or her no matter the arm-twisting, no matter the menacing threats of retribution.

Substandard; Pickering's performance on the bench shows why he shouldn't be ratified for federal judge.

Newsday (New York, NY)
February 27, 2002 Wednesday

When Bill Clinton was in the White House, Senate Republicans often let his judicial nominations die without so much as a hearing. Yet lately, Republicans have had the gall to complain about the Senate's allegedly slow pace in dealing with President George W. Bush's choices for federal judgeships.

Not yesterday, though. Yesterday, Republican Minority Leader Trent Lott actually asked the Senate to postpone a decision on promoting a fellow Mississippian from a trial court to the appellate level, to give the nominee more time to answer a long list of questions. And no wonder. The nomination of U.S. District Court Judge Charles Pickering Sr. to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals is in serious trouble, as it deserves to be. His record on the bench has been undistinguished at best. In one cross-burning case involving guilty pleas by two out of three defendants, he lobbied the Justice Department vigorously to reduce the mandatory sentence of the third, who had been convicted on three charges. As a state legislator, he was more supportive of civil rights than many, but even there the evaluations are mixed; while many hometown blacks approve of his nomination, the state NAACP does not. To call his record "exemplary," as a Lott spokesman did yesterday, is to ignore too many inconvenient facts.

The Senate Judiciary Committee's obligation is to give Bush's judicial nominees due consideration and come to a decision on each. It is not to rubber-stamp them. A cabinet or White House appointee departs with the president, but a federal judge, once appointed, serves at his own pleasure or his maker's.

That said, a committee with a fragile 10-9 Democratic majority shouldn't try to block every judge nominated by a Republican president. It should embrace nominees who are clearly in the wide mainstream of American jurisprudence and have demonstrated the skills and temperament appropriate to the job. Judge Pickering's substandard performance on the bench offers scant cause for promotion.

Yet a White House spokesman said yesterday that Bush "believes in Judge Pickering and will fight for Judge Pickering." If so, it's a fight the president deserves to lose.

Who Is Charles Pickering?

Blackelectorate.com
Monday, February 25, 2002

Stacey Barney

This week the nomination of U.S. District Court Judge Charles Pickering, Sr. to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals will be brought before the Senate Judiciary Committee for a deciding vote, and it is unlikely that the Pickering nomination will be confirmed. But the question as to why Pickering would not be the correct fit for the 5th circuit has become something of a media - flamed political spectacle, which should give any observer pause to wonder what is this really all about?

The NAACP would have us believe the blocking of the Pickering nomination is an honorable effort to maintain the integrity of civil rights legislation, while other groups such as the Alliance for Justice, People for the American Way, and the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League (NARAL) point with worry lines etched across their brows to Pickering's "consistently conservative record on employment, discrimination, voting rights, abortion, and criminal law (Jonathan Groner of Legal Times, 2002)."

However, Republicans who support Pickering tell a different story. Plainly they call the scrutiny of Charles Pickering and his judicial record character assassination. In fact, Sen. Mitch McConnell (R-Kent) says this about the judge: "The record of Charles Pickering can be expressed in two words: moral courage. When victims of racial injustice looked for justice, they found it in one man, Jones County Attorney Charles Pickering." Yet, still others daresay the grumblings blocking Pickering's judicial promotion is nothing more than a round of political payback for democrats who remember "three Clinton appointees who were denied [even] the courtesy of a hearing, much less a vote, when Republicans controlled the Senate (Philip Terzian of Pittsburgh Post Gazette, 2002)."

So who is to be believed? Is the Pickering nomination in fact the good fight to be fought and won in the name of civil rights or is it simply new political battleground ripe for partisan posturing? Well, the first question to ask really is who is Charles Pickering, anyway? Is he the champion of minority civil rights who braved the danger of testifying against Ku Klux Klan members during the height of racially motivated slayings or is he the segregationist throwback, a bigot who has written in support of criminalizing interracial marriages? It's really hard to say, since his record tells us that Pickering is both these men.

To my mind this fact in and of itself necessitates if not demands the careful character scrutiny that Judge Pickering has been subjected to since his first Senate hearing on October 18th - the same scrutiny that some on Capitol Hill are calling regrettable character assassination.

In these hearings we have discovered that yes, Pickering has testified against Klan members. And yes, as Johnny Magee, an African American Laurel business man and member of city council defends, Pickering has even helped Laurel, Mississippi "civic leaders...develop after-school programs to keep Black males from coming into his court on criminal charges." But as Eugene Bryant, President of the NAACP Mississippi State Conference points out, Pickering (when a senator) has "also voted to support the Sovereignty Commission, a state - funded agency established to thwart desegregation efforts resulting from the landmark Brown v. Board of Education." Additionally, Pickering, according to Bryant, has also blocked "the implementation of the 1965 Voting Rights Act, keeping the Mississippi Legislative all white until" 1980. Furthermore, Bryant censures Pickering for referring to "the fundamental 'one-person, one-vote' principle as obtrusive" and "[criticizing] the creation of majority-black districts as 'affirmative segregation.'" While all this and more seems to be true of Charles Pickering, the final nail in his coffin was, ironically, a burning cross.

In 1994 Mickey Herbert Thomas (25), Daniel Swan (20), and a 17-year-old who was charged as a juvenile were suspected of burning a cross on the lawn of a Black homeowner in Pickering's jurisdiction. Thomas and the juvenile offender both reached plea agreements with sentences of supervised release without prison time. Swan, however, went to trial and was convicted. He faced 7 ½ years before Judge Pickering complained to the Department of Justice. Although, the Department of Justice declined to assist Pickering, prosecutors in the case did end up dropping one charge against Swan, and Pickering subsequently sentenced the young man to 27 months instead of the 7 and a half years initially sought by state prosecutors. Pickering defends his actions by pointing out what he believes was a disparity in sentencing among the three assailants. It was the juvenile defendant, Pickering claims, who was in fact the ringleader, and it disturbed Pickering that this defendant did not receive one day in jail. While I agree that the point regarding sentencing disparity is a good one - all should have received prison sentences, I am less sure that this disparity justifies Pickering granting a more lenient punishment to Daniel Swan, a not only culpable defendant (though perhaps arguable in degree), but a convicted defendant. The criminal system rarely treats African American youth with the same consideration.

But perhaps most troubling in regards to Pickering's court decisions in discrimination and civil rights cases aside from the fact that "[Pickering] has often ruled against civil rights claims (Jonathan Groner of Legal Times, 2002)," are the opinions rendered in these cases. Pickering's opponents suggest that often these opinions reflect the judge's personal biases and characterize the language Pickering chooses as harsh and insensitive to plaintiffs.

In Foxworth, et al. v. Merchants Co., a case involving two Blacks who jointly owned a grocery store, and sought damages under the civil rights laws against a supplier who stopped extending credit, Pickering wrote: "When an adverse action is taken affecting one covered by [civil rights] laws, there is a tendency on the part of the person affected to spontaneously react that discrimination caused the action. All of us have difficulty accepting the fact that we sometimes create our own problems."

In Seeley v. City of Hattiesburg, a case involving a Black firefighter who was terminated, and also sought damages under the protection of civil rights laws, Pickering wrote: "The fact that a Black employee is terminated does not automatically indicate discrimination...This case has all the hallmarks of a case that is filed simply because an adverse employment decision was made in regard to a protected minority."

Elliot Mincberg, legal director of People for the American Way raises an eyebrow at such statements, and their presence in court opinions saying, "When [Pickering] writes that this case is an unwanted effect of the anti-discrimination laws, this reflects a hostile attitude and sends a message to future plaintiffs. That's very troubling to us."

With all this before us, it makes sense then that the NAACP, along with the Magnolia Bar Association (a predominately Black Mississippi bar group), and a host of other groups looking to protect the rights guaranteed by the constitution, would dare to question and block the nomination of this man, Charles Pickering. His record is one that tells two tales, and while the nuggets regarding Ku Klux Klan testimony and an after-school program for African American youth sound nice, there are too many other aspects of his record that are just plain doubtful and troubling. In looking at Pickering's record it is all the more important to remember that racism did no die with Malcolm X or Martin Luther King Jr. In fact, racism is far more potent as it has become almost a seamless part of American society, especially within the context of our nation's governing bodies.

No, racism did not die. It simply became institutionalized. And it is this institutional racism that keeps Black youth in the penal system without rehabilitation efforts that address the phenomena of miseducation and poverty, which first put our youth in jails and on death row. If confirmed would Charles Pickering be an agent to combat this reality of institutional racism or would he enable it? I'm not so sure. His record doesn't tell me he would be a combatant against racism. His record just makes me nervous.

The second significant question to be asked concerning the Pickering nomination is in regards to the real importance of the 5th Circuit seat, a seat with authority in Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas - densely populated Black territory. If Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif) is to be believed, "...this 5th Circuit seat is as important as a Supreme Court seat...The 5th Circuit once served as a trailblazer for the protection of individual rights - voting rights, employment discrimination. So this becomes a pivotal position for people who have fought for these rights for decades." Pickering's record certainly does not strike me as that of a civil rights trailblazer. At best, perhaps he is a racial progressive, but yet not a fit for this "pivotal" 5th Circuit seat.

So, in the end, who is Charles Pickering? A segregationist racist or a man of moral courage who is an unfortunate political scapegoat? If these fundamental questions can't be answered with any sense of surety, then Pickering does not belong on the 5th Circuit bench.

Pickering's Fault is Temperament, Not Race

Thomas Oliphant
The Boston Globe
February 26, 2002, Tuesday

WASHINGTON - THE FIRST SERIOUS FEDERAL JUDGE FIGHT OF GEORGE W. BUSH'S PRESIDENCY IS TAKING A WELCOME TURN TOWARD THE UNUSUAL.
The nomination of US District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi to the US Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in New Orleans (a simple piece of Trent Lott patronage) started out as a typical left-right tussle - a battle over characterization more than character, in this case unfairly involving race.

But as the Pickering nomination moves toward a vote in the Senate Judiciary Committee, it looks as though his fate will be determined by a standard capable of being applied to nominees regardless of ideology - temperament.

The nomination is in serious trouble. But not because Pickering is a conservative political and social issue activist. It's in trouble because a voluminous paper trail shows that Pickering took his political activism into the judiciary in a manner that is incompatible with his current job and dangerous in a potential appellate judge a rung below the Supreme Court. Almost from the moment Senate Republican leader Lott engineered Pickering's nomination, interest groups on the left mobilized against it, focusing initially on race.

It was poorly thought through and unjust in its imputation of racism. Fortunately, an initial portrait of a garden-variety segregationist 40 years ago turned into a more nuanced picture of a man who not only changed but opposed racists and eventually became part of Mississippi's reconciliation process.

The same guy, however, was an early figure in post-segregation conservative activism and has spent the last dozen years on the bench venting at the laws and doctrines he gets paid to apply.

And he would bring not only a well-known opposition to abortion rights but a record of intense activity on behalf of ending those rights. Pickering was a visible figure in Mississippi's pivotal delegation to the 1976 convention that chose Gerald Ford over Ronald Reagan. As a platform subcommittee chairman at Kansas City, then state senator, Pickering was a leader of efforts to overturn Roe v. Wade by constitutional amendment and block support of the Equal Rights Amendment. He also was president of the Mississippi Baptist Convention when it opposed abortion rights even in cases of rape and incest.

REV_00141135

Pickering's confirmation hearing pledge to be impartial might have credibility if he didn't violate it continually as a district judge, well known locally for his compulsive commentary on law and precedent outside the boundaries of the cases before him. He's done it on voting rights cases, privacy issues, employment discrimination matters, habeas corpus petitions, and a criminal case involving a cross-burning incident.

In documents made public as Pickering went before the Judiciary Committee a second time this month, it was revealed that he had leaned on both the prosecutors and the Justice Department to seek a lesser sentence for one of three men who burned a cross on the lawn of a mixed-race couple and then fired shots into their home, where a baby was asleep.

Upset at sentencing guidelines calling for seven years in jail, he leaned on the prosecutors in an out-of-court meeting to recommend a shorter sentence, then contacted their superiors. In the end, the offender got 27 months.

Every confirmation hearing has its "moment," and Pickering's came when Democratic Senator John Edwards of North Carolina led him through the command of judicial ethics that contact with one side in a case is a no-no. The judge was visibly stunned, and his claim not to remember threatening to order a new trial has no credibility.

Lott has no cause to bellyache about Pickering's treatment. His two hearings and an imminent vote stand in contrast to the treatment of President Clinton's nominees to the all-white Fifth Circuit (both Hispanics in an area that is almost half poor and nonwhite); each suffered death by delay and GOP inaction.

Nor should cries of victimization from the Republicans or Mississippi partisans be heeded, even on race. It was Pickering, after all, who got caught in a 1978 US Senate primary spreading the slander in the black community that his opponent, Thad Cochran, had been on the racist White Citizens Council. Cochran, Lott's senior colleague and a man of impeccable conservatism as well as integrity, trounced Pickering.

This is simply a bad nomination and will only be supported by moderate Republicans out of enforced loyalty to Lott, not by dedication to high standards for the federal appellate judiciary.

Wall Street Journal

"A fascinating thing has happened on the way to the Senate 'borking' of appellate court nominee Charles Pickering Sr. Taking orders from their interest groups, Beltway Democrats have tried to portray the Mississippian as a modern Lester Maddox. But the African-Americans back in the judge's hometown of Laurel have responded that nothing could be further from the truth. So whom to believe? The people who know Judge Pickering personally and have watched him in court and local politics for years? Or the national liberal lobbies that have a history of turning judicial hearings into political bloodsport?"

Keep Pickering Off Appeals Court

Nora Cusack, Madison
Capital Times (Madison, WI)
February 26, 2002 Tuesday

Dear Editor: The process of confirming President Bush's judicial nominees should not be rushed. Their records need to be carefully examined. Judge Charles Pickering Sr., Bush's nominee to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, has a proven record of opposing civil and reproductive rights. The 5th Circuit is one of the most critical courts in the United States for women's reproductive rights.

As a conservative political activist, Pickering has demonstrated open hostility to a woman's right to choose. Twice he has sought constitutional amendments to ban abortion. This alone should disqualify him from sitting on the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Federal judges serve for life. Both of our senators serve on the Senate Judiciary Committee, which will determine whether Pickering's nomination comes to a vote.

All committee members need to carefully consider Pickering's positions on basic constitutional freedoms, civil rights and reproductive rights.

I ask Sen. Herb Kohl and Sen. Russ Feingold to vote against Pickering's confirmation. All who support reproductive rights need to contact both our senators and urge them to vote against Pickering.

Judge's Views Make Him Unfit

Renae Sieling, Oregon
Capital Times (Madison, WI)
February 26, 2002 Tuesday

Dear Editor: In the past weeks, we have heard quite a bit about the need to speed the judicial nomination process. Missing from this discussion, however, is the fact that many of the Bush administration's judicial nominees hold radical views not shared by the American public. Judge Charles Pickering, judicial candidate for the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, is just such a nominee. A fervent opponent of a woman's right to choose, he has voted to ban abortion, stop public funding of family planning clinics and against the Equal Rights Amendment. An adversary of civil rights, Pickering has criticized principles protecting civil rights, sought to limit their application and denigrated those who seek to invoke civil rights laws.

Judges with beliefs so out of line with the American public do not belong in a federal appellate court. With both of our senators sitting on the Senate Judiciary Committee, we in Wisconsin are in a unique position to use our voices to keep Pickering off the bench. Please contact Sens. Russ Feingold and Herb Kohl today and ask them to oppose the appointment of Charles Pickering.

Questions for Judge Smith

The Washington Post
February 26, 2002, Tuesday

THE SENATE Judiciary Committee today takes up the nomination of D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals. Judge Smith, who currently serves on a federal district court in Pennsylvania, has not sparked the same hot controversy as President Bush's nominee to the 5th Circuit, Charles Pickering. But senators ought not let his nomination slip through without probing carefully certain aspects of Judge Smith's record. They might start with his opinion in United States v. Pennsylvania -- a case in which the federal government sued the state over allegedly substandard conditions in a home for the mentally retarded. Though care was, in Judge Smith's words, "frequently not optimal" -- maggots were found in one resident's ear, ants on others' bodies -- the judge found these to be "isolated incidents" redressed by the facility, and he concluded that there was no constitutional problem. Judge Smith's decisions have often been reversed by the court to which he has been nominated. In one case, for example, the 3rd Circuit wrote that he had "ignored both the letter and spirit of our mandate."

Senators should also ask him about a speech he gave in 1993 on federalism. During the Clinton administration, conservatives blasted appeals court nominee Richard Paez for a speech that, in passing, criticized a nascent ballot initiative in California repealing affirmative action. If intrusion into the political process is the issue, Judge Smith's remarks make those of Judge Paez seem tame. The Smith speech was an argument against the constitutionality of the Violence Against Women Act, then pending in Congress. Portions of that law did have problems and were later struck down by the Supreme Court. But Judge Smith's speech is particularly disturbing for the remarkably constricted vision of federal power that he embraces. The power to regulate commerce -- a pillar of much federal civil rights law -- was intended by the Founders only "to permit the national government to eliminate trade barriers," he said. Judge Smith went on to lay out his own "brief principles for determining the scope of federal jurisdiction. First, ask whether the subject matter at issue is within the power of the national government by express delegation in the text of the Constitution, or impliedly through a historically honest reading of the necessary and proper clause. If not, stop!" Senators should ask him how such an understanding can be squared -- if it can -- with modern civil rights and environmental statutes.

Finally, Judge Smith should be given an opportunity to clear the air about his decision to preside over a case involving a bank at which his wife was an officer and in whose parent company the two owned large amounts of stock. While the bank was not a party to the litigation, its financial interest in the case seems -- at least in retrospect -- obvious. Judge Smith, however, did not initially recuse himself, and some of his rulings before he finally did so seemed to be in the bank's interests.

Judge Smith and Pickering on their work; Choice of president's nominees should not be a political decision

Thomas L. Jipping
The Washington Times
February 26, 2002, Tuesday

A truly rare event occurs today in the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee - a hearing on one of President Bush's appeals court nominees. Only three of even the first 11 nominees named last May have been so blessed.

On the other hand, a now-familiar pattern of abuse is emerging as the far left tries to smear another honorable man and distinguished nominee. This time it's D. Brooks Smith, chief U.S. district judge for the Western District of Pennsylvania and nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. Judge Smith has experience in private practice, as a prosecutor, an elected state court judge (receiving both Democratic and Republican nominations), and 14 years as a federal judge. He has served on criminal-procedure rules committees for both the state and federal judiciaries and on the board of directors of the Federal Judges Association. He is a former board member of the Salvation Army and the county Legal Services Corp., Domestic Abuse Project and Society for Crippled Children and Adults. The liberal American Bar Association gave him its highest rating for appointment to the appeals court.

All of this, and the fact that the Constitution lets presidents appoint judges, is apparently not enough. The far left believes judges exist to impose a political agenda, to deliver the political goods. In their world, judges base decisions on political interests rather than the law; they are just supposed to rule the right (or, rather, the left) way in the end. That's why a nominee's personal opinions, values, beliefs and ideology are so important and why they believe only liberals are qualified to be federal judges.

Their attacks on Bush nominees aim to keep individuals not liberal enough off the bench today and to dissuade the president from nominating someone not liberal enough to the Supreme Court in the future. The truth alone, however, won't accomplish the goal. Hence the smear.

The liberal Washington Post's Sept. 17 editorial about appeals court nominee Charles Pickering (the Judiciary Committee votes on him Thursday) correctly described the elements of the smear campaign. It's an "ugly affair" in which the nominee's attackers focus "not on his qualifications, temperament, approach to judging or on the quality of his judicial work." Instead, they try to "paint him" a particular way they believe will make ordinary people recoil and senators vote no.

"To do so," The Post said, "they have plucked a number of unconnected incidents from a long career. None of these incidents, when examined closely, amounts to much, but opponents string them together, gloss over their complexities and self-righteously present a caricature of an unworthy candidate." It's actually worse than that. When examined closely, it's obvious the far left actually distorts and even makes up those unconnected and irrelevant incidents that form the fake caricature.

They accuse Judge Smith, for example, of failing to recuse himself soon enough in a 1997 lawsuit against an investment adviser who had defrauded school districts and municipalities. Some of the funds had been deposited in a bank employing Judge Smith's wife and in whose parent company the Smiths owned stock. Judge Smith did recuse himself a few weeks into the case. He did so on his own; neither party in the case asked him to. Nor was he required to because the bank was not a party in the case and his wife worked in an unrelated department. Yet Judge Smith's attackers know most normal folks don't know the vagaries and standards of judicial recusal decisions and won't be able to evaluate their false claims.

Judge Smith issued an order that half of the defendant's funds which had been frozen be distributed to the defrauded clients. His attackers' spin is that he maintained the freeze on the other half of the funds. Beyond being just a silly half-empty-or-half-full spin game, they never say that releasing the funds was not Judge Smith's idea at all. He approved the joint recommendation of the Securities and Exchange Commission and Richard Thornburgh, former Pennsylvania governor and U.S. attorney general, who had been appointed trustee and alone controlled the funds.

You'd think that, if anyone, the plaintiff would be most sensitive about Judge Smith's brief involvement in this case. Yet the plaintiffs' lawyer wrote in the Feb. 22 Pittsburgh Post-Gazette that "we are not aware of any impropriety, or even appearance of impropriety, on the part of Judge Smith."

This pattern is clear and disturbing. Some Washington-based group makes a distorted and misleading charge, and those in Western Pennsylvania who know the truth have to set the record straight. Writing in the Feb. 17 Post-Gazette, two Democratic members of the Western Pennsylvania bar wrote that other deceptive claims by Judge Smith's attackers "are misinformed at best" and part of a "dangerous political strategy." Writing in the Feb. 14 issue, the Women's Bar Association of Western Pennsylvania endorsed Judge Smith "without reservation" in response to a feminist group's false claim.

The Washington Post's observation about the Pickering nomination applies across the board: "The need on the part of liberal groups and Democratic senators to portray him as a Neanderthal - all the while denying they are doing so - in order to justify voting him down is the latest example of the degradation of the confirmation process." Today's hearing on Judge Smith and Thursday's vote on Judge Pickering are the chance to change course before it's too late.

EXCERPT

A solid reputation We have been dismayed to read of the efforts of certain Washington-based lobbying groups that have mounted a campaign, largely on ideological grounds, against President Bush's recent nomination of U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith for a position on the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ("Appeals Court Nominee Targeted," Feb. 9). Rules of judicial ethics make it very difficult for Judge Smith to defend himself against such charges.

As registered Democrats, and as trial lawyers who have practiced before and have known Judge Smith for a number of years, we believe that these groups with political agendas are completely out of line. Throughout his career, Judge Smith has demonstrated that he is an honest and hard-working jurist who does not have a political agenda and is completely without bias. His reputation among lawyers in this community is superb. He is regarded as bright, compassionate, careful, fair, objective, knowledgeable about the law, decisive, thorough, independent and unfailingly courteous to counsel and parties who appear before him.

Judge Smith embodies everything that a federal judge should be; he would be an outstanding member of the court of appeals.

Judge Smith Should Have Recognized This Conflict of Interest

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
February 26, 2002 Tuesday

Richard A. Finberg's defense of a ruling by U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith in SEC vs. Black that advanced Mr. Finberg's clients' interests at the expense of other Pennsylvania school districts misses the point ("Judge Smith's Rulings in No Way Hint at Favoritism Toward Bank in Black Case," Feb. 22 letters).

In addition to the Oct. 27, 1997, partial distribution of assets discussed by Mr. Finberg, Judge Smith, on Oct. 30, denied motions by Penn Manor and other districts that were wise enough to stop John Gardner Black from depositing their money at Mid-State Bank. These districts demanded all their money back; Judge Smith gave them half, and only if they waived their right to challenge the freeze on the remaining money.

U.S. District Judge Donetta Ambrose, who took over the case in November 1997, ruled in May 1998 that the court had to release this non-Mid-State money. Denying an appeal brought by Mr.

REV_00141141

Finberg and others, the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals agreed, calling the continued freeze on these assets "improper."

Judge Smith's denial of Penn Manor's motion advanced the interests of Mr. Finberg's clients, who lost their money at Mid-State and who were seeking to have non-Mid-State districts share their $70 million in losses. Mr. Finberg advocated that all districts share the losses "pro-rata," a ruling that would have reduced the Mid-State districts' losses to about $34 million. This, in turn, would have significantly reduced the bank's exposure to losses in suits brought by its clients, claims the bank ultimately settled for $51 million.

No one has alleged that Judge Smith intentionally ruled the way he did to protect his wife's job or his stock interest in the bank. He may never even have recognized that his order accrued to Mid-State's benefit.

But the fact remains that, long after Judge Smith should have recognized that Mid-State Bank was involved in the fraud at issue in SEC vs. Black, he ruled on a contested motion in a way that advanced the bank's interests. This exacerbates the already serious legal and ethical issues that stem from Judge Smith's decision to issue orders in two cases involving the fraud perpetuated at the bank.

A Model of Fairness

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

I recently received the commentary written by Ken Gormley and Frederick W. Thieman regarding the appointment of Judge D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ("A Case Without Merit," Feb. 17 Forum).

I am a lawyer practicing in Blair County, where I have maintained a practice since 1975. During the late 1970s, Judge Smith and I served together in the Blair County district attorney's office.

Shortly after, he was appointed to head that office and later was appointed to the bench to fill a vacancy. When he ran for the office, I was his opponent. During this time, I came to know his abilities, legal and ethical.

Judge Smith has always been regarded by the Blair County bar as a judge with superior legal knowledge and fairness. Even during the time we were campaigning against each other, I continued to practice before him, never concerned that our opposition in the political arena would ever, in any way, influence his decision in any case brought before him.

He continues to be a credit to his community, and we take great pride in his accomplishments. His appointment to the 3rd Circuit would only enhance the quality of the federal judiciary, and I applaud the sentiments of Mr. Gormley and Mr. Thieman.

I would just like to expand their statement that "Judge Smith will be a credit to all lawyers, judges and citizens of Western Pennsylvania" to include some very proud lawyers, judges and citizens of Blair County.

Judging Judge Smith; He Owes the Senate An Apology of Black Cases

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
February 26, 2002 Tuesday

Today the Judiciary Committee of the U.S. Senate is scheduled to hold a hearing on President Bush's nomination of D. Brooks Smith, the chief judge of the U.S. District Court here, to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

A few weeks ago it looked as if the hearing would be a mere formality, despite some overheated objections from liberal interest groups to the confirmation of Judge Smith, who has broad support in the local legal community.

That all changed when one of those interest groups publicized the fact that Judge Smith was bafflingly slow to remove himself from two cases in which a bank that employed his wife -- and in which the couple owned at least $100,000 worth of stock -- was a major player.

*

The two cases, one a civil case brought by the Securities and Exchange Commission, the other a criminal trial, grew out of a fraud perpetrated on dozens of Pennsylvania school districts by John Gardner Black, a financial adviser now in a federal penitentiary. According to federal regulators, Black misled his clients and invested their funds in chancy securities. Much of the money entrusted to Black by several school districts was deposited at the Mid-State Bank, a prominent financial institution in Altoona, Judge Smith's hometown. In September 1997, after performing an audit, the SEC began proceedings to suspend Black's securities license and to have a court take control of the assets of his clients. The complaint mentioned that Black used several accounts at Mid-State.

REV_00141143

Here is where the problem arises. Not only was Judge Smith's wife, Karen, a Mid-State officer, but also Judge Smith owned a significant amount of stock in the bank's holding company. Nevertheless, the judge did not immediately remove himself from the SEC case.

The Community Rights Counsel, a Washington-based public interest group that has criticized Judge Smith on other grounds, has constructed an elaborate explanation of how Judge Smith might have benefited financially from an order he issued maintaining a freeze on some school districts' assets not only in Mid-State but also in other banks. The group downplays the fact that the terms of Judge Smith's order were suggested by the SEC and former Gov. Dick Thornburgh, a trustee in the case.

But that's not the point. Under federal law, a judge must remove himself from a case in which he knows that he "has a financial interest in the subject matter in controversy or in a party to the proceeding or any other interest that could be substantially affected by the outcome of the proceeding." A separate provision in federal law requires that a judge recuse -- that is, remove -- himself whenever his "impartiality might be reasonably questioned."

Judge Smith did just that in these two cases, but belatedly. In the civil case brought by the SEC in 1997, the judge issued more than a dozen orders before stepping down in favor of a colleague, but without citing his own financial interest in Mid-State Bank (which he did include in standard financial disclosure forms). In the 1999 criminal case against John Gardner Black, the judge complied with a request by Black's attorney that he recuse himself, but in doing so he again did not specify his financial interest in Mid-State.

Obviously, the Senate Judiciary Committee must question Judge Smith about his slowness to recuse himself. It may be that the judge was simply obtuse about appearances, or, convinced in his own mind that he would be impartial, he hesitated to turn work over to colleagues on an understaffed bench. Such explanations don't alter the fact that his slowness to pull out of these matters violates the spirit if not the letter of federal law. We hope Judge Smith acknowledges as much in his testimony before the Judiciary Committee.

That committee and the full Senate have the responsibility not only to scrutinize Judge Smith's conduct in these matters but also to weigh his qualifications as a whole. As Stephen Gillers, a professor of legal ethics at New York University, told the Post-Gazette: "The fact the judge has made a mistake of this kind is a fact the Senate should consider. But there are other factors that go on the scale."

*

Those other factors include the esteem in which Judge Smith is held by lawyers -- liberal and conservative, Republican and Democratic -- who have appeared before him. His legal philosophy is also a legitimate subject of inquiry, though the Judiciary Committee should be aware that lawyers in Pittsburgh dispute the depiction of Judge Smith as a onservative in the mold of Clarence Thomas or Antonin Scalia.

REV_00141144

While it may have been the suspicion that Judge Smith was an extremist that inspired the Community Rights Counsel and other critics to launch a fishing expedition into his record, the fact is that they landed a big one in his conduct in the John Gardner Black cases. A judge with significant financial interest in a bank -- a bank that employs his wife -- should not be sitting in a case in which that bank is even a peripheral actor.

Judge Smith needs to make it clear to the Senate that, in retrospect, he realizes he should have refused from the outset to touch these matters with a 10-foot pole.

Setting the Record Straight on Judge D. Brooks Smith

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
February 26, 2002 Tuesday

Today the Senate Judiciary Committee will consider President Bush's nomination of Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith for the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, headquartered in Philadelphia.

For 18 years, Judge Smith has served Pennsylvanians with distinction. Judge Smith boasts first-rate credentials in addition to his years of judicial experience, and the American Bar Association unanimously gave him its highest rating. Over 100 Democrats and Republicans alike have signed letters of support to the Senate Judiciary Committee. These letters from judges, public officials and leaders of civil liberties, labor, and women's organizations all praise Judge Smith's fairness and impartiality. The Post-Gazette has detailed the campaign against Judge Smith by the Community Rights Counsel and other extreme interest groups. Just as night follows day, it seems the usual suspects are lining up for another effort to "Bork" a distinguished judge. Specifically, critics argue that Judge Smith should have immediately recused himself from a 1997 municipal fraud case involving an investment adviser later convicted of defrauding several Pennsylvania school districts. Critics say recusal was necessary as Judge Smith's wife worked at Mid-State Bank, where some of the defendants' assets were deposited, and the Smiths held stock in Mid-State's parent company.

Please allow me to set the record straight. I served as the trustee for the defrauded schools and bore a fiduciary duty to safeguard their funds. And I can say with front-row, firsthand knowledge that Judge Smith acted with absolute integrity, independence and honor.

First, Mid-State Bank was not a party to the case, and nothing at the outset suggested Mid-State was complicit in any fraudulent scheme. It was therefore unlikely that Judge Smith's wife, who worked in an unrelated part of the bank, would become a material witness. Since the complaint did not allege any wrongdoing by the bank holding the defendants' funds, any stock the Smiths owned in its parent company was immaterial. As trustee, I had sole possession of and control over the assets, and Judge Smith's initial order distributing 50 percent of frozen funds to defrauded school districts just approved an interim plan proposed jointly by me and the Securities and Exchange Commission while the case proceeded.

When Judge Smith later received information that Mid-State could, in the future, conceivably play a role in the litigation, out of an excess of caution he immediately recused himself sua sponte, without being asked by either party. The actions that Judge
Smith took prior to his recusal in the civil case did nothing to limit Mid-State's eventual liability exposure or impact the victims' rights of recovery.

In fact, the attacks by interest groups ignore the fact that no funds were even deposited at Mid-State at the time Judge Smith granted his last orders. As trustee, I had transferred the assets to another bank several days before this order. Nothing that occurred between this order and Judge Smith's recusal days later benefited Mid-State. Judge Donetta Ambrose, who obtained the case after Judge Smith's recusal, agreed. She wrote to the Senate Judiciary Committee to say, "There was never any suggestion by me or the Court of Appeals that Judge Smith acted inappropriately or unethically. Rather, he acted prudently and cautiously. . . . The allegations of unethical conduct in the context of this case are without foundation."

Partisan critics also improperly fault Judge Smith for temporarily handling a later criminal case against the investment adviser. Nobody involved in the case has alleged that Judge Smith issued any improper orders or took any inappropriate action. The case was assigned to Judge Smith only after lawyers in the case agreed that it was unrelated to the SEC's civil case. Mid-State Bank was not a party. The U.S. attorney's office never sought recusal, and defense counsel did not seek recusal until four months later, when Judge Smith immediately recused himself.

As governor of Pennsylvania in 1984, I had the honor of originally nominating Brooks Smith to sit on the Court of Common Pleas in Blair County. In 1988, while attorney general of the United States, I had the honor of seeing the U.S. Senate unanimously confirm Brooks Smith as a federal judge. This year, I hope to see the same Senate set aside the recent attacks of extreme interest groups and honor Judge Smith's long record of judicial service with a swift and unanimous approval to the 3rd Circuit.

By any measure of judicial merit, Brooks Smith is qualified to serve. Like the president who nominated him, Brooks Smith has rallied a broad coalition of support. It would be wrong to allow extreme interest groups to delay his confirmation by even one day. However, I am optimistic that this will not occur. Judge Smith acquired his reputation for honesty, uprightness and professionalism the old-fashioned way -- he earned it. And it will see him through.

Dick Thornburgh, a former governor of Pennsylvania, served as U.S. attorney general under Presidents Ronald Reagan and George H.W. Bush.

Judge Smith and Pickering on their work; Choice of president's nominees should not be a political decision

Thomas L. Jipping
The Washington Times
February 26, 2002, Tuesday

A truly rare event occurs today in the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee - a hearing on one of President Bush's appeals court nominees. Only three of even the first 11 nominees named last May have been so blessed.

On the other hand, a now-familiar pattern of abuse is emerging as the far left tries to smear another honorable man and distinguished nominee. This time it's D. Brooks Smith, chief U.S. district judge for the Western District of Pennsylvania and nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. Judge Smith has experience in private practice, as a prosecutor, an elected state court judge (receiving both Democratic and Republican nominations), and 14 years as a federal judge. He has served on criminal-procedure rules committees for both the state and federal judiciaries and on the board of directors of the Federal Judges Association. He is a former board member of the Salvation Army and the county Legal Services Corp., Domestic Abuse Project and Society for Crippled Children and Adults. The liberal American Bar Association gave him its highest rating for appointment to the appeals court.

All of this, and the fact that the Constitution lets presidents appoint judges, is apparently not enough. The far left believes judges exist to impose a political agenda, to deliver the political goods. In their world, judges base decisions on political interests rather than the law; they are just supposed to rule the right (or, rather, the left) way in the end. That's why a nominee's personal opinions, values, beliefs and ideology are so important and why they believe only liberals are qualified to be federal judges.

Their attacks on Bush nominees aim to keep individuals not liberal enough off the bench today and to dissuade the president from nominating someone not liberal enough to the Supreme Court in the future. The truth alone, however, won't accomplish the goal. Hence the smear.

The liberal Washington Post's Sept. 17 editorial about appeals court nominee Charles Pickering (the Judiciary Committee votes on him Thursday) correctly described the elements of the smear campaign. It's an "ugly affair" in which the nominee's attackers focus "not on his qualifications, temperament, approach to judging or on the quality of his judicial work." Instead, they try to "paint him" a particular way they believe will make ordinary people recoil and senators vote no.

"To do so," The Post said, "they have plucked a number of unconnected incidents from a long career. None of these incidents, when examined closely, amounts to much, but opponents string them together, gloss over their complexities and self-righteously present a caricature of an unworthy candidate." It's actually worse than that. When examined closely, it's obvious the far left actually distorts and even makes up those unconnected and irrelevant incidents that form the fake caricature.

They accuse Judge Smith, for example, of failing to recuse himself soon enough in a 1997 lawsuit against an investment adviser who had defrauded school districts and municipalities. Some of the funds had been deposited in a bank employing Judge
Smith's wife and in whose parent company the Smiths owned stock. Judge Smith did recuse himself a few weeks into the case. He did so on his own; neither party in the case asked him to. Nor was he required to because the bank was not a party in the case and his wife worked in an unrelated department. Yet Judge Smith's attackers know most normal folks don't know the vagaries and standards of judicial recusal decisions and won't be able to evaluate their false claims.

Judge Smith issued an order that half of the defendant's funds which had been frozen be distributed to the defrauded clients. His attackers' spin is that he maintained the freeze on the other half of the funds. Beyond being just a silly half-empty-or-half-full spin game, they never say that releasing the funds was not Judge Smith's idea at all. He approved the joint recommendation of the Securities and Exchange Commission and Richard Thornburgh, former Pennsylvania governor and U.S. attorney general, who had been appointed trustee and alone controlled the funds.

You'd think that, if anyone, the plaintiff would be most sensitive about Judge Smith's brief involvement in this case. Yet the plaintiffs' lawyer wrote in the Feb. 22 Pittsburgh Post-Gazette that "we are not aware of any impropriety, or even appearance of impropriety, on the part of Judge Smith."

This pattern is clear and disturbing. Some Washington-based group makes a distorted and misleading charge, and those in Western Pennsylvania who know the truth have to set the record straight. Writing in the Feb. 17 Post-Gazette, two Democratic members of the Western Pennsylvania bar wrote that other deceptive claims by Judge Smith's attackers "are misinformed at best" and part of a "dangerous political strategy." Writing in the Feb. 14 issue, the Women's Bar Association of Western Pennsylvania endorsed Judge Smith "without reservation" in response to a feminist group's false claim.

The Washington Post's observation about the Pickering nomination applies across the board: "The need on the part of liberal groups and Democratic senators to portray him as a Neanderthal - all the while denying they are doing so - in order to justify voting him down is the latest example of the degradation of the confirmation process." Today's hearing on Judge Smith and Thursday's vote on Judge Pickering are the chance to change course before it's too late.

Katha Pollitt weighs in on recent news issues relating to reproductive freedom and the religious right

It may look as if domestic politics no longer exists in the new America--the one in which there is no money for anything besides guns and prisons but we don't care because we are all bowling together against the Axis of Evil. But that's not true. As long as there is a fertilized egg somewhere in this great land of ours, there will be domestic politics. George Bush may not be able to bring about the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth for the religious right, who gave him one in four of his votes. He may even realize that a serious victory for religious conservatives--significantly restricting the legality of abortion, say--would hurt the Republican Party, because California has more people than Utah. But he is doing what he can to keep the fundamentalists happy. It must be frustrating for him--just when we're all supposed to pretend to love our differently faithed neighbor even if we know he's bound for hell, Christians keep saying weird things. First there was Jerry Falwell's remark that God let terrorists blow up the World Trade Center because he was fed up with "the pagans, and the abortionists, and the feminists, and the gays and the lesbians...[and] the ACLU" Falwell apologized, only to express the same thought a bit more obliquely on November 11 at a Florida church: "If the church had been awake and performing that duty"--proselytizing the ungodly--"I can tell you that we wouldn't be in the mess we're in today." God, says Falwell, "even loves the Taliban"--it's just liberals he can't stand.

And then there's Attorney General John Ashcroft, who burqaed the semi-nude statue of the Spirit of Justice because he felt upstaged by her perky breast at press conferences, and who thinks calico cats are emissaries of the devil, when everyone knows it's black cats. Ashcroft is in trouble with Arab-Americans for offering this proof of the superiority of Christianity to Islam as quoted by conservative columnist Cal Thomas on his radio show on November 9 (and belatedly denied by a Justice Department spokeswoman): "Islam is a religion in which God requires you to send your son to die for him. Christianity is a faith in which God sends his son to die for you." Not to get too wound up in theology here, but if the Christian God sent his own son to die doesn't that make him, according to Ashcroft's definition, a Muslim?

Fortunately, the fertilized egg can be rolled onstage to distract us from such knotty questions. In keeping with the strategy of rebranding antichoice as prochild, the Bush Administration plans to use the CHIP program for poor children to provide healthcare to children "from conception to age nineteen," a neat way of defining zygotes as kids. The women in whom these fine young people are temporarily ensconced will remain uninsured--perhaps they can apply for federal funds by redefining themselves as ambulances or seeing-eye dogs. After all, somebody has to get those fetuses to the doctor's office. As for the 8 million uninsured postbirth children, not to mention the 27 million uninsured adults, who told them to leave the womb?

But wait, there's more. In a highly unusual move, the Justice Department has weighed in on the side of Ohio's "partial-birth abortion" ban, which has been on ice thanks to a federal court ruling that found it did not make enough allowance for a woman's health, as required by the 2000 Supreme Court decision in Carhart v. Nebraska. The Ohio law would permit the operation only to save her life or avoid "serious risk of the substantial and irreversible impairment of a major bodily function." Gee, what about considerable risk of moderate and long-term impairment of a bodily function of only middling importance? Should the Ohio state legislature (seventy-five men, twenty-four women) decide how much damage a woman should suffer on behalf of a fetus? Shouldn't she have something to say about it?

To please fanatical antichoicer Representative Chris Smith of New Jersey, Bush is holding back $34 million from UN family planning programs. To return the favor, Congressional Republicans have revived the Child Custody Protection Act, which would bar anyone but a parent from taking a minor across state lines for an abortion. The parental-notification-and-consent laws of a pregnant teen's home state would follow her wherever she goes, like killer bees, or the Furies--and unlike any other law.

Bush is also stacking with social conservatives commissions that have nothing to do with abortion per se but raise issues of sex, gender and reproduction. The cloning commission, called the Council on Bioethics (fourteen men, four women), is headed by bioethicist Leon Kass, a former opponent of in vitro fertilization who's associated with the American Enterprise Institute. There's room around the table for antichoice columnist Charles Krauthammer antichoice law professor Mary Ann Glendon, the Vatican's representative at the UN conference on women, in Beijing and social theorist Francis Fukuyama, who wrote in a New York Times Op-Ed that the thirty-years-overdue introduction of the pill in Japan in 1999 spelled the downfall of the Japanese family, because now women will just run wild. But there are only four research scientists, and no advocates for patients with diseases that the cloning of stem cells might someday help cure. Similarly, the newly reconfigured AIDS commission is said to be stacked with religious conservatives and will be headed by former Representative Tom Coburn, whose claim to fame is his rejection of condoms, which sometimes fail, in favor of "monogamy," which never does.

Finally, there's the nomination of Charles Pickering for the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. Rated unqualified by the American Bar Association, Pickering, an ardent segregationist when it counted, opposed the ERA, has been a lifelong opponent of legal abortion and won't discuss his antichoice record in Senate hearings. The Fifth Circuit includes Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi, states where the right to abortion is already compromised by conservative legislatures in 1999 Texas tied with Michigan for most new antichoice laws enacted (seven). Traditionally the federal courts offer hope of redress for victims of state laws--in this case, some of the poorest women in the country. What are the chances that Pickering will champion their rights and their health?

My money's on the fertilized egg.

Judging personal beliefs

REV_00141150

Thomas L. Jipping
WorldNetDaily.com
February 28, 2002

Senate Democrats were to have continued their scorched-earth confirmation obstruction campaign today by defeating, on astraight party-line vote, the nomination of Charles Pickering to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. The final votehas been postponed until next week.

Appearing last Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press," Sen. Dianne Feinstein, California Democrat and Judiciary Committee member, predicted Judge Pickering's demise. That will be odd since several members of the committee helped unanimously confirm him to the U.S. District Court in 1990. The liberal American Bar Association – considered by Democrats the "gold standard" for evaluating judicial nominees – upped its rating from "qualified" in 1990 to "well qualified" today.

While you can't help but step in some hypocrisy like that in Washington, it's actually Sen. Feinstein's reason for opposing Judge Pickering that's significant. She opposes him because he has "right-wing views, both politically and personally." That's a lotmore significant than it might sound.

If Judge Pickering were running again for the Mississippi State Senate, his political and personal views would obviously be relevant. A political candidate promises to translate those views into law. But why are political and personal views relevant to a judicial nominee? Like most liberals and some conservatives, Sen. Feinstein apparently sees no difference between judges and politicians. Political and personal views, rather than law, drive judicial decisions. Good judges have correct views and translate them into law.

Last year, though, Sen. Feinstein was among those lecturing John Ashcroft about putting aside the political and personal views he used as a legislator should he become attorney general. Those views, they said, are irrelevant in the executive branch, where he must enforce even laws with which he disagrees.

Political and personal views should be especially irrelevant to the judicial branch. As Chief Justice John Marshall wrote in Marbury vs. Madison, judges are there to say "what the law is," not what it should be. Judges don't make law, or even enforce it, so their political or personal views not only don't matter, they must not matter. Only then can the judiciary be, as America's founders intended and our liberty requires, the "weakest" and "least dangerous branch."

By saying what our laws mean, judges can say what our laws are. If anyone's political and personal views are to determine what our laws are, it's certainly not a small band of unelected judges. If "we the people" are to run the country and define the culture, judges must simply follow the law and leave the politics to us.

The controversy over Judge Pickering's nomination shows just what an "ugly affair" this can be. That's what the liberal Washington Post called it. Those "personal and political views" on which liberals base confirmation votes include religious views. The leftist People for the American Way's report on Judge Pickering focused on his Christian faith and church leadership. Translation: Conservative evangelical Christians hold incorrect views that disqualify them for judicial service. That's religious bigotry, and contrary to the Constitution's prohibition on a religious test for public office. But that type of intolerance and exclusion is inevitable when basing judicial selection decisions on a nominee's political and personal views.

Sen. Feinstein's criterion of political and personal views might sound familiar. Last year, Sen. Charles Schumer held hearings to promote his view that senators can base confirmation votes on a nominee's "ideology." Same thing. A judicial nominee's ideology will predict his rulings as a judge. Not surprisingly, Sens. Feinstein and Schumer were the first two Judiciary Committee Democrats to announce opposition to Judge Pickering.

Perhaps there's still a chance for Judge Pickering. In March 1997, Sen. Joseph Biden said that "it is not ... appropriate not to ... bring [nominees] to the [Senate] floor" for a vote. Maybe, just maybe, he will apply this same principle to Republican nominees as well. Whatever the outcome, the far-left gloves have come off and the response by the Bush administration and Senate Republicans will chart the road ahead.

The way out of this political and personal swamp is to refuse to muck around in it at all. Instead, Republicans must offer the American people a different view altogether of judges and how to choose them. That view is what America's founders offered, impartial judges who trust the people to make political decisions. Judges who do their job so we the people can do ours.

Kyl Lauds Confirmation Of Tucsonan Cindy Jorgenson For Federal Judgeship Senator Says Help Is On The Way For Overworked Federal District Court

WASHINGTON, D.C. - U.S. Senator Jon Kyl today commended the Senate for unanimously approving the nomination of Pima County Judge Cindy Jorgenson for a seat on the U.S. District

REV_00141152

Court for the District of Arizona.

"The good news for Arizona's overworked federal district court is that help is on the way," said Kyl today. "I am very pleased that the Senate has approved Judge Jorgenson's nomination to help ease the tremendous backlog of cases in Arizona, and look forward to filling the final vacancy on the court in the near future."

Judge Jorgenson is currently Presiding Judge for the family law bench at the Pima County Superior Court. Prior to her judgeship, she served as prosecutor in Tucson and became an Assistant United States Attorney in 1986. In 1995, Jorgenson received the Governor's Recognition Award for work on jury reform. She also was awarded the United States Department of Justice Special Achievement Award in 1987, 1989, 1991 and 1993. Judge Jorgenson is a graduate of the University of Arizona Law School.

Also today, the Senate Judiciary Committee held a hearing on Tucsonan David Bury to fill the remaining vacancy on the U.S. District Court. Mr. Bury is a founding partner and shareholder in the firm of Bury, Moeller, O'Meara & Gage P.C. of Tucson, Arizona. He has practiced as a trial lawyer for over 34 years.

Both Jorgenson and Bury were selected to fulfill vacancies that were deemed "judicial emergencies" by the administrative office of the courts.

FOX SPECIAL REPORT WITH BRIT HUME
February 26, 2002 Tuesday

EXCERPT
Brit Hume, James Rosen, Carl Cameron, Jim Angle, Bret Baier

HUME: The Justice Department issued a statement after the hearing expressing confidence in -- quote -- "the independence and absolute integrity of Deputy Attorney General Thompson" and said that ethics officials agreed that there is no basis to remove him from the Enron investigation.

Another Bush judicial nominee has faced tough questions from Senate Democrats. Judge Brooks Smith is the currently the chief federal judge for western Pennsylvania. And the president has nominated him to the federal appellate bench in Philadelphia.

Opponents say Smith failed to recuse himself in a timely fashion in certain cases where he had a conflict of interest. But his supporters, including the American Bar Association, say he's served with integrity.

Chief political correspondent Carl Cameron has the story. All right, we have got a little audio problem there. But we'll try to get that package ready to go and come back to you after a break.

Still to come also, the Pentagon's propaganda effort ends before it ever got started. We'll explain that after a break.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

HUME: We're going to take another crack at showing you Carl Cameron's report on Federal Judge Brooks Smith, whose confirmation hearing was held today. He is under attack from the left. Here's that report, we hope with sound.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

CARL CAMERON, FOX NEWS CHIEF POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT (voice-over): U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith of Pennsylvania is the latest of President Bush's judicial nominees to face fierce opposition from liberal special interest groups. Legally, critics call him too conservative and pro-business. Democrat Joe Biden threaten to scuttle Smith's nomination to the Third Circuit Court of Appeals if he refused to answer any questions because he might someday have to rule on them.

SEN. JOSEPH BIDEN (D), DELAWARE: I will do everything in my power to defeat you, including moving to the Senate floor to take an action I've never taken in my life as a United States senator, a filibuster.

CAMERON: Biden's friction with Smith goes back to 1993 when Smith harshly criticized the senator's provision in the Violence Against Women Act that would have let the federal government decide which domestic violence laws states must enforce. Smith called it unconstitutional. And eventually, the Supreme Court agreed.

Biden said though that dispute is over, there are other concerns. Democrats cited a fraud case, involving the bank where Smith's wife was vice president and he had investments. He stepped aside when the conflict was discovered, but not soon enough for critics.

UNIDENTIFIED MALE: Would you like to explain why?

BROOKS SMITH, JUDICIAL NOMINEE: With the benefit of hindsight, I wish I had recused earlier. But I did recuse. And I did it because I knew it was the right thing to do.

CAMERON: Smith noted that parties to that case have never complained, only liberal outside groups opposed to his nomination. But Democrats zeroed in on the nominee's association with conservative outside groups and his acceptance of trips to their legal conferences. Smith called them educational seminars attended by most jurists and said they do not influence a judge's fairness.

SMITH: Federal judges are accustomed by training and by experience to hearing on a day-to-day basis different points of view. It's what we do. It's what we're about.

REV_00141154

CAMERON: Republican Orrin Hatch accused liberal special interest groups of election year partisanship and mocked their objections to Smith's attendance at conservative functions.

SEN. ORRIN HATCH (R), UTAH: It seems that the criticism is not so much that you've attended some seminars, at least the outside criticism, but rather that you attended the wrong seminars. It's a terrible thing to do that, I'm sure. Of course, I'm being sarcastic.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

CAMERON: It actually took a minute for some in the room to realize that Hatch was joking, perhaps an indication that that might be, in fact, what's going on. Republicans are confident that ultimately that they will be able to get Smith's nomination confirmed.

That is not the case, however, for District Judge Charles Pickering, who was supposed to face a vote in the Senate Judiciary Committee this Thursday. That's now been put off until next week. And Republicans are increasingly pessimistic about being able to get that through, Brit.

HUME: Carl, thanks very much.

CAPITOL HILL HEARING TESTIMONY –Senator Patrick Leahy

Statement of Senator Patrick Leahy

Hearing on Judicial Nominations

February 26, 2002

I thank Senator Feingold for chairing this important hearing on judicial nominations.

The Judiciary Committee has continued to hold regular judicial nominations hearings throughout this session, as we have since the shift in majority last summer. We held the first January confirmation hearing in seven years on the second day of this session.

Today the Judiciary Committee holds its second February judicial confirmation hearing. In 1997, 1999 and 2001, the Republican majority held no confirmation hearings in either January or February. Today's hearing is the fourteenth hearing involving judicial nominations since the change in majority last summer. That is more hearings within the last seven months than the Republican majority ever held in any calendar year in which it was recently in the majority. Today's hearing follows the tradition of including a Court of Appeals nominee as well as a number of District Court nominees. Unfortunately, because the White House has been slow to send nominations to the many vacancies in the federal District Courts, the federal trial courts across the country, today's hearing includes a fewer number of District Court nominees than the Committee was willing to consider. Indeed, the Committee is virtually out of District Court nominees to include at such confirmation hearings. After today, 35 of the 36 District Court nominees with ABA peer reviews will have participated in hearings. We are in the process of scheduling a hearing on the most controversial District Court nominee currently pending.

Of course more than two-thirds of the federal court vacancies continue to be on the District Courts and 35 are still without a nominee. The Administration has acted very slowly in making nominations to the vacancies on the federal trial courts. In the last five months of last year, the Senate confirmed a higher percentage of the President's trial court nominees, 22 out of 36, than a Republican majority had allowed the Senate to confirm in the first session of either of the last two Congresses with a Democratic President.

Last year the President did not make nominations to almost 80 percent of the trial court vacancies that existed at the beginning of this year. As we began this session, 55 out of 69 District Court vacancies were without a nominee. Finally, in late January the White House sent up names for some of those trial court vacancies. Unfortunately, none have completed the paperwork needed to be included in hearings and none has yet received an ABA peer review.

Because the White House last year unilaterally changed the practice of nine Republican and Democratic Presidents and will no longer allow the ABA to begin its peer reviews during the selection process, ABA peer reviews on these new nominations are not likely to become available for some time to come. In the interim, we have already reached the point where the lack of available nominations for District Courts vacancies is holding back the number of judicial nominees the Judiciary Committee and the Senate could be considering. We experienced the same problem when the majority shifted last summer and we did not have enough District Court nominations ready for hearings in July through September last year.

After the Committee receives the indication that a judicial nominee has the support of his or her home state Senators and after the Committee has received ABA peer reviews, the nomination will then be eligible to be considered for inclusion in Committee hearings. Because the White House shifted the time at which the ABA does its evaluation of nominees to the post-nomination period, this year's nominees are unlikely to have completed files ready for evaluation until after the Easter recess. Of course, even then, over two and one-half dozen of the current federal trial court vacancies, 35, may still be without nominees.

To make real progress will take the cooperation of the White House. That is what I have been urging since the shift in majority. That is what I, again, called for when I spoke to the Senate on January 25, 2001. That cooperation is still not forthcoming.

We will make the most progress, most quickly if the White House would begin working with home state Senators to identify fair- minded, nonideological, consensus nominees to fill these court vacancies. One of the reasons that the Committee was able to work as quickly as it did and Senate was able to confirm 39 judges, as it has in the last seven months, was because those nominations were strongly supported as consensus nominees by people from across the political and legal spectrums.

I have heard of too many situations in too many states involving too many reasonable and moderate home state Senators in which the White House has demonstrated no willingness to work with home state Senators to fill judicial vacancies cooperatively. As we move forward, I have urged the White House to show greater inclusiveness and flexibility and to help make this a truly bipartisan enterprise. Logjams exist in a number of settings. To make real progress, repair the damage that has been done over previous years, and build bridges toward a more cooperative process, there is much that the White House could do to work more cooperatively with all home state Senators, including Democratic Senators.

In addition, as I have noted, the White House could help speed the Committee process if it would restore the ABA peer review participation to an earlier stage in the process. For more than 50 years the ABA was able to conduct its peer reviews simultaneously with the FBI background check procedures. This meant that when nominations were sent to the Senate, the FBI report and informal ABA peer review were completed and followed very quickly. Together with the endorsement of the nominee's home state Senators, the basic requirements of the nominations file were available to be reviewed by the Committee much more quickly than they are now. This process allowed hearings to be scheduled soon after nominations were received in many instances. One of the consequences of the White House's unilateral decision last year to discontinue this longstanding bipartisan practice is that nominations are now not available to be considered or scheduled for hearings until many weeks have passed and these basic background materials can be assembled and submitted to the Committee. That is unfortunate and unnecessary.

There were occasions last year when we proceeded with hearings including fewer District Court nominees than I would have liked because recent nominees' files were not yet complete. I noted in my statement to begin this year that I feared that same circumstance being repeated this year. It already is. That is regrettable.

I have urged the White House to rethink its recent changes in traditional practices that were initially instituted by President Eisenhower and worked well for Presidents Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Ford, Carter, Reagan, (George Herbert Walker) Bush and Clinton. I suggest that the White House reconsider the delays caused by the abandonment of the traditional practice and that this Administration consider returning to the tried and true practice of sharing information with the ABA earlier in the process so that it can begin and complete its peer reviews by the time the nomination is made to the Senate.

Just as no Senator is bound by the recommendations of the ABA, so, too, the White House can make clear that it is reinstituting the traditional practice not because it intends to be bound by the results of that peer review or even take it into account, but solely to remove an element of delay that its actions introduced into the confirmation process. The White House can expressly ask the ABA not even to send the results of its peer review to the Executive Office, but only transmit them to the Committee, if it chooses. Whether or not the White House considers the ABA peer reviews, they are considered by many Senators. For example, a number of Republican Senators cited favorable peer reviews for judicial nominations as an indication that they merit the Senate's support. On the other hand, the fact that they are advisory and not binding on Senators is seen from the recent action confirming a nominee who received a "not qualified" rating from the ABA and the many nominees of this Administration who have been confirmed with mixed ratings.

As Chairman, I have sought to work with all Senators. In scheduling hearings for nominations, chairmen traditionally consider a number of factors, including the consensus of support for the nominee, the needs of the court to which the person is nominated, and the interests of the home state Senators. We have a number of nominees for whom individual Senators have expressed personal interest. I will continue to take that into account and seek to accommodate Senators in as orderly a process as possible.

Judicial nominations have never been scheduled for hearings based solely on the date of their nomination. Certainly there was no first-in-first-out rule during the six and one-half years that preceded my chairmanship, when it could take years to get a hearing and more than 50 judicial nominees never received a nominations hearing at all.

I hope to integrate a number of nominations received before I became Chairman into hearings throughout this session. I anticipate that not all those nominations will be regarded as consensus candidates. We can anticipate that the more controversial nominations will occasion more review and more Senators raising questions that concern them during the course of our hearings.

In our first full week in session we proceeded with a hearing on the nomination of Judge Charles Pickering to the 5th Circuit. Senator Lott is very supportive of this nomination and even though his was not among the first sent to the Senate by President Bush last spring, we have tried to move forward to consideration of the nomination in recognition of the strong interest of the Republican leader.

Similarly, I knew of Senator Specter's strong interest in the Committee scheduling a hearing as soon as possible on the nomination of Judge D. Brooks Smith to a vacancy on the 3rd Circuit. Judge Smith was not nominated until September 10 and the Committee did not receive his peer review from the ABA until October 31, 2001. Although there were 44 judicial nominees nominated before Judge Smith, of which several remain pending, I have sought to accommodate Senator Specter by including Judge Smith in our hearing today. Of course, the previous nominee for this vacancy was Judge Robert Cindrich, also a District Judge in the Western District of Pennsylvania. Although he was nominated in February 2000, received a well qualified peer review rating by the ABA and was pending for more than 10 months, he was never included in a confirmation hearing. His nomination was returned to the President without any action having been taken by the Senate.

Likewise, other Senators, Republicans and Democrats, have asked me to give priority to various nominees. Senator Enzi requested attention to the nomination of Terrence O'Brien to the 10th Circuit, for example, and I will be trying to accommodate him, as well. I tried to take those requests into account in the last seven months and expect to continue to do so. Such interest was a factor in the scheduling of hearings for Judge Prost to the Federal Circuit, Judge Gregory to the 4th Circuit, Judge Clement to the 5th Circuit, Judge Riley to the 8th Circuit, Judge Harris to the 10th Circuit and Judge Melloy to the 8th Circuit.

It was considered in the cases of Judge Mills in Mississippi, Judge Wooten in South Carolina, Judge Robinson in Kansas, the four judges the Senate confirmed last year for Oklahoma, the three judges the Senate confirmed for Kentucky, the two judges the Senate confirmed for Montana, the two judges the Committee confirmed for Alabama, and in connection with many of the 44 judicial nominees on whom the Committee has been holding hearings in the last seven months.

I expect to continue to try to accommodate Senators from both sides of the aisle in this regard. In so doing, I have tried to be forthright with Senators if a nominee has generated concerns. Not all of the judicial nominations scheduled for hearings have been without detractors, many are proving to be controversial.

A general impression, heightened by the White House's refusal to work cooperatively with some home state Democratic Senators in spite of precedent in that regard and its disdain for suggestions to proceed to assemble recommendations through bipartisan commissions as has been the tradition is many States, such as mine, is that the White House and some in the Senate are intent on an ideological takeover of the courts. With the Circuits so evenly split in so many places, nominees to the Courts of Appeals may have a significant impact on the development of the law for decades to come. Some of us are concerned that the Administration not orchestrate a roll back in the protections of individual rights, civil rights, consumer rights and privacy rights through its judicial nominations.

In addition to Judge Smith of Pennsylvania, this hearing includes another nominee to a District Court vacancy in Arizona, the third included in a hearing since the shift in majority last summer, another nominee for a District Court vacancy in Texas after the confirmation of Judge Martinez earlier this year, and a nominee for a vacancy in Alaska whose file was not completed until this year. I give my thanks to all Senators who have worked with the Committee to schedule this confirmation hearing and especially to Senator Feingold for chairing today.

Alliance For Justice Raises Serious Concerns About Judge D. Brooks Smith, His Nomination To U.S. Court Of Appeals For 3rd Circuit

Nan Aron
U.S. Newswire
February 26, 2002 Tuesday

Following is a statement by Nan Aron, president, Alliance for Justice:

Like many of President Bush's nominees to the federal judiciary, Pennsylvania district court

REV_00141159

Judge D. Brooks Smith's record raises troubling concerns across a wide spectrum of legal issues including those affecting workers, the disabled, and the environment. He is emblematic of President Bush's nominees who will turn back the clock on progress Americans cherish.

In order for the Senate to make a judgment on any federal judge, that nominee's record must be thoroughly reviewed. Judge Smith appears to have a large body of unpublished opinions. In his over 13 years on the bench, Judge Smith has been reversed 52 times, with published opinions in only six of those cases. This suggests strongly that he has issued a large number of unpublished opinions overall, the vast majority of which have been unavailable for review. And the rulings that are available for review show a disturbing pattern of bias in favor of powerful interests and disregard for the rights and protections of ordinary Americans.

Judge Smith also spoke out against the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) in a speech to the Federalist Society in 1994. His views on the division of power between states and the federal government are antithetical to many of our country's civil rights and environmental protections and if he were to issue decisions as an appellate judge that reflected those views, the effect could be a further dismantling of critical laws passed by Congress to ensure these protections.

The U.S. Senate must insist on its constitutional, co-equal role and work to maintain a fair and independent judiciary. No nominee is presumptively entitled to a lifetime seat on the federal judiciary. It is the nominee's duty and obligation to prove that he or she is fit to serve this esteemed, lifetime judgeship. Their record must be an open-book so the Committee has the tools necessary to decide whether or not to confirm.

We need fair judges. We need compassionate judges. We need judges not afraid to publish an opinion because they know their reasons will stand up to scrutiny.

Alliance for Justice urges the Senate Judiciary Committee to undertake a thorough review of Judge Smith's record before voting on whether to confirm.

SEC. ___. HUD ACCESS TO INFORMATION IN THE NATIONAL DIRECTORY OF NEW HIRES.

Section 453(j) of the Social Security Act is amended by adding the following new paragraph at the end:

"(7) INFORMATION COMPARISONS AND DISCLOSURE FOR PUBLIC AND ASSISTED HOUSING PROGRAMS.--

"(A) FURNISHING OF INFORMATION BY HUD.--The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall furnish to the Secretary, on a daily basis or at less or more frequent intervals as may be determined by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development in consultation with the Secretary, information in the custody of the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for comparison with information in the National Directory of New Hires, in order to obtain the information in such Directory with respect to individuals who are applying for or participating in any program under the United States Housing Act of 1937, section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959, sections 221(d)(3), 221(d)(5), and 236 of the National Housing Act, section 811 of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act, and section 101 of Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965.

"(B) REQUIREMENT TO SEEK MINIMUM INFORMATION.--The

Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall seek information pursuant to this section only to the extent necessary to verify the income of individuals described in subparagraph (A).

"(C) DUTIES OF THE SECRETARY.--

"(i) INFORMATION DISCLOSURE.--The Secretary, in cooperation with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, shall compare information in the National Directory of New Hires with information in the custody of the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and disclose information in that Directory to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, in accordance with this paragraph, for the purposes specified in this paragraph.

"(ii) CONDITION ON DISCLOSURE.--The Secretary shall make disclosures in accordance with clause (i) only to the extent that the Secretary determines that such disclosures do not interfere with the effective operation of the program under this part.

"(D) USE OF INFORMATION BY HUD.--The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may use information resulting from a data match pursuant to this paragraph only--

"(i) for the purpose of verifying the income of individuals described in subparagraph (A); and

"(ii) after removal of personal identifiers, to conduct analyses of the income reporting of individuals described in subparagraph (A).

"(E) DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION BY HUD.--

"(i) DISCLOSURES PERMITTED.--The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may disclose information resulting from a data match pursuant to this paragraph only to a public housing agency, a private owner, a management agent, a contract administrator, the Inspector General of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and the Attorney General in connection with the administration of a program described in subparagraph (A) and in accordance with data security and control policies established by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development in accordance with safeguards established by the Secretary under subsection (m). Information obtained by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development pursuant to this paragraph may not be made available by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to any person under section 552 of title 5, United States Code.

"(ii) PURPOSE OF DISCLOSURE.--The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may make a disclosure under clause (i) only for the purpose of verifying the income of individuals described in subparagraph (A).

"(iii) RESTRICTION ON REDISCLOSURE.--A person or entity to which information is disclosed under clause (i) may use or disclose such information only as needed for verifying the income of individuals described in subparagraph (A) and only in accordance with data security and control policies established by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development in accordance with safeguards established by the Secretary under subsection (m).

"(F) REIMBURSEMENT OF HHS COSTS.--The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall reimburse the Secretary, in accordance with subsection (k)(3), for the additional costs incurred by the Secretary in furnishing the information requested under this paragraph.

"(G) CONSENT FORM.--As a condition of applying for or participating in any program described in subparagraph (A), the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may require an individual to sign a consent form that authorizes all the information sharing on such individual that is provided for under this paragraph.".

HUD ACCESS TO INFORMATION IN THE NATIONAL DIRECTORY OF NEW HIRES

Summary

Section ___ would make an amendment to section 453(j) of the Social Security Act (42 U. S. C. 653(j)) to authorize HUD and its intermediaries (public housing agencies, owners, management agents, and contract administrators) to have controlled access to the information in the National Directory of New Hires (NDNH) database that is maintained by the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to facilitate accurate verification of the income of the applicants to and tenants in HUD's public and assisted housing programs.

HUD proposes to expand the information that is currently available to HUD and its intermediaries by comparing data provided by the intermediaries to data in the NDNH database, and then providing the results to HUD's intermediaries through HUD's secure information systems. HUD also proposes to use the data from the NDNH database to perform verification of incomes that were reported in the Tenant Rental Assistance Certification System (TRACS) and the Multifamily Tenant Characteristics System (MTCS) as an integral part of its ongoing quality control and monitoring programs. All access to the information in the NDNH database will adhere to strict confidentiality and security policies.

The proposal would also permit HUD to expand existing information consent form requirements for individuals applying for or participating in HUD's public and assisted housing programs by requiring such individuals to sign a consent form that would authorize the sharing of the individuals' income information from the NDNH.

Justification

Section ___ would address a top priority for the Department, which is the reduction of errors and overpayment of subsidy caused by incorrect income determination and rent calculation in public and assisted housing programs. A HUD study ("Quality Control for Rental Assistance Subsidies Determinations" issued by HUD's Office of Policy Development and Research in June 2001) found substantial errors and improper payments in HUD's housing assistance programs caused by improper income and rent determinations. These errors are the basis for multiple material weakness findings in HUD's financial statement audit ("U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Audit of Fiscal Year 2000 Financial Statements" (2001-FO-0003) issued by the HUD IG on March 1, 2000) and is a matter of further serious concern to the Congress and OMB as this is one of only 22 "high risk" areas designated by the General Accounting Office (GAO) ("High-Risk Series - An Update (GAO-01-263) Issued by GAO in January 2001). Both the GAO and HUD's Inspector General have recommended that Congress consider giving HUD access to the information in NDNH database as an important way of resolving these problems in HUD's rental assistance programs (GAO Report issued in September 2000: GAO/HEHS-00-119, "Benefit and Loan Programs, Improved Data Sharing Could Enhance Program Integrity".). The use of the NDNH database can have a substantial impact on reducing errors in tenants' incomes used to calculate rents and determine subsidy payments by facilitating the timely verification of the income of applicants to and tenants in HUD's public and assisted housing programs.

Currently, HUD verifies earned and unearned income data by matching against wage data from the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) in back-end verification. Federal tax information data provided by the IRS is much older than data in the NDNH database and thus less useful for determining tenant's current incomes. Access to information in the NDNH database will allow HUD and its intermediaries to correctly determine income and rents at the time of certification or recertification, rather than a year or two later through the IRS data.

SEC. ___. HUD ACCESS TO INFORMATION IN THE NATIONAL DIRECTORY OF NEW HIRES.

Section 453(j) of the Social Security Act is amended by adding the following new paragraph at the end:

"(7) INFORMATION COMPARISONS AND DISCLOSURE FOR PUBLIC AND ASSISTED HOUSING PROGRAMS.--

"(A) FURNISHING OF INFORMATION BY HUD.--The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall furnish to the Secretary, on a daily basis or at less or more frequent intervals as may be determined by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development in consultation with the Secretary, information in the custody of the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for comparison with information in the National Directory of New Hires, in order to obtain the information in such Directory with respect to individuals who are applying for or participating in any program under the United States Housing Act of 1937, section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959, sections 221(d)(3), 221(d)(5), and 236 of the National Housing Act, section 811 of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act, and section 101 of Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965.

"(B) REQUIREMENT TO SEEK MINIMUM INFORMATION.--The

Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall seek information pursuant to this section only to the extent necessary to verify the income of individuals described in subparagraph (A).

"(C) DUTIES OF THE SECRETARY.--

"(i) INFORMATION DISCLOSURE.--The Secretary, in cooperation with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, shall compare information in the National Directory of New Hires with information in the custody of the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and disclose information in that Directory to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, in accordance with this paragraph, for the purposes specified in this paragraph.

"(ii) CONDITION ON DISCLOSURE.--The Secretary shall make disclosures in accordance with clause (i) only to the extent that the Secretary determines that such disclosures do not interfere with the effective operation of the program under this part.

"(D) USE OF INFORMATION BY HUD.--The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may use information resulting from a data match pursuant to this paragraph only--

"(i) for the purpose of verifying the income of individuals described in subparagraph (A); and

"(ii) after removal of personal identifiers, to conduct analyses of the income reporting of individuals described in subparagraph (A).

"(E) DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION BY HUD.--

"(i) DISCLOSURES PERMITTED.--The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may disclose information resulting from a data match pursuant to this paragraph only to a public housing agency, a private owner, a management agent, a contract administrator, the Inspector General of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and the Attorney General in connection with the administration of a program described in subparagraph (A) and in accordance with data security and control policies established by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development in accordance with safeguards established by the Secretary under subsection (m). Information obtained by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development pursuant to this paragraph may not be made available by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to any person under section 552 of title 5, United States Code.

"(ii) PURPOSE OF DISCLOSURE.--The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may make a disclosure under clause (i) only for the purpose of verifying the income of individuals described in subparagraph (A).

"(iii) RESTRICTION ON REDISCLOSURE.--A person or entity to which information is disclosed under clause (i) may use or disclose such information only as needed for verifying the income of individuals described in subparagraph (A) and only in accordance with data security and control policies established by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development in accordance with safeguards established by the Secretary under subsection (m).

"(F) REIMBURSEMENT OF HHS COSTS.--The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall reimburse the Secretary, in accordance with subsection (k)(3), for the additional costs incurred by the Secretary in furnishing the information requested under this paragraph.

"(G) CONSENT FORM.--As a condition of applying for or participating in any program described in subparagraph (A), the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may require an individual to sign a consent form that authorizes all the information sharing on such individual that is provided for under this paragraph.".

HUD ACCESS TO INFORMATION IN THE NATIONAL DIRECTORY OF NEW HIRES

Summary

Section ___ would make an amendment to section 453(j) of the Social Security Act (42 U. S. C. 653(j)) to authorize HUD and its intermediaries (public housing agencies, owners, management agents, and contract administrators) to have controlled access to the information in the National Directory of New Hires (NDNH) database that is maintained by the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to facilitate accurate verification of the income of the applicants to and tenants in HUD's public and assisted housing programs.

HUD proposes to expand the information that is currently available to HUD and its intermediaries by comparing data provided by the intermediaries to data in the NDNH database, and then providing the results to HUD's intermediaries through HUD's secure information systems. HUD also proposes to use the data from the NDNH database to perform verification of incomes that were reported in the Tenant Rental Assistance Certification System (TRACS) and the Multifamily Tenant Characteristics System (MTCS) as an integral part of its ongoing quality control and monitoring programs. All access to the information in the NDNH database will adhere to strict confidentiality and security policies.

The proposal would also permit HUD to expand existing information consent form requirements for individuals applying for or participating in HUD's public and assisted housing programs by requiring such individuals to sign a consent form that would authorize the sharing of the individuals' income information from the NDNH.

Justification

Section ___ would address a top priority for the Department, which is the reduction of errors and overpayment of subsidy caused by incorrect income determination and rent calculation in public and assisted housing programs. A HUD study ("Quality Control for Rental Assistance Subsidies Determinations" issued by HUD's Office of Policy Development and Research in June 2001) found substantial errors and improper payments in HUD's housing assistance programs caused by improper income and rent determinations. These errors are the basis for multiple material weakness findings in HUD's financial statement audit ("U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Audit of Fiscal Year 2000 Financial Statements" (2001-FO-0003) issued by the HUD IG on March 1, 2000) and is a matter of further serious concern to the Congress and OMB as this is one of only 22 "high risk" areas designated by the General Accounting Office (GAO) ("High-Risk Series - An Update (GAO-01-263) Issued by GAO in January 2001). Both the GAO and HUD's Inspector General have recommended that Congress consider giving HUD access to the information in NDNH database as an important way of resolving these problems in HUD's rental assistance programs (GAO Report issued in September 2000: GAO/HEHS-00-119, "Benefit and Loan Programs, Improved Data Sharing Could Enhance Program Integrity".). The use of the NDNH database can have a substantial impact on reducing errors in tenants' incomes used to calculate rents and determine subsidy payments by facilitating the timely verification of the income of applicants to and tenants in HUD's public and assisted housing programs.

Currently, HUD verifies earned and unearned income data by matching against wage data from the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) in back-end verification. Federal tax information data provided by the IRS is much older than data in the NDNH database and thus less useful for determining tenant's current incomes. Access to information in the NDNH database will allow HUD and its intermediaries to correctly determine income and rents at the time of certification or recertification, rather than a year or two later through the IRS data.

Thought this was pretty good, in case you haven't seen.

Marc, I think we need to have another call on this. I'd like to bring everyone up to date on our conversations with Schumer's office.

Also, what would the group think about my setting up a meeting with Bob Hunter of CFA to talk with him and try to share perspectives? His skepticism on this issue is hurting us with some of the key players on the Dem side. I think it would be helpful to have White House representation at such a meeting.

Let me know.

Assessing Terror and Related Legislative Risks

- Earnings and valuation risks are real
  We assess potential impact on real estate, banking, brokerage and nonlife insurance sectors of another 9/11-size attack and the government response.
- Current valuations don't seem to reflect attack risk
  In all these sectors, we think current valuations do not reflect impact of another attack without a terrorism bill in place.
- Insurance stocks most vulnerable to attacks with no bill
  Insurers, lacking data, may be allowing exposures to expand with insufficient safeguards; reinsurers are managing exposures better.
- REITs are caught in the middle
  Lenders and insurers can impose higher rates, and REITs and landlords can pass along only some of the increased costs.
- Capital markets-focused firms seem least exposed
  Fallout on borrowers could ripple through mortgage-backed market; however, investment banks could come up with innovative products as alternatives.

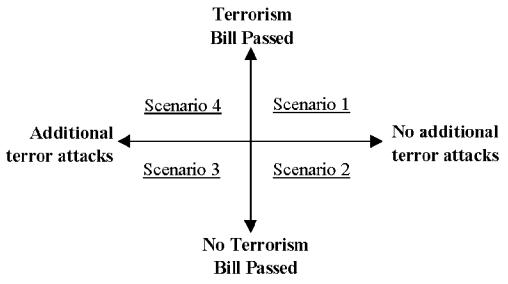
Please see the important disclosures at the end of this report.

Assessing Terror and Related Legislative Risks

Summary
September 11 changed the world's perception of risk. Insurers and reinsurers were the first to react, moving to exclude losses from future terrorist attacks in policy language. Congress immediately began work on a bill to provide the coverage but failed to pass legislation before year-end. The issue is back before Congress but passage of a bill is uncertain. Whether another terrorist attack occurs with or without a bill in place has significant implications for the banking, brokerage, asset management, real estate and insurance industries' earnings and valuations.

Morgan Stanley's analysts who cover these sectors have produced this report to weigh the likely impact on these sectors of a federal terrorism insurance bill passing or not, depending on whether another World Trade Center-size attack occurs in the US. (For discussion purposes, we are ignoring the worst-case scenario of a major nuclear, chemical or bio-terrorism attack because of the enormous, unpredictable consequences on the economy and society. Only the government can address this risk, in our view.) We assume that if a bill were to pass, it would resemble some compromise between the current House bill and last year's failed Senate version (under which the federal government would pay as much as $90 billion of terror attack losses over a three-year period, with insurers paying the first $10 billion of losses). Our aim is to identify the degree to which stocks are discounting in terrorism and the winners and losers under the four possible scenarios (Exhibit 1):

Exhibit 1
The Terrorism Matrix



Source: Morgan Stanley Research

We are currently in Scenario 2. No bill has passed (and the likelihood of one passing this year remains uncertain without action from the Senate). No follow-up massive attack has occurred although some seem to have been averted (and investors — and even some businesses — seem to be assuming that none will occur any time soon). The government has indicated that terrorism remains a very real risk, and our aim is to provide investors with a framework for thinking about the implications of the four possible scenarios, without necessarily assigning probabilities to whether a bill will pass or another massive attack occurs.

The 9/11 event by itself showed that the terrorists are much more coordinated, capable and determined than was generally thought prior to the event. Since then, the government's stepped-up efforts to gather intelligence has turned up new evidence that the terrorists are determined to plan and execute additional attacks. Preventive efforts also have been ramped up and appear to have thwarted some attacks. The risk of terrorism should be reduced over time; however, in a recent speech, former CIA Director Robert Gates indicated it would be at least 5-10 years before the level of terrorism risk is economically insurable. Accordingly, we believe the message in all this new information is that the risk of massive losses from terrorism in the near future needs to be weighed in terms of its impact on property owners, lenders, insurers and their investors.

Investment conclusion. Our overall conclusion is that the stocks currently reflect the assumption that no terrorism insurance bill will pass, and no WTC-size loss will be repeated any time soon. Weighing the business and stock valuation impact of political behavior and terrorist attacks is tricky for the same reason we believe terrorism losses are uninsurable. It is practically impossible to assign a probability of recurrence to an unprecedented event of the magnitude of the September 11 attacks. One thing we now believe, however, is that such a massive attack is possible. In all our scenario analysis, we think a negative scenario — another attack occurring today without a terrorism bill in place — is the one investors need to think about most, because this is the one scenario we think is currently least priced into the market. Under this scenario, we believe:

- The property/casualty insurance companies (the first derivative in the financial sector chain of events) and their stocks would suffer the greatest blow, offset by further acceleration in insurance rate increases. We believe the primary insurers would likely take a significantly bigger hit than reinsurers, with the insurance brokers, as non-risk-bearing intermediaries, possibly gaining. Government intervention financially, however, would probably be swift and might reverse the valuation dynamics. The question is whether the government would restore capital as well as pay claims. We also do not think capital would rush into the industry as quickly as it did after 9/11, because the level of risk would be perceived as greater. The financial impact of a second event could be more severe than the impact of the WTC event for some companies, assuming a comparable amount of losses despite post-9/11 efforts to reduce exposures, because of the already weakened financial condition of certain insurer balance sheets.

- Real estate investment trusts (REITs), in addition to incurring the actual loss of property, could be hit by both lower liquidity and lower real estate values as well as by higher borrowing costs, higher security costs and higher insurance costs and reduced insurance availability for properties that most closely fit the profile of the terrorists' targets. Developers might find asset-backed financing harder to complete and be forced to move toward corporate debt issuance, which can be costlier.
- Lower down on the impact scale would be credit-sensitive financials, depending on whether another wave of attacks would negatively affect interest rates. We think interest rates could be vulnerable in the aftermath of another attack without a terrorism bill in place, depending on the size of the losses and the method the government would use to fund those losses under financial-crisis conditions. Offsetting this impact would be how the event could lead to stricter credit standards, higher loan interest rates and an acceleration of efforts to improve loan portfolios in terms of credit quality. Individual financial institutions that have excess concentrations in affected properties would suffer losses.
- Capital markets financials could be hurt by the impact on the collateralized mortgage backed securities market as well as any post-attack weakness in the equity markets akin to what happened after 9/11. At the same time, another attack might create the opportunity to generate innovative property financing alternatives created by the impacts on the real estate market and interest rates.

Who holds the risk? Our view is that the bulk of the financial risk in a terrorist attack resides with those who finance and own commercial real estate, the companies that occupy the space, and those who insure real estate and the businesses and lives of the people who occupy those spaces. This would include central business district real estate, regional shopping malls, and large hotels. This does not mean, however, that the risk is non-existent for suburban offices, small hotels and shopping centers — only that the risk may be lower in those locations.

We are aware, for example, that insurers are not excluding terrorism coverage on properties and businesses that do not seem like obvious terrorist targets — a motel on a sparsely populated highway. On the other hand, we think it is a mistake to assume that only major cities like New York and trophy real estate like the World Trade Center constitute the only potential targets. As a recent Swiss Re report pointed out, a terrorist destroyed a major federal office building in Oklahoma City — not an especially high-profile property in a medium-sized city.

Exhibit 3 gives an indication of how much value is tied up in US commercial property and how much property-related financing was outstanding at year-end 2000. This represents the total value at risk — to varying but essentially unknowable degrees — in a terrorist attack. This does not cover residential real estate, but once again, that does not mean we think residences are immune to terrorist actions. For example, terrorists are known to have worked on launching attacks involving nuclear, biological and chemical weapons. Many insurers and reinsurers are specifically excluding losses from these types of attacks, but fire losses following a nuclear attack are not excluded, and fire following any act of terrorism is not excludable in 29 states, including the major industrial states such as California and New York. Nor can workers' compensation losses or group life be excluded. Nuclear, chemical, and biological terrorism may not be excluded from personal insurance. Life and disability covers all risks.

Exhibit 4 shows the extent to which some of the sectors referred to in this report are exposed to commercial real estate in terms of equity and debt ownership. Not surprisingly, the commercial banking sector has the largest exposure to commercial real estate loans, while corporations have the largest exposure to real estate owned.

Insurance covers only a fraction of value. Perhaps the most striking reality is the relatively small amount of net premiums US property/casualty insurers collect — $19.8 billion in 2000 — for commercial multiperil coverage, which includes insuring the $5.5 trillion replacement value of all US commercial structures plus another $5.1 trillion in inventory, equipment and software. This also compares to total property/casualty industry capital ("surplus") of about $282 billion at year-end 2001, which is the entire US property/casualty industry's capacity to pay claims of all types (including personal coverages). We estimate the capital of the commercial lines industry, for all types of coverages including casualty, is about $125 billion. The premiums collected for commercial multiperil are 13.4% of all commercial lines premiums. To put these numbers in context, for covering every dollar of commercial-structure replacement value and contents, property insurers collect about two tenths of a penny of premium and maintain surplus of approximately the same amount.

While insurance performs an extremely important economic function, by design it covers a finite amount of risk that is, in the aggregate, somewhat predictable over time. Events that fall outside this definition of insurability due to their potential size and lack of predictability are not insurable because the economic cost to set aside capital to cover such a risk is too high for the economy to bear. This is the point at which the government steps in, and this is what the debate over terrorism is all about.

Terror bill background. The September 11 terrorist attacks brought to light a new level of risk that clearly had not been previously contemplated. Nearly every kind of insurance coverage was triggered — including personal and commercial property (with business interruption), aviation liability, workers' compensation, personal and commercial auto, commercial property, liability and others, along with life insurance and accident & health. It involved an unprecedented concentration of property loss, economic losses and loss of life — more than 3,000 lives, four commercial airliners, hundreds of companies and thousands of their employees who survived but were affected in various ways.

Reinsurers immediately began to notify clients they would renew expiring contracts with exclusions for claims from future similar terrorist attack losses. At the same time, however, reinsurers as well as insurers quietly started looking for ways to write the coverage in limited ways and away from locations they deemed to be obvious terrorist targets — high-profile urban trophy properties, power plants, airports, and major events. Publicity focused on the immediate threat of property owners and developers and commercial enterprises facing potential default notices from lenders citing the lack of terrorism coverage.

Starting in October, Congressional aides began to write legislation to provide a government guarantee to cover such losses, without which it was assumed banks would be unwilling to make any commercial and industrial real estate loans. At that time, no one seemed to question the assumption that the inability to get terrorism coverage would lead to an economic crisis triggered by lenders calling in property loans with covenants requiring the coverage. The bill that emerged would authorize the Treasury Department to pay as much as $90 billion of losses above the first $10 billion that the insurance industry would cover.

By the end of the year, the bill had stumbled. The two parties split over a provision for tort reform, which President Bush had set as a requirement for his signature. The inability to compromise on this point killed the bill. Once it was clear there would be no bill by year-end, a reinsurance renewal logjam, caused by the wait-and-see over the terror bill, broke open.

Bill's current status. The urgency to pass a bill diminished after year-end, partly because no obvious evidence emerged of a brewing economic crisis. Bank regulators and industry trade associations indicated that lenders were not wholesale calling in loans or turning away borrowers over terror insurance exclusions. Examples of deals derailed by lack of terror-cover availability were the exception rather than the rule. However, as of this writing, the House Financial Services Committee was reconvening hearings on a bill, including testimony from the Government Accounting Office pointing to the need for a federal backstop. Still, we think that the farther away we get from September 11 without another catastrophic event, the harder it gets to push a bill through Congress. Meanwhile, insurers, developers and lenders keep finding ways to do business — essentially by increasing their exposures and costs — without a backstop.

Why a bill is still needed. We believe, however, that such a bill is as necessary as ever. Repeated terrorist attacks of the WTC magnitude are essentially uninsurable risks. It is practically impossible to estimate the probability of recurrence. Politically motivated intentional criminal acts resist actuarial analysis. The lack of a bill puts property and business owners in the position of having to pay much higher insurance rates — 50-100% and greater for central business district real estate — for less coverage and self-funding the balance of the exposure under pressure from lenders.

If and when a catastrophic event occurs, these owners will absorb a far greater share of the loss than they did on 9/11. As a result, some businesses could fail, unless they tied up much more capital in advance to cover the risk — capital that normally would be available to finance normal operations and growth. Without a terror bill, we think lenders will be imposing stricter requirements on an increasing portion of their loan portfolios as those portfolios mature. Insurers, meanwhile, are still over-exposed, because they can exclude only as much terrorism coverage as state governments allow (which is not a lot) and can buy

Please see the important disclosures at the end of this report.

REV_00141220

very little reinsurance affordably to limit their exposure. In effect, all these businesses collectively are gambling on either dodging the next massive attack or having the government step in after the fact and efficiently provide the capital.

Most important to recognize is that the 9/11 attack was not a fluke, nor was it entirely unforeseen. It was a second attempt on the same property perpetrated by sophisticated, well-funded terrorists. Since 1968, more than 10,000 acts of terrorism have been recorded, including 14 events with more than 100 fatalities. In 1999, the Hart-Rudman Commission on National Security in the 21st Century concluded "Americans will die on American soil, possibly in large numbers" as a result of terrorism. The National Commission on Terrorism in June 2001 said the "#1 priority" of the US should be to address loose affiliations of transnational terrorists seeking to inflict large numbers of casualties.

Yet the economy continues to absorb such exposure. In the end, we think it would be better for the federal government to establish a structure for covering uninsurable losses from the next major attack than to do nothing. Any after-the-fact response would probably involve emergency funding that could have inequitable outcomes. Congress has been widely criticized for bailing out the airlines just 10 days after 9/11, then not acting on other parts of the economy. Such disparate outcomes are avoidable.

Experts have noted that the historical roots of the current Islamist terrorism to some extent lie in the distant past. For example, Osama bin Laden refers to Western culture as "Crusaders."

Real Estate Investment Trusts

The current lack of affordable terrorism insurance coverage for many types of real estate has already generated negative impacts for a variety of REITs. Significant uncertainty continues to surround the possibility of government intervention as well as the possibility of another terror attack. In order to help investors better navigate these uncertainties, we provide some initial conclusions about the prospects of the real estate industry (as well as various property sectors and REITs). (See Terrorism and Insurance Risks: Assessing Sensitivities by Gregory Whyte, Matthew Ostrower and Robert Stevenson being published simultaneously with this report.).

Initial conclusions. The terrorist attacks of September 11 and the enormous and tragic loss of human life and property that accompanied them led to significant new uncertainties in the real estate sector, which was already beginning to feel the brunt of a national economic downturn. Among these uncertainties was how real estate owners would continue to obtain insurance coverage for their assets, particularly those with high rise ("skyline") characteristics. This issue was exacerbated by: 1) the fact that most insurance policies (and the terrorism insurance that has traditionally been a part of them) expire on December 31 of each year, and 2) most secured loans (mortgages) would fall into technical default without some kind of ongoing terrorism insurance.

With no backstop legislation in place, the negative consequences of no terrorism coverage have begun to set in for real estate landlords, and, we believe, ultimately tenants as well. Certain real estate asset types and companies are clearly more affected than others are (Exhibit 7). However, we believe it is possible to draw some broad conclusions. We believe the current lack of terrorism legislation has, and will continue to have several negative effects:

1) Real estate borrowing will likely become more difficult and more expensive. We expect mortgage spreads to rise in response to increased insurance risk, the collateralized mortgage-backed securities (CMBS) market may continue to balk at single loans with trophy/skyline collateral, and REITs will likely increasingly resort more to the (generally) higher spread corporate market.

2) General insurance costs will likely continue to remain higher than pre-9/11 levels (we believe earthquake insurance is already up sharply, with meaningfully higher deductibles). We expect these costs to continue to rise, but to rise less dramatically if a terrorism insurance bill is eventually passed.

3) Building security costs will likely remain higher

4) The absence of suitable insurance coverage will likely affect the general real estate lending market, which could impact real estate valuations, particularly for asset types seen as vulnerable to attack: central business district (CBD) office buildings, certain regional malls, and assets located near sites perceived as risky.

Issue Sensitivity Spectrum

In the event terrorism insurance legislation is ultimately passed, we believe the short-term impacts will be lower insurance and debt costs, providing the most relief to those companies and asset types that were most adversely affected by the current lack of coverage. Given the negative impacts on the real estate industry in just the past 8-10 weeks, we now believe that a bill is more likely today than it would have appeared even four weeks ago. We believe even the passage of a bill and no new attack will still see the real estate industry worse off than pre-9/11, but it is still the best case scenario. In an effort to assess the degree of negative impact, we have outlined the consequences of each of four different scenarios on the industry below. We believe companies in the most sensitive sectors (e.g. BXP, BPO, EOP, VNO, RSE, and SPG) will be the biggest winners in positive scenarios (such as Scenario 1) and the biggest losers in the negative scenarios (Scenario 3). (Current prices: BXP $37, BPO $18, EOP $28, VNO $42, RSE $30, SPG $31.)

Scenario Analysis: Real Estate and REITS

Scenario 1: A bill is in place, no attack occurs. As it pertains to the real estate industry, and with particular focus on the landlord (often time the public landlords are REITs), we believe:

- After rising to exorbitant rates post 9/11 (and becoming unavailable in many circumstances) market rates on new terrorism insurance policies begin to fall. Terrorism insurance again becomes widely available.
- The passage of a bill would eventually see the return of liquidity to mortgage and single asset CMBS markets, particularly those involving higher profile "trophy" assets (e.g. skyline CBD assets).
- Although some asset classes allow for occupancy costs to be billed back to tenants (e.g. commercial and retail), we believe higher insurance costs are effectively shared by landlords and tenants regardless of property type. For this reason, the somewhat lower costs that would likely accompany a terrorism bill would benefit both landlords and tenants.

Please see the important disclosures at the end of this report.

REV_00141223

Potential winners/losers. We believe valuations of companies in the most sensitive sectors already reflect some of the negatives associated with the current lack of easily available terrorism insurance (though they do not appear to reflect any major discount as a result of potential exposure to another terrorist event). The passage of a terror bill would lead to more extensive insurance coverage, and potentially lower insurance and borrowing costs for companies such as BXP, BPO, EOP, VNO, RSE, SPG, etc. Less sensitive companies/sectors that are currently experiencing fewer impacts would benefit, but to a lesser extent.

Scenario 2: No bill is passed, no attack occurs. The absence of any passage of a terrorism bill, even without an additional terror attack, is clearly a negative for the REIT sector. We believe this scenario would lead to:

- A sharp rise in operating expenses to cover extremely high insurance and security costs. Landlords begin to question the ability of insurers to meet future terror claims.
- Some landlords may choose to forego expensive terrorism insurance, which would have ramifications on borrowing conditions:
  1) Borrowers may fall into technical default on secured loans, which could precipitate some adjustment to both terms and rate.
  2) Rating agencies might respond with cuts to credit ratings, making alternative, non-secured borrowing more costly and less accessible.
  3) Construction financing and takeout financing become landlord headaches.

- CMBS liquidity becomes more limited and may even dry up, particularly for those real estate assets perceived as more vulnerable. Initiating new single skyline asset CMBS transactions becomes impossible; rates on multi asset CMBS deals also go up, reflecting higher risks.
- Reduced liquidity in the real estate market negatively impacts real estate valuations, particularly for those assets typically financed with secured debt.
- Banks likely eventually begin originating secured loans, but increasingly seek cross-collateralization or recourse when high profile assets are involved.
- Rental rates slow further than they already have as tenants respond to rising occupancy costs.
- For the tenants, occupancy costs may rise up to or even exceed expense stops. Most affected assets will likely be office/high-rise, or other perceived-to-be-vulnerable properties (e.g. regional malls).

Potential winners/losers. The lack of a terrorism insurance bill (despite the lack of terror attack) would serve to raise operating and borrowing costs as well as cause the most exposed companies to take on more risk by self-insuring. We believe that the values of stocks in the most sensitive sectors only partially reflect these negatives, and could therefore face more multiple contraction if it becomes clear that no affordable terrorism insurance will become available. As in Scenario 1, the less sensitive sectors will also be negatively affected, but to a lesser extent.

Scenario 3: No bill is in place, an attack occurs. This represents the worst scenario for real estate owners. In assessing the impact on the industry (and on REITs specifically), we believe it is necessary to examine the initial and longer term impacts:

- Initial impacts:
  1) There will be a sharp rise in operating costs due to much higher insurance costs (expect tenants to experience higher occupancy costs up to the entire expense stop limitation).
  2) The CMBS market (both single- and multi-asset transactions) likely freezes for all asset types, but particularly for the skyline assets and the asset class targeted in the attack.
  3) Landlords assess the value of continuing with terrorism insurance coverage given the potential inability of insurers to meet future claims.
  4) Secured borrowing rates spike, limiting liquidity in this market.
  5) Non-secured corporate borrowing for REITs is the only remaining alternative, but higher perceived risk drive rates up sharply after rating agencies focus on ratings.
  6) Real estate values fall sharply due to limited insurability and dramatic drop in real estate debt liquidity.
- Longer-term impacts:
  1) Congress ultimately establishes some sort of federal backstop or "Pool Re" program.
  2) This will likely result in the return of some normalcy in the real estate markets, with values appreciating, but operating costs still higher than pre-9/11 levels.

Potential winners/losers. We believe all REITs would experience significant negative short-term valuation impacts if a terror attack were to occur in the absence of any terrorism insurance legislation. Investor fears about further equity losses in the event of future attacks, potentially unavailable terrorism insurance, higher borrowing spreads and the limited availability of debt capital would cause significant multiple contraction. This phenomenon would likely occur most for the most sensitive property sectors. These negative effects would likely be greatly mitigated if the federal government were to quickly enact a terrorism insurance backstop/bailout following the second attack.

Scenario 4: A bill is passed, an attack occurs. Despite the passage of a terrorism bill, whereby there is a federally funded backstop, we believe overall costs of obtaining insurance after an attack will likely rise — particularly for the affected asset type(s). From the landlord's perspective, we believe the impact from this scenario includes:

- Higher property operating expenses
- Higher borrowing costs on debt renewal, as the asset class is seen to be riskier, both in the CMBS and corporate borrowing arena
- Security costs rise again.
- The secured lending market would probably become even more focused on adequate insurance coverage for loan collateral.

Potential winners/losers. The passage of a terrorism insurance bill (and the more extensive, affordable terrorism insurance and debt capital) likely would not prevent some negative valuation impact if another terror attack were to occur. In this case, we believe REITs with skyline and high profile assets would clearly be most impacted, while their lower profile peers would likely be spared. It is worth mentioning, however, that the more sensitive companies would likely be deemed winners in between the passage of the insurance bill and the actual attack.

Banks, Brokers and Asset Managers

Initial Conclusions. We think that investors may be too focused on credit issues (Enron, K-Mart and now Global Crossing) and off-balance sheet disclosures to think about the implications of the passage / non-passage of the terrorism bill. We do not fault them, but we do believe that the outcome of the terrorism bill legislation could have a significant impact on banking and brokerage stocks. A key issue, as we see it, is whether lenders will continue to lend to what are perceived to be high-risk properties if the real estate companies cannot secure adequate insurance protection. Also, if the commercial mortgage-backed market does slow, what does this mean for trading profits for the BIG fixed income players in this area?

In evaluating the possible impact on the stocks in our universe based on the four scenarios, our primary conclusion is that in all scenarios, capital markets based firms seem to fare slightly better than the credit sensitive firms (except if a major terrorist attack does irrevocable damage to the securities industry's infrastructure).

On the other hand, we do think that traditional lending companies face marginal risks if the bill is not passed and another attack occurs. Under this scenario, more properties would be damaged potentially limiting the repayment of those loans to some banks and the insurance industry may become increasingly fragile limiting the effectiveness of current insurance policies. Longer term, credit spreads against commercial real estate would also likely rise, although the positive impact to the income statement would be offset by a slower pace of real estate activity.

According to Betsy Daniels, who is working on picking up the regional banks, banks are thinking through how they want to approach lending in a world without terrorism coverage on property. There is no "one-size-fits-all" approach. The banks can take several paths, ranging from renewing the loan, changing the terms on the loan, asking the borrower to get a terrorism rider, asking the borrower to self-insure for terrorism, or pulling the loan. Banks are choosing what makes sense for them given their business mix and risk appetite and decisions are likely to be made on a loan-by-loan basis. The key point is that the banks are thinking about these issues and are trying to create a game-plan to limit their exposure to further terrorist property destruction.

These issues are more likely to impact the traditional lending companies than the capital markets companies. Construction and commercial real estate loans were 19.5% of total average loans at US commercial banks as of September 30, 2001. At JPM and Citigroup, though, these loans represent just a fraction of overall business. Indeed, based on our analysis, we think that around 0.99% of Citi's total loans are related to domestic real estate, while we believe that 2.27% of JPM's total loans are related to domestic real estate (at the end of 3Q01, latest available data). At the moment, we retain our Neutral rating on JPM and maintain our Outperform on Citigroup.

Within the brokerage sector, we think that Lehman Brothers (LEH, $56, Outperform-V, target $73) and Goldman Sachs (GS, $81, Outperform-V, target $92) are most levered to the commercial mortgage back industry (which would obviously slow if real estate companies were not able to obtain financing at will), ranking second and fourth, respectively, in U.S. public and Rule 144A CMBS (collateralized mortgage backed securities) offerings. However, Goldman is traditionally not a major player in this market (i.e., the company had some big trades at the end of the 2001 that boosted it in the rankings). Separately, Credit Suisse First Boston (a unit of Credit Suisse), ranked first in this CMBS market in 2001. All told, according to Thomson Financial Securities Data, $63.0 billion of CMBS were offered in 2001 (Exhibit 8).

Interest rate impact. Looking at the big picture, we also are intrigued by the possible impact of the passage of the terrorism bill on the treasury market. If the terrorism bill is passed, the Federal Government becomes the reinsurer of terrorism related risks. Would government bondholders demand a terrorism risk free premium? If yes, then would the long-term benchmark risk free rate rise significantly? An increase in the benchmark rate would increase lending costs for all borrowers, which could be a negative for companies with high leverage ratios. Also, if real estate companies (REITS) were not able to secure mortgage financing and had to use the capital markets via straight debt issuance, we actually think that this opportunity could be an interesting one for the capital markets that we cover, particularly firms with a strong presence in the investment grade market.

Scenario Analysis: Banks and Brokers

Scenario 1: A bill is in place, no attack occurs. We believe that the passage of the bill with no incidence of further terrorist attacks in the near future would be a marginal positive for the credit sensitive names like C and JPM. Key to our thinking is government protection would allow lenders to still allocate capital to real estate companies with little residual impact from "event risks" like the tragic events of September 11, 2001. Separately, we believe that this scenario would entail healthier economic growth and stronger equity markets (due to the absence of any external shocks) — a significant positive for the broker/dealers and equity focused asset managers in our universe. In addition, the factors favoring economic growth (lower costs of doing business — specifically, insurance and security costs) would also positively impact the expense lines for all the stocks we cover. However, we do expect a

Please see the important disclosures at the end of this report.

REV_00141226

marginal increase in documentation costs for banks as lending agreements incorporate various terrorism related clauses, and a marginal increase in insurance rates for policyholders.

Potential winners/losers. We think that this scenario would be a marginal positive for all the stocks in our group for the reasons highlighted above. As such, under this scenario, we do feel comfortable reiterating our investment thesis: From a macro perspective, we continue to believe that capital markets firms outpace credit sensitive and fee-based companies. In diversified financials we continue to favor Citigroup (C, $44, Outperform, target $59) over JPMorgan Chase (JPM, $29, Neutral). In the small cap asset management arena, we remain bullish across the board: Affiliated Managers (AMG, $67, Outperform, target $73), BlackRock (BLK, $44, Outperform, target $48), Waddell & Reed (WDR, $30, Outperform, target $35), and Federated Investors (FII, $31, Strong Buy, target $35). Finally, we have a mixed bag on the Arms Dealers. Specifically, we like companies like Investment Technology Group (ITG, $45, Outperform, target $46) (play on cost, speed, globalization, and value-added), while we remain cautious on other names, including Instinet (INET, $7, not rated).

Scenario 2: No bill is passed, no attack occurs. Our second scenario would essentially entail continuation of the status quo (we don't have a terrorism bill and fortunately there have been no more terrorist attacks). As we think that investors in our stocks have not yet focused on these issues, we do not expect any major impact on stock prices. However, we expect companies to spend more on security especially since terrorism related insurance coverage would be more difficult to secure.

Lenders continue to expect insurance against terrorist acts on the credits they extend — either through insurance policy coverage or through borrower self-insurance. Some lenders may look to cash in some of their "bad chips" by charging higher rates or refusing to extend funds to some credits on the grounds that they are not willing to underwrite loans that do not have terrorism related coverage. We believe that lenders may selectively take this approach towards certain credits. We do not expect widespread application, as it would result in the lender self-selecting out of the real estate lending market. Targeted pruning could marginally improve asset quality at some lenders.

Another related development would be a slowdown in some sectors of the CMBS market — especially for securities backed by high profile assets like tall office buildings and big regional malls. As a result we expect real estate firms to borrow funds at the corporate level rather than accessing capital markets through asset backed securities leading to a 20 to 30 basis point increase in their cost of funds. We think that investment banks will look upon this development as an opportunity and would come up with innovative financial products to solve the financing needs of real estate firms.

Potential winners/losers. Given that this scenario entails continuation of the Status Quo and the additional risk of muted revenue growth for the credit sensitive names, we are sticking to our investment theme (as highlighted in scenario 1). However we do want to point out that as in scenario 1, credit sensitive firms with lower credit standards could display higher growth rates than peers who have tighter credit standards.

Scenario 3: No bill is in place, an attack occurs. Our third scenario, which is also our worst case scenario, evaluates the impact of a major terrorist attack in case the terrorism bill has not been passed. As in scenario 4, the development could be a significant negative for firms like GS, MER ($47), and LEH if it leads to another disruption in the nation's capital markets. For the credit sensitive names, we expect major credit losses as a direct result of the attack as most exposures would not be backed by insurance. In addition, the shock to the economy could lead to a deterioration in the overall credit situation, driving both provisions and credit costs materially higher. The shock to the equity markets could also depress earnings at capital markets based firms and equity focused asset managers. The occurrence of another attack would also lead to increased security expenses by businesses.

Potential winners/losers. We believe that credit sensitive names will come under the most pressure under such a scenario. Although we believe that the federal government would intervene to prevent a breakdown of the financial system, we believe that credit sensitive names could experience a "double whammy". Specifically, in addition to the direct credit losses they would experience as a result of the attack, the external shock to the nation's economy would increase credit costs going forward (even if the companies had no exposure to the areas/ businesses directly impacted by the attack). We would expect capital markets firms to outperform other financials, as the rebuilding effort would require a significant amount of capital to be raised. Within asset managers, we believe that fixed income focused firms would outperform their equity focused counterparts.

Scenario 4: A bill is passed, an attack occurs. Irrespective of whether a terrorism bill has been passed, we believe that the initial reaction of the market will be negative for most of the stocks in our coverage universe. The development could be a significant negative for capital markets based firms if it leads to another disruption in the nation's capital markets.

However we do not expect any major credit losses at the credit sensitive firms as a direct result of the attack as most exposures would be backed by insurance. That said the shock to the economy could lead to a deterioration in the overall credit situation, leading to higher credit costs at the firms we cover. In addition, the shock to the equity markets could depress earnings at capital markets based firms and equity focused asset managers. The occurrence of another attack would also lead to higher insurance rates for policyholders and increased security expenses by businesses.

Potential winners/losers. If the attack does not lead to a disruption in the nation's capital markets and equity markets rebound soon after the attack, we believe that capital markets firms will outperform credit sensitive and fee-based companies (as happened after 9/11). We also expect capital markets firms to outperform other financials, as the rebuilding effort would require a significant amount of capital to be raised. We think that the attack could amount to another external shock to the nation's economy, leading to a deterioration in credit that could raise credit costs at Citigroup and JPMorgan Chase. Within the credit sensitive names, we would expect firms with better credit management practices to significantly outperform their peers because of two reasons: 1) they would have pruned their uninsured terrorism risk exposure, and 2) they would also have lower credit costs if the economy were to head into a recession.

The Property/Casualty Sector

As noted in the February 22, 2002, issue of P/C Insurance & Risk Briefing, we believe the equity markets generally do not appear to be discounting in insurers' material risk from terrorism in the absence of a terrorism bill. Nevertheless, we believe many primary commercial lines insurers (and, to a lesser extent, personal lines insurers) retain considerable residual terrorism risk. Therefore, we believe that investors need to reconcile their willingness to accept terrorism risk, other offsetting factors they may find attractive in a stock, and their return requirement.

Initial conclusions. We believe that most primary insurers and some reinsurers cannot adequately measure their exposure aggregations from a hypothetical event. They are only just beginning to gather exposure information, such as employee locations for workers' compensation. Meantime, virtually all primary insurers talk about limiting exposure as much as they can, but they do not provide enough information to determine how a particular insurer would fare under a worst-case scenario. They do not, for example, provide a probable maximum loss estimate (PML) as they ordinarily do with other types of catastrophic risks. Nor are we aware of any insurer taking an across-the-board approach of simply non-renewing policies without terrorism losses excluded.

Insurers imposing exclusions using nonadmitted policy forms are assuming that the ban on exclusions in some states is trumped by their nonadmittance status. There is a slight risk, however, that policyholders and regulators might challenge that interpretation in an effort to broaden available coverage after the fact. We also believe insurers are assuming they can invoke the war exclusion in another attack; however, we assume that issue would ultimately be litigated. Additionally, we believe that the primary exclusions that have been approved may be insufficient to prevent insurer insolvency, especially for insurers that write workers' compensation, group life, and significant amounts of property insurance (Exhibits 9 and 10).

In short, we think investors cannot assess the risk of terrorism in a portfolio of insurance stocks any better than an insurer can assess the terrorism risk in its insurance portfolio. However, investors can control their exposure to risk, by limiting the amount they invest in such stocks to an amount within their risk tolerance from such an event. Accordingly, we are not averse to investing in terrorism-exposed insurance stocks, but we believe investors should not over-concentrate in these stocks. We also believe that investors should require a higher return in exchange for this additional, and unquantifiable, risk. Comparisons to historical valuations should take note of this higher level of risk. We would consider stocks with the same valuation as pre-9/11 as now more "expensive."

Please see the important disclosures at the end of this report.

REV_00141228

This approach to investing is similar to one we would follow for cat-exposed insurers that do not buy earthquake or hurricane reinsurance, although with added uncertainties: 1) we do not know as much about the level of risk for individual insurers as we normally do for other types of catastrophic risks; 2) we know nothing about the overall frequency and severity of terrorism risk.

Scenario Analysis: Property/Casualty Insurers

Scenario 1: A bill is in place, no attack occurs. This is the second-best scenario for short-term earnings and the best case for valuation. Reinsurers and property insurers would have greater certainty about their exposures and could price accordingly.

While rates might not rise as sharply as without a bill, the existence of a federal backstop would remove a large balance sheet vulnerability. Under this scenario, we assume no WTC-size event occurs this year, presumably giving insurers that much time to rebuild surplus — including additional capital-raising. Brokers' earnings upside from commissions and fees might be slightly muted, taking their portion of rates that might not be as sharply higher as they would be without a terror bill. Valuations could probably be higher with a terror bill in place because of the perception of reduced shock-loss risk and volatility. However, since we believe the market is not discounting terrorism risk, the impact could be limited.

Potential Winners/Losers. Our current market-weight position on the brokers would stand. For the commercial primary insurers, this could be a positive, removing the uncertainty. Our position on the reinsurers would also shift toward the positive.

Scenario 2: No bill is passed, no attack occurs. This is the best-case scenario from an earnings perspective in the short term and the second-best scenario from a valuation perspective. It is also the current scenario, and our current market-weight position on the commercial insurance industry reflects this status quo. In our view, this is a positive for reinsurers and brokers and for property insurers on non-customized coverages. Insurers and reinsurers are charging steeper rates for more restricted coverage of an unpredictable risk that under this scenario does not recur this year.

The more prudent insurers are excluding the coverage altogether. Some are offering it as a steeply priced add-on with much tighter limits on what they perceive to be the most exposed properties. Terrorism is a negative for valuation, however, because the risk premium should be higher to cover the uncertainty of another costly attack occurring without a federal backstop in place. We would expect this premium to decline over time, as risk declines.

Potential winners/losers. We think that only the most disciplined commercial insurers and reinsurers with the strongest balance sheets, best ratings and compelling valuations are desirable amid the protracted uncertainty of no federal backstop and no guarantees that terrorists will never again strike with the ferocity of 9/11. We are skeptical that exclusions will remain as firm as they are currently.

Scenario 3: No bill is in place, an attack occurs. Rates likely would soar, we believe, along with demand, but capacity would likely shrink as losses mounted. Earnings, in our view, would be depressed for many large commercial insurers and reinsurers, and net investment income would come under pressure from the likely impact on capital markets in the wake of another attack. The government might step in with some form of emergency funding, with an uncertain and possibly inequitable impact. The capital markets might be reluctant after the second major attack to commit another round of funding. In a second attack, some of the stronger players, in our view, could have impaired balance sheets and have difficulty maintaining their financial strength and credit ratings. A capacity crisis could develop. The post-9/11 measures taken to limit exposures would probably have a minimal effect, because we think those measures would not have had a chance to permeate insurers entire books. The following legal questions could quickly arise under this scenario:

- Was the attack an act of war, and excludable?
- Might states try to force policies written on an excess & surplus lines basis to cover terrorism after the fact?
- Would anyone bear liability exposure?
- Would Congress be more inclined to grant liability relief from terrorism-related events?
- Would foreign insurers and reinsurers doing business in the US follow US laws and practices?

Potential winners/losers. We would expect reinsurance and insurance broker stocks to gain under this scenario and primary insurer stocks to lose. We think reinsurers, which are not subject to state regulation on terrorism coverage exclusions, have generally been reducing their exposures to terror risk faster than primary writers and writing new contracts that offer more limited coverages at high rates. Brokers, again as the intermediaries, would benefit from what we think would be another surge in rates, as well as demand. Primary insurers, in our view, would be much more vulnerable, having achieved limited success in excluding terrorist losses and in finding affordable, effective reinsurance.

Scenario 4: A bill is passed, an attack occurs. This could actually be one of the better scenarios for earnings, again depending on the shape of the bill passed, and third best for valuation. We view this scenario as a net positive. Underwriters would know exactly where their exposures begin and end, and could price and set deductibles, limits and exclusions more accurately. Yet the private market would still bear the insurable portion of the risk.

Potential winners/losers. We assume the impact on insurers and reinsurers would be far more predictable than without a bill—analogous to any other catastrophe (i.e., positive).

Please see the important disclosures at the end of this report.

V = More volatile. We estimate that this stock has more than a 25% chance of a price move (up or down) of more than 25% in a month, based on a quantitative assessment of historical data, or in the analyst's view, it is likely to become materially more volatile over the next 1-12 months compared with the past three years. Stocks with less than one year of trading history are automatically rated as more volatile (unless otherwise noted). We note that securities that we do not currently consider "volatile" can still perform in that manner.

SEC. ___. HUD ACCESS TO INFORMATION IN THE NATIONAL DIRECTORY OF NEW HIRES.

Section 453(j) of the Social Security Act is amended by adding the following new paragraph at the end:

"(7) INFORMATION COMPARISONS AND DISCLOSURE FOR PUBLIC AND ASSISTED HOUSING PROGRAMS.--

"(A) FURNISHING OF INFORMATION BY HUD.--The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall furnish to the Secretary, on a daily basis or at less or more frequent intervals as may be determined by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development in consultation with the Secretary, information in the custody of the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for comparison with information in the National Directory of New Hires, in order to obtain the information in such Directory with respect to individuals who are applying for or participating in any program under the United States Housing Act of 1937, section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959, sections 221(d)(3), 221(d)(5), and 236 of the National Housing Act, section 811 of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act, and section 101 of Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965.

"(B) REQUIREMENT TO SEEK MINIMUM INFORMATION.--The

Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall seek information pursuant to this section only to the extent necessary to verify the income of individuals described in subparagraph (A).

"(C) DUTIES OF THE SECRETARY.--

"(i) INFORMATION DISCLOSURE.--The Secretary, in cooperation with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, shall compare information in the National Directory of New Hires with information in the custody of the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and disclose information in that Directory to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, in accordance with this paragraph, for the purposes specified in this paragraph.

"(ii) CONDITION ON DISCLOSURE.--The Secretary shall make disclosures in accordance with clause (i) only to the extent that the Secretary determines that such disclosures do not interfere with the effective operation of the program under this part.

"(D) USE OF INFORMATION BY HUD.--The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may use information resulting from a data match pursuant to this paragraph only--

"(i) for the purpose of verifying the income of individuals described in subparagraph (A); and

"(ii) after removal of personal identifiers, to conduct analyses of the income reporting of individuals described in subparagraph (A).

"(E) DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION BY HUD.--

"(i) DISCLOSURES PERMITTED.--The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may disclose information resulting from a data match pursuant to this paragraph only to a public housing agency, a private owner, a management agent, a contract administrator, the Inspector General of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and the Attorney General in connection with the administration of a program described in subparagraph (A) and in accordance with data security and control policies established by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development in accordance with safeguards established by the Secretary under subsection (m). Information obtained by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development pursuant to this paragraph may not be made available by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to any person under section 552 of title 5, United States Code.

"(ii) PURPOSE OF DISCLOSURE.--The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may make a disclosure under clause (i) only for the purpose of verifying the income of individuals described in subparagraph (A).

"(iii) RESTRICTION ON REDISCLOSURE.--A person or entity to which information is disclosed under clause (i) may use or disclose such information only as needed for verifying the income of individuals described in subparagraph (A) and only in accordance with data security and control policies established by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development in accordance with safeguards established by the Secretary under subsection (m).

"(F) REIMBURSEMENT OF HHS COSTS.--The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall reimburse the Secretary, in accordance with subsection (k)(3), for the additional costs incurred by the Secretary in furnishing the information requested under this paragraph.

"(G) CONSENT FORM.--As a condition of applying for or participating in any program described in subparagraph (A), the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may require an individual to sign a consent form that authorizes all the information sharing on such individual that is provided for under this paragraph.".

HUD ACCESS TO INFORMATION IN THE NATIONAL DIRECTORY OF NEW HIRES

Summary

Section ___ would make an amendment to section 453(j) of the Social Security Act (42 U. S. C. 653(j)) to authorize HUD and its intermediaries (public housing agencies, owners, management agents, and contract administrators) to have controlled access to the information in the National Directory of New Hires (NDNH) database that is maintained by the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to facilitate accurate verification of the income of the applicants to and tenants in HUD's public and assisted housing programs.

HUD proposes to expand the information that is currently available to HUD and its intermediaries by comparing data provided by the intermediaries to data in the NDNH database, and then providing the results to HUD's intermediaries through HUD's secure information systems. HUD also proposes to use the data from the NDNH database to perform verification of incomes that were reported in the Tenant Rental Assistance Certification System (TRACS) and the Multifamily Tenant Characteristics System (MTCS) as an integral part of its ongoing quality control and monitoring programs. All access to the information in the NDNH database will adhere to strict confidentiality and security policies.

The proposal would also permit HUD to expand existing information consent form requirements for individuals applying for or participating in HUD's public and assisted housing programs by requiring such individuals to sign a consent form that would authorize the sharing of the individuals' income information from the NDNH.

Justification

Section ___ would address a top priority for the Department, which is the reduction of errors and overpayment of subsidy caused by incorrect income determination and rent calculation in public and assisted housing programs. A HUD study ("Quality Control for Rental Assistance Subsidies Determinations" issued by HUD's Office of Policy Development and Research in June 2001) found substantial errors and improper payments in HUD's housing assistance programs caused by improper income and rent determinations. These errors are the basis for multiple material weakness findings in HUD's financial statement audit ("U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Audit of Fiscal Year 2000 Financial Statements" (2001-FO-0003) issued by the HUD IG on March 1, 2000) and is a matter of further serious concern to the Congress and OMB as this is one of only 22 "high risk" areas designated by the General Accounting Office (GAO) ("High-Risk Series - An Update (GAO-01-263) Issued by GAO in January 2001). Both the GAO and HUD's Inspector General have recommended that Congress consider giving HUD access to the information in NDNH database as an important way of resolving these problems in HUD's rental assistance programs (GAO Report issued in September 2000: GAO/HEHS-00-119, "Benefit and Loan Programs, Improved Data Sharing Could Enhance Program Integrity".). The use of the NDNH database can have a substantial impact on reducing errors in tenants' incomes used to calculate rents and determine subsidy payments by facilitating the timely verification of the income of applicants to and tenants in HUD's public and assisted housing programs.

Currently, HUD verifies earned and unearned income data by matching against wage data from the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) in back-end verification. Federal tax information data provided by the IRS is much older than data in the NDNH database and thus less useful for determining tenant's current incomes. Access to information in the NDNH database will allow HUD and its intermediaries to correctly determine income and rents at the time of certification or recertification, rather than a year or two later through the IRS data.

Just spoke with Jennifer. Here's what she would recommend as a rewording in the last few sentences. She's concerned that we "agree" with their assertion that they should not be bound to the committee recommendations since that undercuts our position of all last year. She just thinks it needs a little massaging so it doesn't sound like we're totally giving them that point (even though we are).

In a previous meeting you said that as a function of properly discharging your responsibility as a Senator you needed to reserve the right to reject any name recommended by such a commission. In that same meeting I said that for constitutional reasons the President must likewise reserve the right to look beyond the names recommended by the commission. Thus, while we agree to look to the commission as a source for names, I propose that neither you nor the President be bound to support the Committee recommendations.

Thanks, Brett.

US May Approve More Aid for Kin of Sept 11 Dead (NYTimes)
By DAVID BARSTOW
New York Times, March 5, 2002
After months of criticism from the families of those killed on Sept. 11, the Bush administration is close to a decision on several changes in the Victims Compensation Fund that could result in scores of families' receiving hundreds of thousands of dollars more than the fund's original rules would have allowed.
The new rules would also open the fund to hundreds of additional rescue workers and World Trade Center employees who were injured in the attack, including those who suffered disabling lung ailments.
Administration officials with knowledge of the discussions said several big changes were all but certain to be in the final rules. In the most significant financial adjustment, the amount to spouses and children for noneconomic damages like loss of companionship would go to $100,000 from $50,000.
Some officials in New York and New Jersey have also expressed cautious optimism that the $250,000 payments to cover the pain and suffering of those who died might also be increased, although the final rules do not yet include any such increase.
The new rules would also reduce various deductions that have the potential of cutting awards by hundreds of thousands of dollars. Social Security death benefits for widows would not be deducted under the revised rules, nor would most workers' compensation benefits to surviving spouses, victim advocates have been told by White House officials.
The draft version of the rules said that only civilians injured within 12 hours of the attack were eligible for the fund, but the final rules contemplated by Kenneth R. Feinberg, the fund's special master, would extend that to 72 hours for those who worked at the World Trade Center and would remove the time limit for the uniformed rescue workers who responded to the attack.
Combined, these changes could add hundreds of millions to the final cost of the fund, previously estimated at $6 billion.
The final rules, scheduled to be released this week, are still subject to last-minute change by the White House and by Mr. Feinberg, who was appointed to oversee the fund by Attorney General John Ashcroft.
In an interview yesterday, Mr. Feinberg refused to discuss many of the specifics of the new rules, emphasizing that several crucial details had yet to be decided. But he stressed that new fund rules, some of which were first reported in this week's edition of Newsweek, have been extensively revised or clarified to address as many criticisms as possible from families and their representatives in Congress.
"I want to make it as attractive as possible, and I hope I've done so," he said of the fund. "That is a formidable task when dealing with these families, but I'm trying to make it attractive. That is the goal."

Also under discussion are final rules that would include special protections for the families of illegal immigrants, including written assurances that immigration authorities would not try to penalize their families, according to New York officials who have been monitoring the rules. The original rules had required families to waive their right to sue before filing a claim, but the final rules would let families first obtain a "ballpark" estimate of their award from fund officials before having to make such a decision.

"These proposed modifications are designed primarily with the lower- and middle-income wage earner in mind," Mr. Feinberg said. "I am most concerned in this program with the families at the bottom end."

But the administration and Mr. Feinberg have also made changes to address complaints by powerful interests, from the Association of Trial Lawyers of America to New York politicians, including Gov. George E. Pataki, and the state attorney general, Eliot L. Spitzer.

Mr. Pataki and Mr. Spitzer objected to a proposed rule that would have given families only two hours to present their cases to Mr. Feinberg's hearing officers. That language has been struck, according to several people who have spoken to Mr. Feinberg. The new rules will give families whatever time they need.

Likewise, Leo V. Boyle, president of the trial lawyers group, expressed concerns that the draft rules improperly limited Mr. Feinberg's authority to make awards as he deemed appropriate. The new rules make clear Mr. Feinberg's discretion in several areas, Congressional staff members said.

"There has been a willing and open ear from both the administration and Feinberg to the concerns of both the victims and those who argue their case," said Senator Jon S. Corzine of New Jersey.

The Victims Compensation Fund was established in September as part of emergency legislation to bail out the airline industry. The fund covers families of those who died, and anyone physically injured by the attacks. Those who file claims with the fund are guaranteed payment for their economic and noneconomic losses within 120 days of their formal filing. But they must also waive their right to file lawsuits against the airlines and other potential defendants.

The law gave Mr. Feinberg enormous power over families affected by the disaster. There are no appeals from his awards, and he has broad authority to interpret the regulations. In December, when Mr. Feinberg announced draft rules for the fund, he estimated that, on average, families of those who died would receive awards of $1.6 million, although he cautioned that the law also required him to deduct life insurance and government benefits.

Families and the leaders of victims' groups heaped criticism on the proposed rules, and have since campaigned for dozens of changes by staging protest rallies, meeting with members of Congress and bombarding Mr. Feinberg and the Justice Department with proposed revisions. But by far, their most vehement objections have focused on a single provision: the proposed awards for noneconomic losses, which they have called insulting and degrading.

In meeting after meeting, Mr. Feinberg has steadfastly defended his proposed noneconomic awards, $250,000 per death with an additional $50,000 for each spouse and each dependent. He said he was open to compromise on a host of other fund rules, but he said that the noneconomic awards were unlikely to change.

But in discussions with victims' groups and leaders from New York and New Jersey, Mr. Feinberg and White House officials have signaled they are preparing to double the $50,000 payments. For a mother of two children, that change would increase her family's overall award for noneconomic losses by $150,000, to a total of $550,000.

Mr. Corzine said that based on his recent conversations with the White House he was hopeful that the proposed $250,000 award would be increased, perhaps substantially.

By some calculations, the combination of higher noneconomic awards and reduced deductions could result in average awards as much as $200,000 higher than those previously projected.

Yesterday afternoon, in a meeting with 50 or so victims and relatives, Mr. Feinberg described several revisions that would greatly expand the number of injured people eligible for awards.

Under the draft rules, a person had to have been injured within 12 hours of the attacks and treated by a doctor within 24 hours. Rescue and recovery workers were covered if their injury was sustained within 96 hours of the attacks. In any event, victims had to have "contemporaneous" medical records documenting the injury.

But the final rules, Mr. Feinberg said, increase the limit for civilians to 72 hours from 12 hours. The 96- hour limit for rescue workers would be eliminated altogether. Even those rescue workers who waited weeks to seek medical care would be eligible, so long as their injury resulted in a disability. What's more, he said, the final rules would eliminate the requirement for contemporaneous medical records.

"If you didn't get a record right away, that's O.K. as long as you eventually got the record," he said. The audience applauded enthusiastically.

The Honorable John J. LaFalce
Ranking Member
Committee on Financial Services
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear John:

Thank you for your letter of February 28 regarding the Administration's views on deposit insurance reform.

The Administration applauds the House Financial Services Committee's efforts to move forward with this important issue. We support several provisions of H.R. 3717 that would accomplish objectives consistent with the recommendations that Assistant Secretary Bair outlined in testimony last year and as re-affirmed in the President's 2003 Budget. Merging the bank and thrift insurance funds would improve the system's capacity to diversify its risks. Allowing the insurance fund reserve ratio to fluctuate within a range and eliminating triggers that could cause sharp changes in premiums would reduce the pricing structure's pro-cyclical bias. Improving the FDIC's premium-setting authority should ensure that institutions with rapid insured deposit growth appropriately compensate the fund while taking into account the past contributions of many institutions to build insurance fund reserves.

However, the Administration continues to believe that the deposit insurance coverage level should remain unchanged. There is no evidence that an increase in the coverage level would promote competition or materially improve the ability of community banks to obtain funds. An increase in coverage would primarily benefit high net worth individuals and do little for the great majority of savers, who have deposit balances far below the current coverage limit. For those with substantial deposits, ample opportunities already exist to obtain FDIC coverage equal to several multiples of $100,000. Moreover, raising coverage could weaken market discipline and increase risk to the FDIC and, ultimately, taxpayers.

Thank you again for writing. We look forward to working with the Congress, the FDIC, and others in the coming year to achieve a stronger and fairer deposit insurance system.

Sincerely,

Paul H. O'Neill

The Honorable Michael G. Oxley
Chairman
Committee on Financial Services
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mike:

Enclosed is my response to a letter from John LaFalce asking for the Administration's views on deposit insurance reform, including higher coverage limits.

As we discussed at lunch recently, I applaud your efforts to move forward with deposit insurance reform. Several provisions of H.R. 3717 would advance objectives that we strongly support. Nonetheless, the Administration continues to believe that the deposit insurance coverage level should remain unchanged.

We look forward to working with you, the Committee, the Congress, and the FDIC to reach a consensus on a reform package that will make our deposit insurance system stronger and fairer.

Sincerely,

Paul H. O'Neill

107th CONGRESS

2d Session

H. R. 3717

To reform the Federal deposit insurance system, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

February 12, 2002

Mr. BACHUS (for himself, Mr. OXLEY, Mr. GILLMOR, Mr. LEACH, Mrs. ROUKEMA, Mr. ROYCE, Mr. NEY, Mr. KING, Mr. WELDON of Florida, Mr. RILEY, Mr. JONES of North Carolina, Mr. MANZULLO, Mr. TIBERI, Mrs. BIGGERT, Mr. THUNE, and Ms. HART) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Financial Services

A BILL

To reform the Federal deposit insurance system, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2002'.

SEC. 2. MERGING THE BIF AND SAIF.

(a) IN GENERAL-

(1) MERGER- The Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund shall be merged into the Deposit Insurance Fund.

(2) DISPOSITION OF ASSETS AND LIABILITIES- All assets and liabilities of the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund shall be transferred to the Deposit Insurance Fund.

(3) NO SEPARATE EXISTENCE- The separate existence of the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund shall cease on the effective date of the merger thereof under this section.

(b) REPEAL OF OUTDATED MERGER PROVISION- Section 2704 of the Deposit Insurance Funds Act of 1996 (12 U.S.C. 1821 note) is repealed.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE- This section shall take effect on the first day of the first calendar quarter that begins after the end of the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. INCREASE IN DEPOSIT INSURANCE COVERAGE.

(a) IN GENERAL- Section 11(a)(1) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1821(a)(1)) is amended--

(1) by striking subparagraph (B) and inserting the following new subparagraph:

`(B) NET AMOUNT OF INSURED DEPOSIT- The net amount due to any depositor at an insured depository institution shall not exceed the standard maximum deposit insurance amount as determined in accordance with subparagraphs (C), (D), (E) and (F) and paragraph (3).'; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subparagraphs:

`(E) STANDARD MAXIMUM DEPOSIT INSURANCE AMOUNT DEFINED- For purposes of this Act, the term `standard maximum deposit insurance amount' means--

`(i) until the end of the first calendar quarter that ends on or after the end of the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2002, $100,000; and `(ii) after the end of the calendar quarter referred to in clause (i), $130,000, adjusted as provided under subparagraph (F).

`(F) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT-

`(i) IN GENERAL- As of January 1, 2010, and the 1st day of each subsequent 10-year period, the standard maximum deposit insurance amount applicable to any depositor at an insured depository institution shall be increased by the product of--

`(I) the amount described in subparagraph (E)(ii); and

`(II) the cost of living adjustment determined under section 1(f)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 at the beginning of each such 10-year period, in accordance with clause (ii).

`(ii) RULE OF APPLICATION- Section 1(f)(3)(B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall be applied, for purposes of clause (i), by substituting `calendar year 2002' for `calendar year 1992'.

`(iii) ROUNDING- If the amount determined under clause (ii) for any period is not a multiple of $10,000, the amount so determined shall be rounded to the nearest $10,000 that is less than the amount so determined.

`(iv) PUBLICATION- Before the end of the 30-day period beginning on the date the Board of Directors determines under clause (i) that the standard maximum insurance amount applicable to any depositor has increased, the Board of Directors shall publish in the Federal Register the maximum net amount which may be due to any depositor at an insured depository institution as so determined.'.

(b) DOUBLING OF DEPOSIT INSURANCE FOR CERTAIN RETIREMENT ACCOUNTS- Section 11(a)(3)(A) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1921(a)(3)(A)) is amended by striking `$100,000' and inserting `2 times the standard maximum deposit insurance amount (as determined under paragraph (1))'.

(c) INCREASED INSURANCE COVERAGE FOR MUNICIPAL DEPOSITS- Section 11(a)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1821(a)(2)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

`(C) MUNICIPAL DEPOSITORS-

`(i) IN GENERAL- Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), the deposits of in-State municipal depositors at an insured depository institution shall be insured in an aggregate amount not to exceed the total equity capital of the institution.

`(ii) DEFINITIONS- In this subparagraph--

`(I) the term `in-State municipal depositor' means a municipal depositor that is located in the same State as the office or branch of the insured depository institution at which the deposits of that depositor are held; and

`(II) the term `municipal depositor' means a depositor described in any of clauses (i) through (v) of subparagraph (A).'.

(d) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT RELATING TO INSURANCE OF TRUST FUNDS- Paragraphs (1) and (3) of section 7(i)(1) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(i)) are each amended by striking `$100,000' and inserting `the standard maximum deposit insurance amount (as determined under section 11(a)(1))'.

(e) OTHER TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS-

(1) Section 11(a)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1821(a)(2)) is amended by striking `$100,000' the first place such term appears and all that follows through the period at the end and inserting `the standard maximum deposit insurance amount per account.'.

(2) Section 11(m)(6) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1821(m)(6)) is amended by striking `$100,000' and inserting `an amount equal to the standard maximum deposit insurance amount'.

(3) Section 18(a)(1)(B) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1828(a)(1)(B)) is amended by striking `$100,000' and inserting `the standard maximum deposit insurance amount in effect at the time'.

(4) Section 43(d) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1831t(d)) is amended by striking `$100,000' and inserting `an amount equal to the standard maximum deposit insurance amount'.

(5) Section 6 of the International Banking Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3104(b)) is amended--

(A) by striking `$100,000' each place such term appears and inserting `an amount equal to the standard maximum deposit insurance amount'; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

`(e) STANDARD MAXIMUM DEPOSIT INSURANCE AMOUNT DEFINED- For purposes of this section, the term `standard maximum deposit insurance amount' means the amount of the maximum amount of deposit insurance as determined under section 11(a)(1) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.'.

(f) CONFORMING CHANGE TO SHARE INSURANCE FUND-

(1) IN GENERAL- Section 207(k) of the Federal Credit Union Act (12 U.S.C. 1787(k)) is amended--

(A) in paragraph (1), by striking `$100,000.' and inserting `the standard maximum share insurance amount, as determined in accordance with paragraph (4).'; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

`(4) STANDARD MAXIMUM SHARE INSURANCE AMOUNT DEFINED- For purposes of this Act, the term `standard maximum share insurance amount' means--

`(A) until the end of the first calendar quarter that ends on or after the end of the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2002, $100,000; and

`(B) after the end of the calendar quarter referred to in clause (i), $130,000, adjusted as provided under paragraph (5).

`(5) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT-

`(A) IN GENERAL- As of January 1, 2010, and the 1st day of each subsequent 10-year period, the standard maximum share insurance amount applicable to any insured account shall be increased by the product of--

`(i) the amount described in subparagraph (4)(B); and

`(ii) the cost of living adjustment determined under section 1(f)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 at the beginning of each such 10-year period, in accordance with subparagraph (B).

`(B) RULE OF APPLICATION- Section 1(f)(3)(B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall be applied, for purposes of subparagraph (A), by substituting `calendar year 2002' for `calendar year 1992'.

`(C) ROUNDING- If the amount determined under subparagraph (B) for any period is not a multiple of $10,000, the amount so determined shall be rounded to the nearest $10,000 that is less than the amount so determined.

`(D) PUBLICATION- Not later than January 15 of the 1st year of each 10-year period referred to in clause (ii), the Board shall publish in the Federal Register the maximum net amount which may be due with respect to any insured account during such 10-year period.'.

(2) DOUBLING OF SHARE INSURANCE FOR CERTAIN RETIREMENT ACCOUNTS- Section 107(k)(3) of the Federal Credit Union Act (12 U.S.C. 1787(k)(3)) is amended by striking `$100,000' and inserting `2 times the standard maximum share insurance amount (as determined under paragraph (1))'.

(3) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT- Section 11(k)(2)(A) of the Federal Credit Union Act (12 U.S.C. 1787(k)(2)(A)) is amended by striking `$100,000' and inserting `the standard maximum share insurance amount (as determined under paragraph (1))'.

SEC. 4. EXPANDED INVESTMENTS AUTHORIZED FOR DEPOSIT INSURANCE FUND.

Section 13(a)(1) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1823(a)(1)) is amended by striking `shall be invested' and all that follows through the period and inserting `shall be invested. Such investments shall be limited to the following types of investments:

`(A) Obligations of the United States or any agency of the United States.

`(B) Obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States.

`(C) Such other comparable obligations as the Secretary of the Treasury specifically authorizes upon the Secretary's own initiative or at the request of the Chairperson of the Board of Directors.'.

SEC. 5. REPEAL OF SPECIAL RULE RELATING TO MINIMUM ASSESSMENTS.

Subsection (b)(2) of section 7 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)(2)) is amended--

(1) by striking subparagraphs (B), (E), and (F); and

(2) by redesignating subparagraphs (C), (G), and (H) as subparagraphs (B), (C), and (D), respectively.

SEC. 6. REPEAL OF FREE DEPOSIT INSURANCE.

Section 7(b)(2)(A) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)(2)(A)) is amended--

(1) by striking clauses (iii) and (v); and

(2) by redesignating clause (iv) as clause (iii).

SEC. 7. REPLACEMENT OF FIXED DESIGNATED RESERVE RATIO WITH RESERVE RANGE.

(a) IN GENERAL- Section 7(b)(3) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

`(3) DESIGNATED RESERVE RATIO-

`(A) ESTABLISHMENT- Before the beginning of each calendar year, the Board of Directors shall designate, by regulation after opportunity for comment, the reserve ratio applicable for such year.

`(B) RANGE- The reserve ratio designated by the Board of Directors for any year--

`(i) may not exceed 1.5 percent of estimated insured deposits; and `(ii) may not be less than 1.0 percent of estimated insured deposits.

`(C) FACTORS- In designating a reserve ratio for any year, the Board of Directors shall--

`(i) take into account the risk of losses to the deposit insurance fund in such year and future years, based on an analysis of historic experience and potential losses from identifiable insured depository institutions that are in a troubled condition (as defined by the Corporation);

`(ii) take into account economic conditions generally affecting insured depository institutions so as to allow the designated reserve ratio to increase during more favorable economic conditions and to decrease during less favorable economic conditions, notwithstanding the increased risks of loss that may exist during such less favorable conditions;

`(iii) seek to prevent sharp swings in the assessment rates for insured depository institutions; and

`(iv) take into account such other factors as the Board of Directors may determine to be appropriate, consistent with the requirements of this subparagraph.

`(D) PUBLICATION OF PROPOSED CHANGE IN RATIO- In soliciting comment on any proposed change in the designated reserve ratio in accordance with subparagraph (A), the Board of Directors shall include in the published proposal a detailed analysis of the data and projections on which the proposal is based.'.

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS-

(1) Paragraph (3) of section 3(y) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813(y)) is amended to read as follows:

`(3) DESIGNATED RESERVE RATIO- The term `designated reserve ratio' means the reserve ratio designated by the Board of Directors for each year in accordance with section 7(b)(3).'.

(2) Section 7(b)(2)(A) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)(2)(A)) is amended by striking clause (iii) (as so redesignated by section 6 of this Act).

SEC. 8. REQUIREMENTS APPLICABLE TO THE RISK-BASED ASSESSMENT SYSTEM.

Section 7(b)(1) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)(1)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraphs:

`(E) INFORMATION CONCERNING RISK OF LOSS AND ECONOMIC CONDITIONS-

`(i) SOURCES OF INFORMATION- For purposes of determining risk of losses at insured depository institutions and economic conditions generally affecting depository institutions, the Corporation shall collect information from appropriate sources, including reports of condition, inspection reports, and other information from all Federal banking agencies, any information available from State bank supervisors, State insurance and securities regulators, the Securities and Exchange Commission (including information described in section 35), Secretary of the Treasury, Commodity Futures Trading Commission, Farm Credit Administration, Federal Trade Commission, any Federal reserve bank or Federal home loan bank, and other regulators of financial institutions, and any information available from credit rating entities, and other private economic and business analysts.

`(ii) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION- No provision of this paragraph shall be construed as providing any new authority for the Corporation to require submission of information by insured depository institutions to the Corporation.

`(F) MODIFICATIONS TO THE RISK-BASED ASSESSMENT SYSTEM ALLOWED ONLY AFTER NOTICE AND COMMENT- In revising or modifying the risk-based assessment system at any time after the date of the enactment of the Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2002, the Board of Directors may implement such revisions or modification in final form only after notice and opportunity for comment.'.

SEC. 9. REFUNDS, REBATES, AND CREDITS FROM DEPOSIT INSURANCE FUND.

Subsection (e) of section 7 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(e)) is amended to read as follows:

`(e) REFUNDS, REBATES, AND CREDITS-

`(1) REFUNDS OF OVERPAYMENTS- In the case of any payment of an assessment by an insured depository institution in excess of the amount due to the Corporation, the Corporation may--

`(A) refund the amount of the excess payment to the insured depository institution; or `(B) credit such excess amount toward the payment of subsequent semiannual assessments until such credit is exhausted.

`(2) REBATES OF EXCESS AMOUNTS IN DEPOSIT INSURANCE FUND-

`(A) FUND BALANCE IN EXCESS OF 1.5 PERCENT OF ESTIMATED INSURED DEPOSITS- Whenever the balance in the Deposit Insurance Fund equals or exceeds the amount equal to 1.5 percent of estimated insured deposits, the Corporation shall rebate the amount in the Fund in excess of the amount required to maintain a balance at the designated reserve ratio in effect at such time, to insured depository institutions in such manner and on such conditions as the Corporation shall prescribe by regulation, after notice and opportunity for comment.

`(B) FUND BALANCE IN EXCESS OF 1.4 PERCENT OF ESTIMATED INSURED DEPOSITS- Whenever the balance in the Deposit Insurance Fund is equal to or greater than the amount equal to 1.4 percent of estimated insured deposits and less than 1.5 percent of such deposits, the Corporation may credit or rebate the amount in excess of the amount required to maintain a balance at the designated reserve ratio in effect at such time, to insured depository institutions in such manner and on such conditions as the Corporation shall prescribe by regulation, after notice and opportunity for comment.

`(3) TRANSITIONAL CREDIT FOR CERTAIN DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS-

`(A) IN GENERAL- The individual transition credit amount (as determined under subparagraph (C)) for each eligible depository institution shall be available for credit by the Corporation against assessments under subsection (b) on the eligible depository institution which become due for semiannual assessment periods beginning after the effective date of the merger of the Bank Insurance Fund and Savings Association Insurance Fund into the Deposit Insurance Fund.

`(B) ELIGIBLE DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS DEFINED- For purposes of this paragraph, the term `eligible depository institution' means an insured depository institution that--

`(i) received, in the most recent examination of the institution before the effective date of the merger of the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund, a CAMEL composite rating of 1 or 2 under the Uniform Financial Institutions Rating System, or an equivalent rating under a comparable rating system; and

`(ii) paid assessments (or any predecessor of which paid assessments) under this section for any semiannual assessment period beginning after December 31, 1989, and ending before January 1, 1997.

`(C) AMOUNT OF INDIVIDUAL TRANSITION CREDIT- The individual transition credit amount for each eligible depository institution shall be the amount that bears the same ratio to the total transition credit amount as the ratio of the market share of insured deposits of the eligible depository institution as of December 31, 1996 (including all predecessors of such insured depository institution in existence on such date) bears to the market share of insured deposits of all depository institutions (as of such date) (including all predecessors of such institutions in existence on such date).

`(D) TOTAL TRANSITION CREDIT AMOUNT- For purposes of subparagraph (C), the term `total transition credit amount' means that portion of the balance in the Deposit Insurance Fund (as of the effective date of the merger of the Bank Insurance Fund and Savings Association Insurance Fund) that is equal to income earned by the Fund on premiums paid less expenses (as of the effective date of such merger).

`(E) PREDECESSOR DEFINED- For purposes of this paragraph, the term `predecessor', when used with respect to any insured depository institution, includes any other insured depository institution acquired by or merged with such insured depository institution.'.

SEC. 10. DEPOSIT INSURANCE FUND RESTORATION PLANS.

Section 7(b)(3) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1917(b)(3)) (as amended by section 7(a) of this Act) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

`(F) DIF RESTORATION PLANS-

`(i) IN GENERAL- Whenever--

`(I) the actual ratio of the balance in the Deposit Insurance Fund to the estimated insured deposits is less than 0.1 percent greater than the minimum amount permitted for the designated reserve ratio (or is projected to fall to a ratio that is less than 0.1 percent greater than such minimum designated reserve ratio) in any calendar year; and

`(II) the actual ratio of the balance in such Fund to estimated insured deposits has failed to meet or exceed the designated reserve ratio for the 2 preceding calendar years, the Corporation shall immediately establish and implement a Deposit Insurance Fund Restoration Plan that will ensure that the Fund has, or will have within a reasonable period of time, adequate reserves for all projected contingencies and that the actual reserve ratio will be maintained at not less than minimum amount permitted for the designated reserve ratio, on such basis and after taking into account such factors as the Corporation determines to be appropriate.

`(ii) TRANSPARENCY- Not more than 90 days after the Corporation establishes and implements a restoration plan under clause (i), the Corporation shall publish in the Federal Register a detailed analysis of the factors considered and the basis for the actions taken with regard to the plan.'.

SEC. 11. STUDIES OF FDIC ADMINISTRATIVE STRUCTURE AND EXPENSES AND CERTAIN ACTIVITIES AND FURTHER POSSIBLE CHANGES TO DEPOSIT INSURANCE SYSTEM.

(a) STUDY BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL-

(1) STUDY REQUIRED- The Comptroller General shall conduct a study of the following issues concerning the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation:

(A) The efficiency and effectiveness of the administration of the prompt corrective action program under section 38 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, including the degree of effectiveness of the Corporation in identifying troubled depository institutions and the degree of accuracy of the risk assessments made by the Corporation.

(B) The appropriateness of the administrative structure of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for the mission of the Corporation, taking into account the current size and complexity of the business of insured depository institutions (as such term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act).

(C) The extent to which the administrative structure contributes to or reduces administrative inefficiencies that increase administrative costs and the effectiveness of internal controls on administrative costs.

(2) REPORT TO THE CONGRESS- The Comptroller General shall submit a report to the Congress before the end of the 1-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act containing the findings and conclusions of the Comptroller General with respect to the study required under paragraph (1) together with such recommendations for legislative or administrative action as the Comptroller General may determine to be appropriate.

(b) INTERNAL STUDY BY THE FDIC-

(1) STUDY REQUIRED- Concurrently with the study required to be conducted by the Comptroller General under subsection (a), the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall conduct an internal study of the same conditions and factors included in the study under subsection (a).

(2) REPORT TO THE CONGRESS- The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall submit a report to the Congress before the end of the 1-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act containing the findings and conclusions of the Corporation with respect to the study required under paragraph (1) together with such recommendations for legislative or administrative action as the Board of Directors of the Corporation may determine to be appropriate.

(c) STUDY OF FURTHER POSSIBLE CHANGES TO DEPOSIT INSURANCE SYSTEM-

(1) STUDY REQUIRED- The Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the National Credit Union Administration Board shall each conduct a study of the following:

(A) The feasibility of establishing a voluntary deposit insurance system for deposits in excess of the maximum amount of deposit insurance for any depositor and the potential benefits and the potential adverse consequences that may result from the establishment of any such system.

(B) The feasibility of privatizing all deposit insurance at insured depository institutions and insured credit unions.

(2) REPORT- Before the end of the 1-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the National Credit Union Administration Board shall each submit a report to the Congress on the study required under paragraph (1) containing the findings and conclusions of the reporting agency together with such recommendations for legislative or administrative changes as the agency may determine to be appropriate.

US May Approve More Aid for Kin of Sept 11 Dead (NYTimes)
By DAVID BARSTOW
New York Times, March 5, 2002
After months of criticism from the families of those killed on Sept. 11, the Bush administration is close to a decision on several changes in the Victims Compensation Fund that could result in scores of families' receiving hundreds of thousands of dollars more than the fund's original rules would have allowed.
The new rules would also open the fund to hundreds of additional rescue workers and World Trade Center employees who were injured in the attack, including those who suffered disabling lung ailments.
Administration officials with knowledge of the discussions said several big changes were all but certain to be in the final rules. In the most significant financial adjustment, the amount to spouses and children for noneconomic damages like loss of companionship would go to $100,000 from $50,000.
Some officials in New York and New Jersey have also expressed cautious optimism that the $250,000 payments to cover the pain and suffering of those who died might also be increased, although the final rules do not yet include any such increase.
The new rules would also reduce various deductions that have the potential of cutting awards by hundreds of thousands of dollars. Social Security death benefits for widows would not be deducted under the revised rules, nor would most workers' compensation benefits to surviving spouses, victim advocates have been told by White House officials.
The draft version of the rules said that only civilians injured within 12 hours of the attack were eligible for the fund, but the final rules contemplated by Kenneth R. Feinberg, the fund's special master, would extend that to 72 hours for those who worked at the World Trade Center and would remove the time limit for the uniformed rescue workers who responded to the attack.
Combined, these changes could add hundreds of millions to the final cost of the fund, previously estimated at $6 billion.
The final rules, scheduled to be released this week, are still subject to last-minute change by the White House and by Mr. Feinberg, who was appointed to oversee the fund by Attorney General John Ashcroft.
In an interview yesterday, Mr. Feinberg refused to discuss many of the specifics of the new rules, emphasizing that several crucial details had yet to be decided. But he stressed that new fund rules, some of which were first reported in this week's edition of Newsweek, have been extensively revised or clarified to address as many criticisms as possible from families and their representatives in Congress.
"I want to make it as attractive as possible, and I hope I've done so," he said of the fund. "That is a formidable task when dealing with these families, but I'm trying to make it attractive. That is the goal."

Also under discussion are final rules that would include special protections for the families of illegal immigrants, including written assurances that immigration authorities would not try to penalize their families, according to New York officials who have been monitoring the rules. The original rules had required families to waive their right to sue before filing a claim, but the final rules would let families first obtain a "ballpark" estimate of their award from fund officials before having to make such a decision.

"These proposed modifications are designed primarily with the lower- and middle-income wage earner in mind," Mr. Feinberg said. "I am most concerned in this program with the families at the bottom end."

But the administration and Mr. Feinberg have also made changes to address complaints by powerful interests, from the Association of Trial Lawyers of America to New York politicians, including Gov. George E. Pataki, and the state attorney general, Eliot L. Spitzer.

Mr. Pataki and Mr. Spitzer objected to a proposed rule that would have given families only two hours to present their cases to Mr. Feinberg's hearing officers. That language has been struck, according to several people who have spoken to Mr. Feinberg. The new rules will give families whatever time they need.

Likewise, Leo V. Boyle, president of the trial lawyers group, expressed concerns that the draft rules improperly limited Mr. Feinberg's authority to make awards as he deemed appropriate. The new rules make clear Mr. Feinberg's discretion in several areas, Congressional staff members said.

"There has been a willing and open ear from both the administration and Feinberg to the concerns of both the victims and those who argue their case," said Senator Jon S. Corzine of New Jersey.

The Victims Compensation Fund was established in September as part of emergency legislation to bail out the airline industry. The fund covers families of those who died, and anyone physically injured by the attacks. Those who file claims with the fund are guaranteed payment for their economic and noneconomic losses within 120 days of their formal filing. But they must also waive their right to file lawsuits against the airlines and other potential defendants.

The law gave Mr. Feinberg enormous power over families affected by the disaster. There are no appeals from his awards, and he has broad authority to interpret the regulations. In December, when Mr. Feinberg announced draft rules for the fund, he estimated that, on average, families of those who died would receive awards of $1.6 million, although he cautioned that the law also required him to deduct life insurance and government benefits.

Families and the leaders of victims' groups heaped criticism on the proposed rules, and have since campaigned for dozens of changes by staging protest rallies, meeting with members of Congress and bombarding Mr. Feinberg and the Justice Department with proposed revisions. But by far, their most vehement objections have focused on a single provision: the proposed awards for noneconomic losses, which they have called insulting and degrading.

In meeting after meeting, Mr. Feinberg has steadfastly defended his proposed noneconomic awards, $250,000 per death with an additional $50,000 for each spouse and each dependent. He said he was open to compromise on a host of other fund rules, but he said that the noneconomic awards were unlikely to change.

But in discussions with victims' groups and leaders from New York and New Jersey, Mr. Feinberg and White House officials have signaled they are preparing to double the $50,000 payments. For a mother of two children, that change would increase her family's overall award for noneconomic losses by $150,000, to a total of $550,000.

Mr. Corzine said that based on his recent conversations with the White House he was hopeful that the proposed $250,000 award would be increased, perhaps substantially.

By some calculations, the combination of higher noneconomic awards and reduced deductions could result in average awards as much as $200,000 higher than those previously projected.

Yesterday afternoon, in a meeting with 50 or so victims and relatives, Mr. Feinberg described several revisions that would greatly expand the number of injured people eligible for awards.

Under the draft rules, a person had to have been injured within 12 hours of the attacks and treated by a doctor within 24 hours. Rescue and recovery workers were covered if their injury was sustained within 96 hours of the attacks. In any event, victims had to have "contemporaneous" medical records documenting the injury.

But the final rules, Mr. Feinberg said, increase the limit for civilians to 72 hours from 12 hours. The 96- hour limit for rescue workers would be eliminated altogether. Even those rescue workers who waited weeks to seek medical care would be eligible, so long as their injury resulted in a disability. What's more, he said, the final rules would eliminate the requirement for contemporaneous medical records.

"If you didn't get a record right away, that's O.K. as long as you eventually got the record," he said. The audience applauded enthusiastically.

US May Approve More Aid for Kin of Sept 11 Dead (NYTimes)
By DAVID BARSTOW
New York Times, March 5, 2002
After months of criticism from the families of those killed on Sept. 11, the Bush administration is close to a decision on several changes in the Victims Compensation Fund that could result in scores of families' receiving hundreds of thousands of dollars more than the fund's original rules would have allowed.
The new rules would also open the fund to hundreds of additional rescue workers and World Trade Center employees who were injured in the attack, including those who suffered disabling lung ailments.
Administration officials with knowledge of the discussions said several big changes were all but certain to be in the final rules. In the most significant financial adjustment, the amount to spouses and children for noneconomic damages like loss of companionship would go to $100,000 from $50,000.
Some officials in New York and New Jersey have also expressed cautious optimism that the $250,000 payments to cover the pain and suffering of those who died might also be increased, although the final rules do not yet include any such increase.
The new rules would also reduce various deductions that have the potential of cutting awards by hundreds of thousands of dollars. Social Security death benefits for widows would not be deducted under the revised rules, nor would most workers' compensation benefits to surviving spouses, victim advocates have been told by White House officials.
The draft version of the rules said that only civilians injured within 12 hours of the attack were eligible for the fund, but the final rules contemplated by Kenneth R. Feinberg, the fund's special master, would extend that to 72 hours for those who worked at the World Trade Center and would remove the time limit for the uniformed rescue workers who responded to the attack.

Combined, these changes could add hundreds of millions to the final cost of the fund, previously estimated at $6 billion.

The final rules, scheduled to be released this week, are still subject to last-minute change by the White House and by Mr. Feinberg, who was appointed to oversee the fund by Attorney General John Ashcroft.

In an interview yesterday, Mr. Feinberg refused to discuss many of the specifics of the new rules, emphasizing that several crucial details had yet to be decided. But he stressed that new fund rules, some of which were first reported in this week's edition of Newsweek, have been extensively revised or clarified to address as many criticisms as possible from families and their representatives in Congress.

"I want to make it as attractive as possible, and I hope I've done so," he said of the fund. "That is a formidable task when dealing with these families, but I'm trying to make it attractive. That is the goal."

Also under discussion are final rules that would include special protections for the families of illegal immigrants, including written assurances that immigration authorities would not try to penalize their families, according to New York officials who have been monitoring the rules. The original rules had required families to waive their right to sue before filing a claim, but the final rules would let families first obtain a "ballpark" estimate of their award from fund officials before having to make such a decision.

"These proposed modifications are designed primarily with the lower- and middle-income wage earner in mind," Mr. Feinberg said. "I am most concerned in this program with the families at the bottom end."

But the administration and Mr. Feinberg have also made changes to address complaints by powerful interests, from the Association of Trial Lawyers of America to New York politicians, including Gov. George E. Pataki, and the state attorney general, Eliot L. Spitzer.

Mr. Pataki and Mr. Spitzer objected to a proposed rule that would have given families only two hours to present their cases to Mr. Feinberg's hearing officers. That language has been struck, according to several people who have spoken to Mr. Feinberg. The new rules will give families whatever time they need.

Likewise, Leo V. Boyle, president of the trial lawyers group, expressed concerns that the draft rules improperly limited Mr. Feinberg's authority to make awards as he deemed appropriate. The new rules make clear Mr. Feinberg's discretion in several areas, Congressional staff members said.

"There has been a willing and open ear from both the administration and Feinberg to the concerns of both the victims and those who argue their case," said Senator Jon S. Corzine of New Jersey.

The Victims Compensation Fund was established in September as part of emergency legislation to bail out the airline industry. The fund covers families of those who died, and anyone physically injured by the attacks. Those who file claims with the fund are guaranteed payment for their economic and noneconomic losses within 120 days of their formal filing. But they must also waive their right to file lawsuits against the airlines and other potential defendants.

The law gave Mr. Feinberg enormous power over families affected by the disaster. There are no appeals from his awards, and he has broad authority to interpret the regulations. In December, when Mr. Feinberg announced draft rules for the fund, he estimated that, on average, families of those who died would receive awards of $1.6 million, although he cautioned that the law also required him to deduct life insurance and government benefits.

Families and the leaders of victims' groups heaped criticism on the proposed rules, and have since campaigned for dozens of changes by staging protest rallies, meeting with members of Congress and bombarding Mr.

Feinberg and the Justice Department with proposed revisions. But by far, their most vehement objections have focused on a single provision: the proposed awards for noneconomic losses, which they have called insulting and degrading.

In meeting after meeting, Mr. Feinberg has steadfastly defended his proposed noneconomic awards, $250,000 per death with an additional $50,000 for each spouse and each dependent. That language has been struck, according to several people who have spoken to Mr. Feinberg. The new rules will give families whatever time they need.

Likewise, Leo V. Boyle, president of the trial lawyers group, expressed concerns that the draft rules improperly limited Mr. Feinberg's authority to make awards as he deemed appropriate. The new rules make clear Mr. Feinberg's discretion in several areas, Congressional staff members said.

"There has been a willing and open ear from both the administration and Feinberg to the concerns of both the victims and those who argue their case," said Senator Jon S. Corzine of New Jersey.

The Victims Compensation Fund was established in September as part of emergency legislation to bail out the airline industry. The fund covers families of those who died, and anyone physically injured by the attacks. Those who file claims with the fund are guaranteed payment for their economic and noneconomic losses within 120 days of their formal filing. The law gave Mr. Feinberg enormous power over families affected by the disaster. There are no appeals from his awards, and he has broad authority to interpret the regulations. In December, when Mr. Feinberg announced draft rules for the fund, he estimated that, on average, families of those who died would receive awards of $1.6 million, although he cautioned that the law also required him to deduct life insurance and government benefits.

Families and the leaders of victims' groups heaped criticism on the proposed rules, and have since campaigned for dozens of changes by staging protest rallies, meeting with members of Congress and bombarding Mr. Feinberg and the Justice Department with proposed revisions. But by far, their most vehement objections have focused on a single provision: the proposed awards for noneconomic losses, which they have called insulting and degrading.

In meeting after meeting, Mr. Feinberg has steadfastly defended his proposed noneconomic awards, $250,000 per death with an additional $50,000 for each spouse and each dependent. He said he was open to compromise on a host of other fund rules, but he said that the noneconomic awards were unlikely to change.

But in discussions with victims' groups and leaders from New York and New Jersey, Mr. Feinberg and White House officials have signaled they are preparing to double the $50,000 payments. For a mother of two children, that change would increase her family's overall award for noneconomic losses by $150,000, to a total of $550,000.

Mr. Corzine said that based on his recent conversations with the White House he was hopeful that the proposed $250,000 award would be increased, perhaps substantially.

By some calculations, the combination of higher noneconomic awards and reduced deductions could result in average awards as much as $200,000 higher than those previously projected.

Yesterday afternoon, in a meeting with 50 or so victims and relatives, Mr. Feinberg described several revisions that would greatly expand the number of injured people eligible for awards.

Under the draft rules, a person had to have been injured within 12 hours of the attacks and treated by a doctor within 24 hours. Rescue and recovery workers were covered if their injury was sustained within 96 hours of the attacks. In any event, victims had to have "contemporaneous" medical records documenting the injury.

But the final rules, Mr. Feinberg said, increase the limit for civilians to 72 hours from 12 hours. The 96- hour limit for rescue workers would be eliminated altogether. Even those rescue workers who waited weeks to seek medical care would be eligible, so long as their injury resulted in a disability. What's more, he said, the final rules would eliminate the requirement for contemporaneous medical records.

"If you didn't get a record right away, that's O.K. as long as you eventually got the record," he said. The audience applauded enthusiastically.

TESTIMONY OF THE HONORABLE STEPHEN A. PERRY

ADMINISTRATOR OF GENERAL SERVICES

BEFORE THE

HOUSE SUBCOMMITTEE ON TECHNOLOGY AND

PROCUREMENT

MARCH 7, 2002

REV_00141388

INTRODUCTION

CHAIRMAN DAVIS, MR. TURNER AND MEMBERS OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE, THANK YOU FOR INVITING ME TO APPEAR BEFORE YOU TODAY TO DISCUSS IDEAS ON HOW TO IMPROVE THE CURRENT FEDERAL ACQUISITION PROCESS.

CHAIRMAN DAIVS, I WOULD LIKE TO TAKE THIS OPPORTUNITY TO THANK YOU IN PARTICULAR FOR YOUR LEADERSHIP IN THIS AREA OVER THE YEARS, AND FOR BRINGING THE NEED FOR ADDITIONAL ACQUISITION REFORM TO THE ATTENTION OF CONGRESS.

AS YOU KNOW, EACH YEAR, THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SPENDS APPROXIMATELY $200 BILLION ON GOODS AND SERVICES IN ORDER TO MEET AGENCY REQUIREMENTS TO PROVIDE GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS AND SERVICES TO THE AMERICAN PUBLIC. THAT IS WHY IT IS SO IMPORTANT FOR THE GOVERNMENT'S ACQUISITION PROCESS AND REGULATIONS TO FOCUS ON EFFICIENCY, EFFECTIVENESS AND ACCOUNTABILITY. ADDITIONALLY, THE ACQUISITION PROCESS AND REGULATIONS SHOULD BE EASILY UNDERSTOOD BY ALL THE PARTIES INVOLVED IN THE PROCESS AND BE BASED ON COMMON SENSE. FINALLY, WHEN POSSIBLE, THE ACQUISITION PROCESS AND REGULATIONS, SHOULD RESEMBLE COMMERCIAL SECTOR BUYING PROCEDURES.

GSA'S ROLE IN IMPROVING THE OVERALL FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S ACQUISITION PROCESS

AS YOU KNOW, GSA MANAGES A SIGNIFICANT PORTION OF THE OVERALL FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S ACQUISITION PROCESS TO OFFER GOODS AND SERVICES, SUCH AS WORKSPACE, OFFICE EQUIPMENT, COMPUTERS, TELECOMMUNICATIONS, INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY, VEHICLES AND FURNITURE TO OUR CUSTOMER AGENCIES. THROUGH THE EFFICIENCY AND EFFECTIVENESS OF GSA'S PROCUREMENT AND PROPERTY MANAGEMENT SERVICES, WE HELP FEDERAL AGENCIES TO BETTER SERVE THE PUBLIC. AS ONE OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S LEAD ACQUISITION AGENCIES WE RECOGNIZE THE NEED TO CONSTANTLY LOOK FOR WAYS TO IMPROVE THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT-WIDE ACQUISITION PROCESS AND USE GSA'S EXPERTISE TO HELP PROVIDE BEST VALUE FOR ALL AGENCIES AND THE TAXPAYERS.

AT GSA WE RECOGNIZE THE NEED TO PURSUE THIS MORE AGGRESSIVELY BY INITIATIVES AT BOTH THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT-WIDE LEVEL AND AT THE INDIVIDUAL AGENCY-LEVEL.

GSA'S CURRENT INITIATIVES FOR IMPROVING THE FEDERAL ACQUISITION PROCESS:

1. GSAADVANTAGE!

ONE EXAMPLE OF GSA'S EFFORT TO IMPROVE THE FEDERAL ACQUISITION PROCESS IS THE DEVELOPMENT OF AN ON-LINE ACQUISITION SYSTEM CALLED GSAADVANTAGE. THIS SYSTEM USES INTERNET TECHNOLOGY TO GIVE AGENCIES ELECTRONIC ON-LINE ACCESS TO THE GOODS AND SERVICES OF OVER 7,000 VENDORS. THE SYSTEM ALSO ALLOWS AGENCIES TO ISSUE ELECTRONIC REQUESTS FOR QUOTATIONS FOR PRODUCTS AND SERVICES. ADDITIONALLY, THE GSAADVANTAGE SYSTEM HAS THE ENHANCED SEARCH AND INQUIRY FUNCTIONALITY NECESSARY TO MAKE IT A VALUABLE RESEARCH TOOL FOR CONTRACTING OFFICERS LOOKING FOR COMPARATIVE INFORMATION REGARDING THE ITEMS THEY NEED TO BUY. THIS YEAR WE INTEND TO IMPROVE THIS ON-LINE ACQUISITION SYSTEM BY INTEGRATING OUR GSAADVANTAGE SYSTEM WITH OTHER AGENCIES' PROCUREMENT AND FINANCE SYSTEMS. THIS WILL MORE FULLY AUTOMATE THE PROCESS OF TRANSFERRING AGENCY PURCHASE ORDERS AND OTHER PROCUREMENT INFORMATION. IT WILL ALSO PROVIDE THE INFORMATION NEEDED FOR EACH AGENCY'S ACCOUNTING CONTROL PURPOSES.

REV_00141391

2. INTEGRATED ACQUISITION SYSTEM:

TO GO WELL BEYOND THE CURRENT GSAADVANTAGE ON-LINE ACQUISITION SYSTEM, WE ARE WORKING ON THE ADMINISTRATION'S E-GOVERNMENT INITIATIVE TO DEVELOP A GOVERNMENT-WIDE INTEGRATED ACQUISITION SYSTEM. THIS WILL ELIMINATE REDUNDANT SYSTEMS AND DATA COLLECTION.

WE CAN ACHIEVE THE ADMINISTRATION'S GOAL TO EXPAND THE USE OF ELECTRONIC GOVERNMENT AND INTERNET TECHNOLOGY WHILE AT THE SAME TIME ACHIEVE THIS COMMITTEE'S GOAL TO IMPROVE THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S ACQUISITION PROCESS.

THIS E-GOVERNMENT INITIATIVE WILL SIGNIFICANTLY IMPROVE SERVICE AND PROVIDE BEST VALUE TO ALL FEDERAL DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES BY MAKING THE FEDERAL ACQUISITION PROCESS BETTER, FASTER AND CHEAPER.

SECTION 203 OF YOUR DRAFT BILL CALLS FOR A STUDY ON HORIZONTAL ACQUISITION THAT COULD RESULT IN RECOMMENDATIONS THAT WILL HELP US ACHIEVE THE INTENDED GOAL OF THE E-GOVERNMENT INITIATIVE FOR INTEGRATED ACQUISITION. THIS INTEGRATED ACQUISITION SYSTEM IS DESIGNED TO CONSOLIDATE THE CURRENT CONTRACTING VEHICLES AND CATALOGS

INTO A COMMON ON-LINE SYSTEM THEREBY MAKING CURRENT GWACS (government wide acquisition contracts), AND CATALOGS FOR GOODS AND SERVICES MORE ACCESSIBLE TO ALL FEDERAL CUSTOMERS.

3. FEDBIZOPPS:

ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF GSA'S EFFORT TO IMPROVE THE FEDERAL ACQUISITION PROCESS THROUGH THE INCREASED USE OF E-GOVERNMENT AND INTERNET TECHNOLOGY IS THE RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF A WEB SITE FOR THE GOVERNMENT'S FEDERAL BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES PROGRAM. THE WEB SITE CALLED, FEDBIZOPPS.GOV, IS THE SINGLE ELECTRONIC ENTRY POINT FOR AGENCIES TO POST THEIR ACQUISITION NEEDS AND FOR VENDORS TO LOCATE OPPORTUNITIES TO DO BUSINESS WITH THE GOVERNMENT.

4. INTEGRATED VENDOR PROFILE NETWORK:

FINALLY, GSA IS A MANAGING PARTNER IN A GOVERNMENT WIDE INTEGRATED ACQUISITION INITIATIVE. A COMPONENT OF THIS IS TO DEVELOP AN INTEGRATED VENDOR PROFILE NETWORK. THIS SYSTEM WILL PROVIDE A SINGLE POINT OF VENDOR REGISTRATION AND VALIDATION. THAT IS, VENDORS WILL BE ABLE TO PROVIDE THEIR BUSINESS INFORMATION IN ONE PLACE FOR ALL GOVERNMENT TRANSACTIONS. GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS WILL HAVE ACCESS TO THIS DATA TO SUPPORT ACQUISITION PROCESSES. THIS WILL REPLACE

MULTIPLE MANUAL, REDUNDANT, AND OFTEN INCONSISTENT VENDOR COLLECTION SYSTEMS WITHIN THE GOVERNMENT, AND PROVIDE A UNIFIED DATABASE OF VENDOR INFORMATION.

TRAINING

WE CERTAINLY AGREE WITH YOU THAT TRAINING THE FEDERAL ACQUISITION WORKFORCE ON A CONTINUAL BASIS IS AN ESSENTIAL PART OF IMPROVING THE FEDERAL ACQUISITION PROCESS AND CRITICAL TO EACH AGENCY'S PERFORMANCE SUCCESS. AT GSA WE RECOGNIZE THE NEED TO PURSUE THIS MORE AGGRESSIVELY.

THE UNIVERSITY OF MULTIPLE AWARD SCHEDULES (OR U-MAS)

ONE EXAMPLE OF OUR EFFORT TO DEVELOP THE SKILLED ACQUISITION WORKFORCE WE NEED IS GSA'S ON-LINE TRAINING PROGRAM FOR THE FEDERAL ACQUISITION WORKFORCE. THIS VIRTUAL CAMPUS, KNOWN AS THE UNIVERSITY OF MULTIPLE AWARD SCHEDULES (OR U-MAS) IS A SELF-PACED INTERNET TOOL TO TRAIN THE FEDERAL ACQUISITION WORKFORCE ON HOW TO USE THE GSA SCHEDULES PROGRAM. IT IS AVAILABLE ON-LINE, 7 DAYS A WEEK, 24 HOURS A DAY.

GSA HUMAN CAPITAL MANAGEMENT INITIATIVE:

AS PART OF OUR EFFORT TO DEVELOP THE SKILLED ACQUISITION WORKFORCE WE NEED AT GSA, WE ARE DEVELOPING COMPETENCY-

REV_00141394

BASED ASSESSMENTS TO DETERMINE THE SPECIFIC AREAS WHERE OUR TRAINING OF THE GSA ACQUISITION WORKFORCE TO-DATE HAS ACHIEVED THE NEEDED RESULTS AS WELL AS AREAS WHERE WE STILL HAVE DEFICIENCIES. WE ARE USING THIS INFORMATION REGARDING THE SKILL MIX OF THE GSA ACQUISITION WORKFORCE TO DEVELOP AND IMPLEMENT A SPECIFIC ACTION PLAN TAILORED TO THE IDENTIFIED THE TRAINING NEEDS OF OUR AGENCY.

WE BELIEVE ALL AGENCIES SHOULD BE DOING THIS KIND OF SELF-ASSESSMENT AND CORRECTION OF DEFICIENCIES AS PART OF THEIR HUMAN CAPITAL MANAGEMENT INITIATIVES.

THE SERVICES ACQUISITION REFORM ACT PROPOSAL TO REQUIRE GSA TO ESTABLISH A WORKFORCE FUND FOR INTERAGENCY TRAINING PURPOSES SHOWS A STRONG COMMITMENT TO IMPROVING THE KNOWLEDGE AND SKILLS OF THE ACQUISITION WORKFORCE IN PARTICULAR AND THE TOTAL FEDERAL WORKFORCE IN GENERAL. GSA IS CONCERNED THAT MANDATING SUCH A GOVERNMENT-WIDE FUND SYSTEM WOULD ELIMINATE INDIVIDUAL AGENCY ACCOUNTABILITY FOR ITS OWN TRAINING AND HUMAN CAPITAL MANAGEMENT RESPONSIBILITY IN THE ACQUISITION WORKFORCE AREA AS WELL AS IN THE AREAS OF OTHER MISSION CRITICAL POSITIONS. WHILE WE FULLY SUPPORT YOUR CONCEPT OF DEVELOPING A WELL-TRAINED

ACQUISITION WORKFORCE, WE WOULD LIKE TO WORK WITH YOU TO DEVELOP AND ALTERNATIVE TO THE GOVERNMENT-WIDE WORKFORCE FUND APPROACH.

SERVICES ACQUISITION REFORM ACT PROVISIONS WILL HELP AGENCIES IMPROVE THEIR ACQUISITION WORKFORCE:

ONE EXAMPLE OF HOW CONGRESS CAN HELP AGENCIES IMPROVE THEIR FEDERAL WORKFORCE IS IN SECTION 102 OF YOUR PROPOSED BILL WHICH CALLS FOR A GOVERNMENT-INDUSTRY EXCHANGE PROGRAM TO PERMIT AGENCIES TO ARRANGE FOR THE DETAIL OF AN ELIGIBLE EMPLOYEE OF AN AGENCY TO WORK FOR A PRIVATE SECTOR ORGANIZATION OR AN ELIGIBLE EMPLOYEE OF A PRIVATE SECTOR ORGANIZATION TO WORK FOR AN AGENCY. THIS PROGRAM, IF PROPERLY IMPLEMENTED, COULD PROVIDE AGENCIES SUCH AS GSA WITH THE ABILITY TO OFFER INCREASED TRAINING OPPORTUNITIES TO ITS ACQUISITION WORKFORCE AND ENABLE THEM TO BECOME FAMILIAR WITH INDUSTRY BEST PRACTICES. LIKEWISE, THE PRIVATE SECTOR PARTICIPANTS WILL BENEFIT BY BEING INVOLVED IN THE IMPORTANT PROJECTS THE GOVERNMENT IS UNDERTAKING, SEEING FIRST HAND HOW THE GOVERNMENT WORKS AND TAKING A BETTER UNDERSTANDING OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT BACK TO THEIR COMPANIES.

REV_00141396

ALSO, SECTION 105 OF THE BILL, WHICH CALLS FOR AN ACQUISITION WORKFORCE RECRUITMENT AND RETENTION PILOT PROGRAM, COULD HELP ALL AGENCIES INCLUDING GSA TO RECRUIT HIGHLY QUALIFIED ACQUISITION PERSONNEL IN A MORE TIMELY FASHION. THIS PROVISION WOULD ALLOW THE HEADS OF AGENCIES TO DETERMINE THAT CERTAIN FEDERAL ACQUISITION POSITIONS ARE "SHORTAGE CATEGORY" POSITIONS AND THEREFORE ALLOW AGENCIES TO SHORTEN THE TIME NEEDED TO HIRE HIGHLY QUALIFIED ACQUISITION PERSONNEL. I'M SURE YOU ARE FAMILIAR WITH THE FINDING THAT MORE THAN 50% OF THE FEDERAL WORKFORCE IS ELIGIBLE FOR RETIREMENT DURING THE NEXT 5 YEARS. WITH THIS IN MIND WE ARE CONCERNED ABOUT OUR ABILITY TO FILL POSITIONS, ESPECIALLY THOSE HELD BY SKILLED ACQUISITION PERSONNEL.

THE SECTIONS OF THE BILL I JUST CITED WILL HELP AGENCIES IMPROVE THEIR STRATEGIC HUMAN CAPITAL MANAGEMENT INITIATIVES.

TELECOMMUTING:

ANOTHER INITIATIVE WE BELIEVE ADDS TO OUR ABILITY TO RECRUIT AND RETAIN ASSOCIATES IS OUR TELECOMMUTING POLICY. WITH MOUNTING EVIDENCE THAT TELEWORK BENEFITS GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS, BENEFITS THE QUALITY OF WORKLIFE FOR PEOPLE AND BENEFITS THE ENVIRONMENT, GSA, ALONG WITH THE OFFICE OF

REV_00141397

PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT LAUNCHED AN INTERNET TELEWORK INFORMATION CLEARINGHOUSE FOR FEDERAL EMPLOYEES SO THEY CAN FIND OUT WHAT THE GOVERNMENT OFFERS. I WOULD LIKE TO COMMEND YOU MR. CHAIRMAN FOR YOUR LEADERSHIP IN THIS AREA AND SUPPORT YOUR EFFORTS TO PROVIDE INCENTIVES TO ENCOURAGE CONTRACTORS TO ALLOW THEIR EMPLOYEES TO TELECOMMUTE.

CHIEF ACQUISITION OFFICER:

IT IS IMPORTANT TO KEEP IN MIND THAT WITHOUT MANAGEMENT LEADERSHIP, INITIATIVES TO STREAMLINE THE CURRENT ACQUISITION PROCESS COULD END UP BECOMING JUST ANOTHER LAYER OF REGULATIONS. THAT IS WHY WE SUPPORT THE CONCEPT OF EACH AGENCY HAVING A CHIEF ACQUISITION OFFICER. WE HAVE SUCH A POSITION AT GSA AND WE BELIEVE THAT THE ABILITY OF THAT PERSON TO AID US IN DEVELOPING A STRONG ACQUISITION STRATEGY IS CRITICALLY IMPORTANT TO OUR SUCCESS. FOR THAT REASON, WE BELIEVE THAT SECTION 201 OF THE PROPOSED LEGISLATION REQUIRING AGENCY HEADS TO ESTABLISH A CHIEF ACQUISITION OFFICER POSITION IS AN INTERESTING PROPOSAL AND WOULD SIGNAL THE IMPORTANCE OF MAINTAINING A WELL-MANAGED, INTEGRATED, AGENCY-WIDE ACQUISITION PLAN.

REV_00141398

SUMMARY COMMENTS

THE SERVICE ACQUISITION REFORM ACT IS A VERY SWEEPING PROPOSAL OFFERING MANY BENEFICIAL PROGRAMS AND REFORMS. WE APPRECIATE YOUR LEADERSHIP ROLE, MR. CHAIRMAN, IN BRINGING THESE MATTERS BEFORE THIS SUBCOMMITTEE, THE CONGRESS AND THE ADMINISTRATION. AS YOU CAN SEE FROM OUR COMMENTS AND THE VARIOUS INITIATIVES WE'RE WORKING ON AT GSA, WE SHARE YOUR COMMITMENT TO MAKING NEEDED IMPROVEMENT TO THE FEDERAL ACQUISITION PROCESS AND THE FEDERAL ACQUISITION WORKFORCE. WITH THAT IN MIND WE ARE ANXIOUS TO CONTINUE TO WORK WITH THE SUBCOMMITTEE TO FIND WAYS TO MAKE SIGNIFICANT IMPROVEMENT IN THE CURRENT FEDERAL ACQUISITION PROCESS.

ONCE AGAIN, THANK YOU FOR INVITING ME TO DISCUSS THIS IMPORTANT ISSUE WITH YOU TODAY. I AM HAPPY TO ANSWER ANY QUESTIONS YOU MAY HAVE.

Government Contracts

Davis Introduces Acquisition Reform, Drops Revisions to Service Contract Act

After months of discussions with stakeholders and a congressional hearing last November, Rep. Tom Davis (R-Va.) March 4 introduced his much-anticipated Services Acquisition Reform Act (H.R. 3832).

The goal of SARA is to ensure that the government can quickly and efficiently purchase goods and services from the commercial marketplace, according to Davis.

Clearly, the events of Sept. 11 make the goals of SARA even more vital for the federal government if it is to access the cutting edge technology available in the private sector to fight terrorism and protect the homeland, Davis said.

The bill was developed over the fall and winter and was expected to be introduced on several previous occasions.

It has taken the congressman significant time and effort to get a bill that all stakeholders can support, an aide to Davis told BNA.

When Davis unveiled the legislation last Nov. 1 at a hearing before the House Government Reform Subcommittee on Technology and Procurement Policy, the administration expressed strong opposition to key provisions of the bill.

Since that time, Davis, chairman of the subcommittee, has presented various revised versions of the bill to the administration. An administration official would not comment on whether the bill as introduced addresses the administration's concerns.

However, the administration's views on the revised bill will be made known March 7 during a hearing on SARA before Davis's subcommittee. Office of Federal Procurement Policy Administrator Angela Styles is scheduled to testify at the hearing.

The bill contains six titles. Provisions that would have raised the threshold for application of the Service Contract Act and Davis-Bacon Act have been omitted. These provisions were so controversial that they could have derailed the entire bill, observers have said.

Industry Concerned by Styles's Statements

Styles recently told a Senate Armed Services panel that she sees no need for major legislative changes in the acquisition area.

While she stopped short of outright opposing any modification to the current framework for buying commercial items, Styles Feb. 27 told the panel that "we must challenge ourselves to demonstrate that the tools which would serve as a surrogate for the safeguards provided today will adequately protect the public fisc."

Expressing concern regarding Styles's views, Professional Services Council President Stan Soloway told BNA that the current commercial services definitions would allow small, performance-based contracts to be treated as commercial items is an important next step, but remain too limiting.

Soloway believes the authority should be made permanent, so that vendors will be more inclined to make longer term investments in people and technology that can drive higher performance, rather than feel constrained by an authority that faces a sunset date, which will either take them out of the government marketplace or force them back into traditional contracting--which for many of these companies is not and never has been an option.

In addition, the $5 million ceiling, while intended as a first step, really does need to be increased since it takes out of play so many critical, very commercial-like requirements, Soloway noted.

Contract Types

Labor hour and time and materials contracting remains a best commercial practice in many industry sectors, Soloway said.

"PSC believes it is time to work through the concerns some have about this practice to arrive at a solution set that enables the government, where appropriate, to take advantage of this best commercial practice, just as we have done throughout the acquisition reform process," Soloway added.

Training Fund

Regarding the provision in SARA to establish a separate acquisition workforce training fund, Soloway said those funds "are among the first to drop off" in the resource allocation process, especially when overall resource competition is fierce and available resources are constrained.

Thus, having a separate training fund "makes eminent sense, is budget-neutral, and keeps this important initiative out of the annual resource battles in which it has historically not fared well," he said.

Section-by-Section Summary of Bill

TITLE I -- Acquisition Workforce Training.

Section 101 - Definition of Acquisition. The section would amend the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403) to provide a comprehensive governmentwide definition of the term "acquisition." The new definition would encompass the entire spectrum of acquisition starting with the development of an agency's requirements through contract administration.

Section 102 - Acquisition Workforce Training Fund. The section would amend section 37 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 433) to establish within the General Services Administration an acquisition workforce-training fund to be managed by the Federal Acquisition Institute. The fund is to be funded by depositing 5 percent of the fees collected by various executive agencies under their governmentwide contracts. The fund can only be used for sorely needed acquisition workforce training across the civilian Government agencies.

Section 103 - Government-Industry Exchange Program. The section would amend Subpart B of part III of title 5, United States Code by adding a new Chapter 37 establishing an acquisition professional exchange program to permit the temporary exchange of high-performing acquisition professionals between the federal government and participating private-sector concerns. Under the program detailed federal employees would retain their federal benefits and would be paid by the federal government to the extent the private-sector pay is less than the employee's federal pay. Private-sector employees would either be transferred and receive a temporary appointment or detailed to a federal agency. Transferred employees would be paid by the federal agency and deemed a federal employee for most purposes. Detailed employees would also be deemed a federal employee for most purposes but would be paid by the government only to the extent the pay for the government position exceeds the employee's private-sector pay.

Section 104 - Reimbursement of Costs. The section would provide that the Federal Acquisition Regulation be amended to allow for reimbursement of reasonable costs incurred in connection with an employee's participation in the professional exchange program as allowable education and training costs under government contracts.

Section 105 - Conforming Amendments. The section would provide conforming amendments to Title 5 U.S.C. and various other laws in connection with the new professional exchange program.

Section 106 - Acquisition Workforce Recruitment and Retention Pilot Program. The section would permit the head of an agency to determine, for purposes of sections 3304, 5333, and 5753 of Title 5 U.S.C., that certain civilian federal acquisition positions are "shortage category" positions in order to recruit and directly hire such employees with high qualifications. The actions under this section would be subject to Office of Personnel Management policies for direct recruitment. The administrator of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy would be required to submit a report to Congress prior to the pilot's

September 2006 expiration date concerning the efficacy of the program and recommending whether the authority should be extended.

Section 107 - Authorization of Telecommuting for Federal Contractors. The section would provide for an amendment to the FAR providing that solicitations for federal contracts should not contain any requirement or evaluation criteria that would render an offeror ineligible for award or would reduce the scoring of the offeror's proposal based upon the offeror's plan to allow its employees to telecommute unless the contracting officer first determines in writing that the needs of the agency, including security needs, could not be meet without the requirement. The General Accounting Office would report to Congress on the implementation one year after the FAR amendment is published.

Section 108 - Architectural and Engineering Acquisition Workforce. The section would provide that OFPP in consultation with the Secretary of Defense and OPM, develop and implement a plan to assure that the Federal Government maintains a core in-house architectural and engineering capability.

Business Acquisition Practices

TITLE II - Adaptation of Business Acquisition Practices.

Subtitle A - Adaptation of Business Management Practices.

Section 201 - Chief Acquisition Officers. The section would amend section 16 of the Office of Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 414) to provide for the appointment of a Chief Acquisition Officer for each executive agency. The CAO would provide advice and assistance to the agency head and other senior management to ensure, among other things, that full and open competition is increased in agency acquisitions, that clear lines of authority, accountability, and responsibility for acquisition decision making are established and that an acquisition career management program is developed and maintained. The CAO shall have acquisition as the official's primary duty and monitor the agency's acquisition activities and evaluate them based on applicable performance measurements. The CAO shall, as a part of the statutorily required annual strategic planning and performance process, assess agency requirements for agency personnel knowledge and skills in acquisition resources management and, if necessary, develop strategies and plan for hiring, training and professional development.

Section 202 - Increased Role for Defense Contract Management Agency. The section would provide for a review by the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology and Logistics of the feasibility of establishing the DCMA as the primary organization responsible for contract management on base operating services contracts in excess of $5 million.

Section 203 - Study on Horizontal Acquisition. The section would provide for a study by the administrator, OFPP of laws, executive orders, and regulations that hinder the cross-government performance of acquisition functions and impact the use of governmentwide contracts.

Section 204 - Statutory and Regulatory Review. The section would provide that the administrator, OFPP establish an advisory panel of at least nine experts in acquisition law and policy who represent diverse public and private sector experiences. The panel would review acquisition laws and regulations with a view toward ensuring the greater use of commercial practices and performance-based contracting and make recommendations for the repeal or amendment of laws or regulations that are not necessary for the establishment of buyer and seller relationships while retaining the financial and ethical integrity of the acquisition programs and ensuring that the government's best interest is protected. The report is to be completed within one year after the establishment of the panel and contain the findings and conclusions of the panel, and its proposed new codification of acquisition laws and regulations.

Subtitle B - Payment Terms.

Section 211 - Payment Terms. The section would provide that the FAR be revised to create a streamlined cost-effective commercial-like payment process for service contracts. The revised process would provide for the submission of biweekly or monthly payment invoices. Biweekly invoices would have to be submitted electronically. All electronic invoices would be accepted or rejected by the agency within five working days and all accepted invoices would be paid as soon as possible, but in no case later than 30 days after the invoice date. Either party may make appropriate corrections or adjustments after payment.

Subtitle C - Acquisitions Generally.

Section 221 - Increase in Authorization Levels of Federal Purchase Cards. The section would amend section 32 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 428) to increase the threshold for the use of the streamlined "micropurchase" process, which is the basis for the federal purchase card program, from the current $2,500 to a more realistic $25,000.

Section 222 - Reauthorization of Franchise Funds. The section would amend section 403 (f) of the Federal Financial Management Act of 1994 (31 U.S.C. 501 note) to reauthorize the government's franchise funds until Oct. 1, 2005.

Section 223 - Acquisition Protests. The section would amend Chapter 137 of title 10, U.S.C. and the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 to provide statutory authority for an agency-level acquisition protest process. It would provide for a "stay" of the award or of contract performance during the 10-working-day period an agency is given to decide the protest. The stay could be lifted by the head of the agency procuring activity upon a written finding that urgent and compelling circumstances do not permit waiting for the decision. The section would provide that filing an agency-level protest under this section would not affect the right of an interested party to file a protest with GAO or in the United States Court of Federal Claims. The section would also amend section 3553 (d) (4) of title 31, United States Code to provide that an interested party filing a protest with GAO within 5 days of the issuance of the agency protest decision would qualify for a stay of performance in connection with a protest filed with the GAO.

Section 224 - Architectural and Engineering Services. The section would amend section 901 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (Property Act) (40 U.S.C. 541) to clarify the terms "surveying and mapping" and "contract" as used in the definition of architectural and engineering services to ensure that the quality-based selection process in title IX of the Property Act is used for the full spectrum of surveying and mapping services. The FAR would also be amended to include the new definitions. Further, the section would amend section 2855 (b) of title 10, United States Code to raise from $85,000 to $300,000 the threshold under which architectural and engineering services acquisitions must be set aside for small business concerns and to conform section 2855 to the Property Act amendments. Finally, the section would provide that executive agencies shall not establish or carry out a program to offer or contract for professional engineering services unless the performance of the services are supervised by a licensed professional engineer and the contract for the services is awarded pursuant to the quality-base selection procedures in title IX of the Property Act or 2855 of title 10, Unites States Code.

Contract Incentives

TITLE III - Contract Incentives.

Section 301 - Revisions to Share-in-Savings Initiatives. The section would amend Chapter 137 of title 10 U.S.C. 137 and title III of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 to authorize the use of share-in-savings contracts governmentwide. These contracts represent an innovative approach to encourage industry to share creative technology and management solutions with the Government. Through these contracts, agencies can lower their costs and improve service delivery without large "up front" investments as the contractor provides the technology and is compensated by receiving a portion of savings achieved. The section would authorize agencies to enter into share-in-savings contracts for a term of up to 10 years, to pay contractors from the savings realized and to retain those savings that exceed the amount paid to the contractor. The section would permit agencies to use various options for funding cancellation or termination costs and would permit the cancellation or termination amount to be negotiated by the parties. The section would also require the Office of Management and Budget to identify potential opportunities for, and encourage the use of, share-in savings contracts through incentives and by permitting agencies to retain a portion of the savings achieved as future funds are appropriated. Further, the section would require that the FAR be revised to implement this section and require OMB to issue guidance on the use of share-in-savings contracts that provides for the use of competitive procedures, maximizes regulatory flexibility to facilitate the use of such contracts, and assists agencies in determining baselines and saving share ratios. Finally, the section would require the OMB to report to Congress two years after enactment describing the number of share-in-savings contracts entered into and recommendations for changes in law needed to encourage their use.

Section 302 - Incentives for Contract Efficiency. The section would amend 10 U.S.C. 137 and title III of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 to authorize agencies to enter into services contracts for up to ten years if they are performance-based. The ten-year performance period would consist of multiple performance period extensions made by the agency based on exceptional contractor performance as measured by performance parameters set forth in the contract. The section would also authorize agencies to enter into a level-of-effort contracts that would provide for savings realized to be shared with the contractor in an amount that is sufficient to encourage contractor investment that is likely to reduce overall cost of performance.

Commercial Items

TITLE IV - Acquisitions of Commercial Items.

Section 401- Preference for Performance Based Contracting. The section would provide that in administering the preferences established in the Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR) pursuant to section 821 (a) of the Floyd D. Spence National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2001 (as enacted into law by Public Law 106-398: 114 Stat. 1654A-218), a performance-based service contract or task order may be treated as a contract for commercial items if it sets forth each task to be performed, defines it in measurable, mission related terms, identifies specific products or outputs and the source provides similar services to the public under similar terms to those offered the government. The special simplified procedures provided in the FAR for commercial items would not apply to these contracts or task orders. Such performance-based contracts or task orders may be awarded pursuant to the special simplified procedures provided in the FAR for commercial items if the contract or task order would be valued at $5 million, or less. The section would further provide that it would be in effect for three years after enactment and would provide for a GAO report on the implementation two years after enactment. Finally the section would require the OFPP to establish a center of excellence for service contracting to assist the acquisition community in identifying best practices in service contracting.

Section 402 - Authorization of Additional Contract Types in FAR Part 12. The section would provide that section 8002 (d) of the Federal Acquisition Streamlining Act of 1994 (Public Law 103-355: 41 U.S.C. 264 note) be amended to provide that the FAR include a provision that time and material, labor-hour or similar contract types for services could in appropriate circumstances be used for the acquisition of commercial items.

Section 403 - Clarification of Commercial Services Definition. The section would amend section 4 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403 (12)) to clarify the definition of commercial item to place services on the same level as supplies in federal acquisitions.

Section 404 - Designation of Commercial Business Entities. The section would amend section 4 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403) to further clarify the definition of commercial item to include products or services that are produced by a commercial entity whose primary customers are other than the Government. The section would provide that a commercial entity must have made 85% of its sales over the past three years to nongovernment entities or as commercial items under FAR Part 12.

Section 405 - Continuation of Eligibility of Contractor for Award of Information Technology Contract After Providing Design and Engineering Services. The section would provide that a contractor providing architectural design and engineering services for an information system would not, solely for that reason, be ineligible for award of a contract or subcontract for the acquisition of information technology under that program. The section would define architectural and design services as including such activities as business process reengineering, evaluation of test data, determination of specifications and developing work statements.

Section 406 - Commercial Liability. The section would amend the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403 et seq.) to provide that the FAR shall require the inclusion in all solicitations for contracts and in all contracts a provision that bars the payment of consequential damages because of contractor liability and places a cap on direct damages for contractor liability that does not exceed the cost of the service not performed or product not delivered.

Access to Commercial Technology

TITLE V - Technology Access in a Commercial Environment.

Section 501 - Trade Agreements Act of 1979 Exemption for Information Technology Commercial Items. The section would provide that, in order to promote government access to commercial information technology, the Buy American Act (41 U.S.C. 10a) restriction on the acquisition of nondomestic products and the Trade Agreements Act of 1979 (Public Law 96-39; 19 U.S.C. 2512 (a)(1)) prohibition on noneligible foreign products would not apply to the acquisition of commercial information technology as defined in the Clinger-Cohen Act of 1996. The section would also amend section 5002 (3)(B) of the Clinger-Cohen Act of 1996 by including in the definition of information technology, imaging peripherals and certain devices necessary for security and surveillance.

Section 502 - Authorization for Acquisition of Information Technology by State and Local Governments Through Federal Supply Schedules. The section would amend section 201 (b) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 481 (b)) to give the General Services Administration the authority to provide for the use by state or local governments of the Federal Supply Schedules for automated data processing equipment, software, support equipment and services, and other items contained in federal supply classification group 70. The section would further provide that participation by a FSS contractor in a sale to a state or local government would be voluntary. Not later than December 31, 2004, the GSA is to report on the implementation and effects of the new provision.

Section 503 - Certain Research and Development by Civilian Agencies. The section would amend title III of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 251 et seq.) to authorize the head of a civilian executive agency, if authorized by OMB, to engage in basic, applied and advanced research, and development projects that are necessary to the responsibilities of the agency and may facilitate defense against, or recovery from, terrorism or nuclear, biological, chemical, radiological, or technological attack. This authority would be the same as that exercised by DOD under sections 2358 and 2317 of title 10, United States Code with certain exceptions.

Section 504 - Authority for Carrying Out Certain Prototype Projects. The section would provide that the head of an executive agency, authorized by OMB under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended by section 503 above, may carry out prototype projects that meet the requirements of the amendment in section 503 above in accordance with the same requirements and conditions for prototype projects as are provided under section 845 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (Public Law 103-160; 10 U.S.C. 2371 note).

Inflationary Adjustments

TITLE VI - Inflationary Adjustments.

Section 601 - Simplified Acquisition Threshold Inflation Adjustment. The section would provide that OFPP may adjust the simplified acquisition threshold as defined in section 4(11) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403 (11)) every three years to account for inflation.

I provided some suggested talking points for Brett's review/edits. It's my understanding from DoJ OLP that the AG will not be available (which isn't a real problem from our standpoint).

We are waving in those coming to the meeting with the President, but are not handling the waves for the meeting with the Judge. Matt, I know you all are in contact with Todd at progress for america on the participants for the meeting with the Judge. Will you all handle those waves?

Let me know what you need from us! Thanks, Heather

Allard, Leahy Gear for Fight over Colorado Court Nominee

By Bill McAllister
Denver Post
Sunday, March 3, 2002

Tensions are building here for another showdown between Sen. Wayne Allard, R-Colo., and Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt.

The issue this time: Denver lawyer Tim Tymkovich, nominated by President Bush for a seat on the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Tymkovich, who was the first Colorado judicial candidate selected by the White House, has yet to get a hearing before Leahy's committee, and that has begun to rile Allard. After all, two of Allard's other judicial nominees for District Court seats have sailed through the Senate in recent days while Tymkovich remains in limbo.

"The good news is that with Marcia Krieger and Robert Blackburn confirmed to the District Court, it now allows Sen. Allard to focus on Tymkovich," said Allard spokesman Sean Conway last week.

Both Conway and David Carle, a spokesman for Leahy, acknowledged that Senate Democrats have been far more cautious in their approach to Circuit Court nominees than they have in filling District Court vacancies.

What happens to Charles W. Pickering, Bush's nominee to the 5th Circuit who is under fire from many liberal groups, may determine how Tymkovich is treated by the Democrats, Conway said.

Both Pickering and Tymkovich were nominated on May 25 and were among Bush's first judicial nominees.

Tymkovich is a former Colorado solicitor general who turned down a chance to be the Interior

REV_00141431

Department's top lawyer.

Thus far, Conway said, the Allard staff has heard nothing that would suggest Tymkovich's nomination is in serious trouble. Allard is so concerned by the delay, however, that he will probably raise the issue with Leahy, urging that the Denver lawyer be given a prompt hearing, Conway said.

In October the two senators had a dust-up on the Senate floor after Allard urged speedy action on his three Colorado judicial nominees. Allard later accused Leahy of attempting to blackmail him because of because the votes he and Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, R-Colo., had just cast on another bill.

Leahy won't discuss the incident, but Carle said the seating of the two District Court nominees shows that Leahy has nothing against Colorado. Even Conway had to agree that, compared to what other states are encountering with their judicial nominees, "two out of three ain't bad."

Dems Challenge Bush Judicial Nominees

By Jesse Holland
The Associated Press
Sunday, March 4, 2002

Less than a year ago, federal judges Charles Pickering of Mississippi and D. Brooks Smith of Pennsylvania looked like shoo-ins for elevation to the U.S. Court of Appeals. No longer.

Today, Smith's nomination to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia is in trouble and Pickering's nomination for the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans could be all but dead in the Democratic-controlled Senate.

"This may be a warm-up for the next Supreme Court nomination," said one of Smith's patrons, Republican Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania. At stake could be the future direction - right or left - for a nearly equally divided Supreme Court as well as the entire federal judiciary.

The judges' patrons were powerful Republican senators - including the then-Senate majority leader - and neither judge was linked to anything particularly controversial.

When Democrats took over the Senate in June, they warned they would be tough on President Bush's judicial nominees they thought too conservative. Democrats said Republicans had thwarted or stalled many of former Democratic President Clinton's nominees with similar tactics when they controlled the Senate.

Also still fresh was the Supreme Court's 5-4 decision six months earlier cutting off ballot recounts in Florida and awarding the White House to Bush.

Republicans readied for battles over appellate nominees such as Miguel Estrada, Jeff Sutton,

REV_00141432

Michael McConnell and Terrance Boyle, who had connections to Bush or came with strong conservative credentials.

No one expected the furor over Pickering or Smith.

Pickering is a former Mississippi prosecutor and lawmaker who easily won Senate confirmation in 1990 for a lifetime appointment as a U.S. District Court judge. Smith was named a U.S. District Court judge in 1988 by former President Reagan.

Liberal groups started issuing news releases almost daily leading up to Smith's confirmation hearing last week. They attacked his handling of conflicts of interests and his interpretations of laws regarding the workplace, the disabled and the environment.

"He is emblematic of President Bush's nominees who will turn back the clock on progress Americans cherish," said Nan Aron, president of the liberal Alliance for Justice.

Democrats asked Smith why he did not remove himself earlier than he did from a case involving a bank where his wife is a vice president. They questioned trips he accepted from organizations pursuing softer environmental regulations.

The Justice Department cleared Smith of any wrongdoing in the fraud case, and he testified that his rulings as a judge "were neither illegal nor unethical."

Smith said the trips, some to resort locations, were purely educational, but promised not to accept any more that might pose an appearance problem. He said he was not aware at the outset of a fraud case that his wife's bank might be involved. When he determined that it was, he stepped aside, he testified.

Pickering faced the same pattern of criticism. Women's, civil rights and liberal groups attacked positions he took in the past. Democrats interrogated him about efforts to reduce the sentence of a man convicted of burning a cross on an interracial couple's lawn. They questioned the judge about votes against abortion and voting rights as a state senator.

"We think he is a right-wing ideologue," said Ralph Neas, president of People for the American Way.

Pickering's defenders said he has worked for racial harmony in Mississippi, including testifying against the Ku Klux Klan.

"In an effort to rally their troops for the next Supreme Court nomination, they've mounted a smear campaign that portrays Pickering as backward on voting rights, race relations and civil rights generally," said John Nowacki of the Free Congress Foundation's Judicial Selection Monitoring Project.

Unless there is a dramatic shift in positions, Pickering appears headed for defeat in the Senate

REV_00141433

Judiciary Committee this week.

"I believe that there is virtually unanimous opinion on the Democratic side of the Judiciary Committee that he will not be confirmed," said Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif.

That Democrats have that power thanks to the defection from the GOP of Vermont Sen. Jim Jeffords last summer. Republicans lost control of the Senate and Democrats now hold a 10-9 majority on the committee.

"I'm not advocating this, but he's got to decide whether he wants to go forward with a vote if the votes aren't there, whether he wants to terminate the process," said Pickering's biggest sponsor, Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott of Mississippi.

Fight Over Bush Nominee Reflects Growing Partisanship Over Judiciary

By Scott Shepard
Cox News Service
Sunday, March 3, 2002

President Bush's efforts to elevate a conservative Southern judge to a federal appeals court that issued landmark civil rights rulings in the1960s and 70s appear headed for defeat in the Senate this week.

Barring a last-minute compromise, Bush's nomination of Charles Pickering to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is unlikely to survive a vote of the Senate Judiciary Committee, tentatively set for Thursday.

His defeat, especially if it is along party lines, as widely anticipated, will add to the growing bitterness on Capitol Hill over judicial nominations, an area that long ago was characterized by bipartisanship.

"It will probably contribute to a continuing deterioration of how we handle judicial nominations," Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., said Sunday on NBC's "Meet The Press" TV program.

Lott charged that Pickering, a fellow Mississipian, has been "smeared" and "mischaracterized" by liberal and progressive organizations bent on building Democratic opposition to judges Bush may nominate later to the Supreme Court. It is a charge echoed at the Bush White House, which promised a new tone of civility in Washington.

Bush spokesman Ari Fleischer said the criticism of Pickering from organizations with close political ties to the Democratic Party is "an unfortunate part of the politicization of the way (federal) judges are picked in this country."

"It's an election year and we know the left-of-mainstream groups will not miss an opportunity to flex their muscle," said Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the former chairman and current ranking Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Republicans trace the origin of this process back to the bruising and bitter defeat of Robert Bork, nominated to the Supreme Court in 1987 by then President Reagan. They even have a name for it: "Borking."

But Sen. Arlen Specter, a moderate Republican from Pennsylvania and a longtime member of the committee, blames his own party as much as the Democrats for the growing bitterness over judicial nominations.

On the Senate floor late last week, in pleading for support for Pickering's nomination, Specter said, "Regrettably, there is a great deal of partisan politics in the way judges are confirmed by the Senate. Regrettably, that is a practice regardless of which party is in control of the White House and which party has control of the Senate."

"It is time for a truce. It is time for an armistice," Specter added.

But none is likely to come, at least not over the nomination of Pickering, whose long public career in the often racially driven politics of Mississippi has given critics grounds for charges that the judge is insensitive to individual rights. Most often cited are:

- A law school article he wrote in 1959 critical of interracial marriage.

- His contacts, as a state senator in the 1970s, with the Mississippi Sovereign Commission, a notorious agency formed to resist court-ordered racial desegregation in the South.

- His efforts in 1994 to reduce the sentence required by law for a man convicted of burning a cross on the lawn of an interracial couple.

Specter said Pickering is "a different man in 2002" than he was during much of his political career in Mississippi, that "attitudes have evolved" and so have Pickering's.

But Ralph Neas, head of People for the American Way, the organization most vocal in its opposition to Pickering, notes that Pickering's past is important. But how he characterized it in 1990, during confirmation hearings to the federal judgeship to which he was nominated by Bush's father, former President George H.W. Bush, is just as important. In those hearings, Pickering said:

- His law school article on interracial marriage was merely a long-ago "academic exercise."

- His contacts with Sovereignty Commission were only "incidental" and that most of what he knew about the commission is "what I read in the newspapers."

- His actions in the cross burning case were the result of concern about the mandatory nature of the sentence in the cross burning case.

Background material assembled by Neas's organization and provided to senators and news organizations paint a very different picture, with charges that:

- Pickering's law school article included recommendations, later followed by the state legislature, to make interracial marriage a felony, punishable by up to 10 years in prison. "There is nothing 'academic' at all about these laws," said Neas.

- Unsealed Sovereignty Commission records show that Pickering and two other state legislators had "requested to be advised of developments" concerning union activities in Laurel, Pickering's hometown. "It appears that Pickering has been less than forthcoming . . . about this entire matter, and it is that, more than the incident itself that is so disturbing," said Neas.

- In the cross-burning case, Pickering tried to get the government to drop the charge that carried the mandatory sentence, including initiating an "ex parte" communication with the Justice Department to complain about prosecuting the case. Neas said Pickering's actions were "unusual and ethically questionable."

Republicans have responded by trying to portray Pickering as a civil rights crusader who has the support of black leaders in Mississippi, including James Charles Evers, brother of slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers. They also have pointed to his politically risky testimony against a Ku Klux Klan leader in 1967.

But NAACP Chairman Julian Bond accuses Pickering of "perpetuating voting discrimination against black voters," and warns senators, "A vote for Pickering is a vote against civil rights _ and a vote that will not be forgotten."

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is based in New Orleans. It has the largest minority population of any federal circuit - 42 percent. And in the 1960s and 1970s, it was considered a trailblazer in protecting individual rights. Critics complain that the appeals court is increasingly conservative and bent on limiting civil rights protections established in previous decades.

The Senate Judiciary Committee was supposed to vote on Pickering's nomination last Thursday, but delayed the vote at the request of Lott in order to give the judge time to answer his critics.

But by the end of the week, Pickering's supporters were lobbying to have the nomination come to the Senate floor for a vote by the full Senate membership, even if it did not win the committee's backing.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., has said he will allow any Supreme Court nomination to come to the floor, regardless of the Judiciary Committee action, but not nominations to any other lower federal courts.

Asked Sunday, on "Meet The Press," if Pickering's nomination is dead if the committee does not approve, Daschle replied, "It is." He pointed out that it is "unprecedented" for the full Senate, under the control of either party, to consider district and appeals court appointees whose nominations do not win committee backing.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has been controlled by Democrats, 10-9, since last June when Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont left the Republican Party to become an independent, turning over control of the entire Senate and all its committees to the Democrats for the first time since 1994.

Since then, Republicans have repeatedly charged that the Democrats are deliberately dragging their feet on Bush's judicial nominations in order to prevent political conservatives from sitting on the federal bench.

However, in the nine months since the Democrats took over, the Senate has confirmed 37 of Bush's nominees, nine more than the Democratic-controlled Senate approved for fellow Democrat Bill Clinton in 1993, his first year in office.

During the Clinton presidency, which included six years of GOP control, the Senate confirmed 377 judicial nominees, only five short of the all-time record of 382 confirmed during the Reagan administration.

But with Hatch, the conservative GOP senator from Utah, chairing the Judiciary Committee in the last six years of the Clinton presidency, 50 of Clinton's judicial nominees never even received a committee hearing or vote. And the average number of days between a nomination and a confirmation rose from 80 days to 225 days, the biggest delay ever and more than double the delay in the final two years of Reagan's presidency.

Hatch vigorously defends his tenure as Judiciary Committee chairman. After he was succeeded in the committee chairmanship by liberal Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., Hatch said it was "conventional myth" that he had blocked Clinton's judicial nominees on the basis of political ideology.

Tom Jipping, vice president of the Free Congress Foundation, which promotes conservative judicial nominees, complains that Democrats are deliberately delaying Bush nominees in order to "limit what this president can accomplish."

But Leahy maintained last week that the committee is "making progress" on Bush's judicial nominees, even with the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on New York and Washington and the subsequent demands by Bush for new anti-terrorism laws.

And Neas, responding to charges that liberal interest groups are responsible for the increasing partisanship over judicial nominations, said, "The true degradation of the confirmation process has come from right-wing Republicans."

In fact, "everyone blames the blame game," said Sheldon Goldman, author of "Picking Federal Judges: Lower Court Selection From Roosevelt Through Reagan." The system needs a major overhaul, Goldman said, because it is at "a crisis point where there is obstruction and delay instead of advise and consent."

Nominee's Past Opens Old Wounds; Appeals Court Pick Raises Tempers, Divides Blacks

By Darryl Fears
The Washington Post
Sunday, March 3, 2002

It didn't matter to James Charles Evers that the leader of the Congressional Black Caucus called people like him a Judas. The respected former state NAACP leader attended a recent Senate Judiciary Committee hearing and defended Mississippi federal trial judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. against charges that he is a staunch segregationist.

"I don't give a damn what he was 20, 30, 40 years ago," said Evers, who took control of the Mississippi NAACP's field director's office after his brother, Medgar, was assassinated by a white supremacist in 1963. "What is he today? When the Klan killed my friend Vernon Dahmer, it was Pickering who fought to get them arrested in 1967. The NAACP and the Klan are the only two organizations that are against him down here right now." The war of words between distinguished black leaders is just one ugly highlight of what is being called the most contentious federal judicial nomination of the Bush administration. The Judiciary Committee has held two hearings on Pickering's nomination to the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals because of concerns raised about his record on civil and reproductive rights. A vote is tentatively scheduled for Thursday, a Judiciary Committee staff assistant said.

Sen. Trent Lott of Mississippi, leader of the Republican minority, has said his friend Pickering would be promoted "or else." But Judiciary Committee member Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.) didn't flinch last Sunday when she said on "Meet the Press" that she would oppose Pickering. "I believe that there's virtually unanimous opinion on the Democratic side of the Judiciary Committee that he will not be confirmed," Feinstein said.

Pickering, 64, has declined to talk to reporters. Women's groups such as the Democratic Women on Capitol Hill and the National Organization for Women oppose his conservative views on abortion. The liberal Alliance for Justice, the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and every NAACP chapter in Mississippi are wary of Pickering's record on civil rights issues.

Manuel Jones, a City Council member in Laurel, Miss., remembered getting a call from Pickering during an NAACP protest in 1989. A quarter-century after the Civil Rights Act struck down segregation, white Jones County supervisors were refusing, for historical reasons, to remove fountains labeled "White" and "Colored" from the entrance to the courthouse in Ellisville.

"He asked me if we could have a cooling-off period," Jones recalled. The NAACP backed off for several weeks but restarted the protest to force a compromise after discussions failed. In the end, metal plaques were placed over the offending words.

REV_00141438

Although the fountains were no longer working and weren't intended to be used, black people "didn't feel they needed to be looking at that when they paid their taxes," Jones said. Pickering called Jones again recently to solicit support for his nomination, Jones said. Jones declined, but several other black City Council members did not.

"It's hard to go against a federal judge," he said.

State Chancery Court Judge Johnny Williams would agree with that, but for different reasons. He said he found it hard not to support Pickering, "because he's a good man."

"I think the man has evolved. At this day and at this time, where he is now, I certainly wouldn't call him a racist.

"If we go back in time, many of the people we know and we deal with on a day-to-day basis have racial views that they don't have now," Williams said.

Rep. Eddie Bernice Johnson (D-Tex.), who chairs the Congressional Black Caucus, predicted that "a few Judases" would support Pickering. She said the judge's views were the most convincing argument against confirming him.

As a law school student, he wrote an article in 1959 suggesting ways to strengthen state laws against interracial marriage. After leaving school, he formed a law partnership with former lieutenant governor Carroll Gartin, who promised in a gubernatorial campaign to uphold segregation by vetoing "any effort to weaken . . . our southern way of life."

Pickering also had connections to Mississippi's secretive and segregationist Sovereignty Commission, which spied on unions and civil rights organizations. On the federal bench, Pickering cavalierly dismissed discrimination claims brought by black workers, according to a position paper by the Alliance for Justice.

Civil rights activists said Pickering has spoken against the Voting Rights Act when his role as a federal judge is to impartially uphold the rule of law. But liberals and conservatives alike commended Pickering for testifying against Klan Imperial Wizard Sam Bowers in the Dahmer case in 1967.

But the Alliance for Justice said the act hardly rose to the level of moral courage claimed by the judge's supporters. "By the mid-'60s," the alliance wrote, "even whites in the South who supported segregation recognized that the Klan's violent activities were hurting whites and blacks."

"I have no doubt that Mr. Pickering is a nice individual, in his own way," said NAACP President Kweisi Mfume. "We have no qualms with him as a person. It's his record. We have reservations about his ability to handle the law with fair, impartial judgment."

REV_00141439

Michael Meyers, executive director of the New York Civil Rights Coalition, said Mfume's reaction to a Republican nominee was typical.

"I think the NAACP under Kweisi Mfume . . . is a satellite of the Democratic Party, if it's not an official chapter," said Meyers, a former NAACP executive who was dismissed from his job. "It's just reflexive, knee-jerk stuff. It's just racial rhetoric."

Gary Bauer of American Values said the liberal attack on Pickering "is in the worst traditions of Borking," referring to Judge Robert Bork, whose nomination to the Supreme Court by President Ronald Reagan was successfully opposed by Democrats in 1987. Since then, the confirmation of judicial nominees -- whether named by Republican or Democratic presidents -- has become increasingly contentious.

"There are over 100 judicial positions, federal district courts, circuit court judge positions, that are open in the country today," Sen. Sam Brownback (R-Kan.) said when he appeared with Feinstein on "Meet the Press." "We need to get some judges out there and confirmed in positions so we can deal with judicial issues coming forward."

Senator Edwards Leads Attacks on Pickering's Judicial Ethics

By Charles Hurt
The Charlotte Observer
Friday, March 1, 2002

A bitter and racially charged fight has erupted over the nomination of a Mississippi judge to the federal bench, sparked in large measure by Sen. John Edwards.

In attacking the judicial ethics of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering during a Senate Judiciary hearing last week, Edwards angered a disparate group, including old allies, Mississippi civil rights leaders and conservatives.

Pickering's opponents paint him as hostile to civil rights, but some civil rights leaders near his hometown say he's fought for racial justice.

The quizzing by Edwards, D-N.C., focused on judicial ethics and helped turn Pickering into President Bush's most controversial judicial nominee. Democrats control the committee 10-9 and this may foreshadow nominations to come, especially for the Supreme Court. Shortly after Edwards' questioning, the Senate committee's vote on Pickering's nomination to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals _ originally scheduled for Thursday _ was postponed until next week because Republican backers realized the judge was doomed and wanted another week to gather more support.

Edwards' performance is widely regarded as the most polarizing exchange of Pickering's nomination, drawing heated criticism from the judge's supporters and praise from his critics.

REV_00141440

Others have lauded Edwards for reducing Pickering to quiet mumbles and blank stares with the short, precise questions reminiscent of his time as a prominent N.C. trial lawyer.

"I went to the hearing with an open mind," Edwards said later. He also went with a carefully crafted line of questioning.

In the end, Edwards announced he would vote against the nominee, saying: "Judge Pickering's record as a judge clearly demonstrates that he is willing to put his own views above the law."

Pickering's opponents have painted him as an old South segregationist hostile to civil rights.

Ralph Neas of the liberal group People for the American Way noted Pickering's "hostility to basic civil rights."

NAACP Chairman Julian Bond accused Pickering of "perpetuating voting discrimination against black voters," and warned senators, "A vote for Pickering is a vote against civil rights _ and a vote that will not be forgotten."

Detractors say Pickering didn't act soon enough as a state senator to abolish the racist Mississippi Sovereignty Commission. They also point to a law review article he wrote in the 1950s on how to strengthen the state's ban on interracial marriages.

But civil rights leaders around Pickering's hometown of Laurel, Miss., say he's a progressive civil rights champion who fought courageously for racial justice.

"I have been saddened and appalled to read many of the allegations," wrote Charles Evers, brother of slain civil rights legend Medgar Evers. "These allegations are mostly made by groups with a Washington, D.C., address and a political agenda, not by anyone with real knowledge (of) Judge Pickering's long and distinguished record on civil rights."

Supporters point to Pickering's testimony in a 1967 murder trial against the Imperial Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan, accused of a firebombing.

"It is easy in Washington in 2002 to make a speech or sign a bill in favor of civil rights after decades of change in racial attitudes," Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., told fellow senators. "Who among us would have had the courage of Charles Pickering in Laurel, Mississippi, in 1967?"

Nevertheless, the racial rhetoric reached a boiling point during that hearing as senators grilled Pickering about his personal views on civil rights, voting rights and racial integration.

But Edwards was careful to avoid asking the judge any such questions and was careful to point out later in an interview that he has never questioned Pickering's racial attitudes.

"There are some who are raising questions about Judge Pickering's actions and behavior in the '50s and '60s," Edwards said in an interview. "Having grown up in the South myself, that should not be held against him. It's a complicated thing."

REV_00141441

Yet Edwards has questioned the judge's ethical behavior only in racially tinged cases, such as a cross-burning case.

In one case, a man appeared before Pickering for burning a cross in the front yard of an interracial couple. Pickering became frustrated because federal prosecutors demanded that the man get seven years in prison while an accomplice _ who fired shots into the couple's home _ got only home confinement.

"You're familiar, are you not, Judge, with the code of judicial ethics that applies to you?" Edwards asked shortly into his examination.

"I am," Pickering replied.

Edwards then read a portion of the code of ethics barring judges from talking to either side of a case without the other side represented in the conversation.

"Did you make a phone call to a high-ranking Justice Department official on your own initiative?" Edwards asked.

"We had" Pickering began.

"Not 'we,'" Edwards interrupted. "You? Did you make such a phone call?"

Pickering acknowledged making the call.

Edwards continued, demanding that Pickering admit he'd violated the judicial code of ethics.

Shortly after the withering exchange, Pickering requested a 10-minute break.

Victoria Toensing, a former lawyer in the attorney general's office under President Reagan, said the "racially loaded" Pickering fight shows how bitter judicial appointments have become.

"What these people on the Hill do to judicial nominees is disgraceful," she said, referring to Republicans as well as Democrats. She said the smear campaigns lower the quality of judges willing to come forward for federal appointments.

"It's like the situation between the Palestinians and Israel," she said. "Everybody's trying to get back at the other for the last time.

"At some point, somebody's just got to stop."

Critics: Bush Mishandling Nominees

REV_00141442

Legal Times
Monday, March 4, 2002

With a fractious and drawn-out debate brewing over the nomination of Charles Pickering Sr., many players are criticizing the Bush administration as weak and ineffective in its efforts to shore up its embattled judicial nominee.

Members of both parties say that liberal groups and Democratic senators opposing Pickering have set the tone of the debate and that the administration has been repeatedly outflanked, endangering the Mississippian's chances of gaining confirmation to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit.

The impact could go well beyond Pickering. Several other nominees are facing stiff opposition from Democrats -- from 3rd Circuit nominee D. Brooks Smith, grilled by Democrats at a hearing last week, to 6th Circuit nominee Jeffrey Sutton.

So far, Senate staffers and conservative judicial activists say they see little evidence of the hard-headed lobbying and vote-counting that they expect from the White House and the Department of Justice.

An administration official says the criticisms are being taken seriously.

"No one in the administration is satisfied with our performance on Pickering," this official says. "We are taking steps to try to improve the way we do things and to ensure that we can be as effective as possible, going forward."

On Pickering, the administration was, to a large extent, blindsided by a liberal onslaught.

At a Jan. 28 press conference, a broad liberal coalition announced its opposition to the elevation of the Mississippi district judge to the appeals court and kicked off a major lobbying campaign. They criticized Pickering for his alleged insensitivity on racial issues, for some alleged ethical improprieties, and for his record of reversals by the appeals court he would be joining. Many say the White House has been stuck in a passive mode ever since.

"I really don't think there has been engagement," says one D.C. lawyer close to the confirmation process. "The administration has been put into the position of reacting to whatever [Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick] Leahy says. It's as if they open their mail every day to look for a notice of execution" of one of their bench nominees.

Says a Republican observer: "I think they were caught short by the ferocity of the opposition. The administration was not thinking strategically. They probably are now, in connection with other nominees. But I think the most likely outcome is that Pickering will be defeated."

Officials from President George W. Bush on down have repeatedly avowed their support for

REV_00141443

Pickering. But most of the ready responses to specific charges against the nominee have come not from administration sources, but from journalists at conservative outlets like The Weekly Standard and National Review.

Eleanor Acheson, who as an assistant attorney general spearheaded the Clinton administration's efforts on judicial nominees, attended the Feb. 7 hearing on Pickering and felt that the nominee was poorly prepared on some civil rights issues.

Acheson says one of Pickering's responses to a query from Sen. Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.) was particularly harmful. Asked about his strong language in rejecting individual claims of racial bias in the workplace, Pickering said that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission screens job-bias cases and resolves the meritorious ones, so that many cases in district court lack merit. This response drew immediate flak from liberals.

"At the hearing, it just did not look as if he had gotten any kind of experienced help as to how to make whatever his best case is before the Senate," Acheson says.

The Judiciary Committee, with 10 Democrats and nine Republicans, is expected to vote later this week on the nominee. Last week, the vote was postponed from Feb. 28 at the request of Minority Leader Trent Lott of Mississippi, a long-standing friend and leading supporter of Pickering.

The Lott connection may be one of the reasons that the administration has not gone as far as it could go for Pickering.

"It's a pissing match with Trent Lott," says one conservative lawyer. "They agreed to [post this nomination] as a favor to Lott. But now the White House has told Lott it has other things to do. 'We agreed to nominate him, now you go get him confirmed,' they say. And Lott hasn't done that much either, considering his powerful position."

A Senate staffer agrees: "The White House views this as Lott's choice, not theirs. At age 64, he doesn't fit their view of the ideal candidate for the federal appeals court. And he is not an impressive candidate. So they feel they don't have to fight hard for him."

Working the Hill

The attorney close to the confirmation process says the problem is not so much the nominee's record or the link to Lott as it is the background of the people who are working the issue.

The Department of Justice's Office of Legal Policy (OLP), headed by Assistant Attorney General Viet Dinh, takes the lead for the Bush administration in confirmation battles on the Hill. This observer says that while Dinh is viewed as bright and hard-working, his past experience hasn't given him the political savvy he needs in the delicate task of winning over Democratic senators.

"It does not help that there's no commonality of experience between Viet Dinh and the Senate Democrats," says this observer, who notes that Dinh has limited Capitol Hill experience. "He also does not come across as a person with the gravitas that is needed, now that it has become clear that the Democratic Senate will fight on any nominee."

Dinh, 34, graduated from Harvard College and Harvard Law School and was a Georgetown University Law Center professor before joining the administration. He has Hill experience as associate counsel to the Senate Whitewater Committee and as impeachment counsel to Sen. Pete Domenici (R-N.M.).

Dinh declines to respond directly to the criticism. But an administration official says that Dinh and his OLP are not the only players on the stage.

"The confirmation process draws a response from the White House Legislative Affairs Office, the Justice Department's Legislative Affairs Office, the White House Public Liaison Office, and others, in addition to OLP and the White House Counsel's Office," this official says. "We will fight the worthy fight and leave the finger pointing to others.

"I think that the administration has stood in support of Pickering and has provided the support that he needs to rebut the unfair attacks," says this official.

Another official, however, says that while the administration's performance "has been good, it could be much better."

"We are currently trying to address deficiencies in our effectiveness," says this official. "It's receiving a lot of high-level attention. There's a widespread feeling that the attacks are unfair and also that we should have been more effective in beating them back."

This source declines to specify what steps the administration is considering to improve its response.

Says a senior DOJ official: "There is a recognition that there needs to be a coordinated effort on these things. We need to get out ahead on them."

Meanwhile, Lott has said that Pickering may have to consider withdrawing if the votes aren't there to confirm him, but administration officials and Pickering's son, Rep. Charles Pickering Jr. (R-Miss.), indicate such a move is unlikely.

The administration has been using the week-long delay in the committee vote as a chance to try to pick off any yet-undecided Democratic member. Assuming that the Republicans stay behind Pickering, just one Democratic switch on the committee would move the nomination to the floor, where the Republicans believe they can get a narrow vote for confirmation.

In the case of a party-line 10-9 vote against Pickering, which appears likely, the White House has a fallback strategy.

An administration official says that even if the committee rejects Pickering, the White House will argue that "at the very least, [the committee] should vote the nomination out and onto the floor without a recommendation or with a negative recommendation."

REV_00141445

While there is precedent for such a move -- two Reagan-era circuit court nominations were sent to the floor without a recommendation -- Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle has indicated he would not expect a nominee voted down in committee to make it to the floor.

Lee Youngblood, Lott's Mississippi press secretary, says the tide is turning in favor of Pickering. In Youngblood's view, "the left has been backtracking over the last two weeks," particularly because of reports indicating that Pickering enjoys strong support among African-Americans in his home state.

But Youngblood also says that Lott's office "is not coordinating this effort" to boost Pickering. "Senator Lott supports Pickering, but his record speaks for itself."

Two Nominated to Federal Bench for Central Pa

In addition, Bush is expected to nominate the Lycoming County district attorney for U.S. Attorney in the Middle District of Pennsylvania, the same district in which the judicial nominees would serve.

LCB Chairman John E. Jones III, 46, and attorney Christopher C. Conner, who was elected vice president of the Pennsylvania Bar Association in May at age 43, still must be confirmed by the U.S. Senate before they can serve on the U.S. District Court. Thomas A. Marino has been the Lycoming district attorney since 1996.

Jones and Conner would fill vacancies left by Sylvia H. Rambo and James F. McClure Jr., who became senior judges last year.

Jones has served since 1995 as chairman of the LCB, which controls the sale of wine and spirits in the state. The board's sales top $1 billion a year.

Jones said he was "humbled and very honored" by the nomination, which he had been seeking for nearly a year.

Jones had been mentioned in Harrisburg last year as a possible Republican gubernatorial candidate, but he said he decided not to run because of family concerns.

Conner did not immediately return a telephone message left at his home last week.

Conner, who practices with Mette Evans & Woodside in Harrisburg, was to become president of the bar association next year.

He has advocated merit selection of appellate judges over the current elective system.

From 1988 to 1996, Marino was an associate with the Williamsport law firm of McNemey Page Vanderlin & Hall. He received an associate degree from the Williamsport Area Community College, a bachelor's degree from Lycoming College, and his J.D. from the Dickinson School of Law.

The GOP's Post-Pickering Strategy

By Byron York
National Review Online
Friday, March 1, 2002

With the nomination of Charles Pickering to a place on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals nearly dead, Senate minority leader Trent Lott held a meeting Thursday afternoon with Republican members of the Senate Judiciary Committee to plan a post-Pickering strategy for judicial-confirmation battles. According to a source familiar with the proceedings, there were "a lot of angry feelings" in the room, not only about Democratic attacks on Pickering but about the general treatment of Bush-administration judicial nominees. "This has been a very sobering lesson," the source says.

But the meeting wasn't really about Pickering. "Actually, not much was said about him," says the source. "Most people are resigned to the fact that we are not going to get him." Instead, the focus of the meeting was what to do next. "We need to have a strategy to move forward," the source continues. "We need to be tougher, we need to have White House involvement, we need to find ways to counter the interest groups on the other side." As improbable as it might seem to veterans of confirmation wars, some in the GOP were surprised by the ferocity of Democratic attacks on Pickering. Some Republicans were apparently lulled into a sense of confidence by Pickering's lack of any obvious vulnerabilities; after all, Pickering had been unanimously confirmed to the U.S. District Court ten years before, with the votes of Democratic senators who now oppose him. Also, the American Bar Association, assessing his decade of work on the bench, gave Pickering its "well qualified" rating. And he had the support of many community leaders, both black and white, in his home state of Mississippi, as well as the support of both home-state senators.

Yet the Democratic attack came, and some Republicans were not ready for it. Now, as they consider what to do next, one of the issues they are grappling with is how involved President Bush should be in appeals-court nomination battles. Should the president enter the public fray on behalf of specific nominees for the federal courts of appeal? Or should the president save his words for the Supreme Court nominations that he might have to make at any time?

By most accounts, the White House has done little to support Pickering, who was nominated at the insistence of his friend Trent Lott. At a White House briefing Tuesday, spokesman Ari

Fleischer repeated an earlier assertion that "the president believes in Judge Pickering and will fight for Judge Pickering." But when a reporter asked what, precisely, the president had in mind, Fleischer answered, "I think he'll just make an assessment at the appropriate time about what that means, of what level of activity he will personally engage in. He'll just make that call as it gets closer."

That call apparently was made the next day, on Wednesday morning, when Bush brought the subject up during a White House meeting that included Lott and Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle. One source familiar with that conversation says Bush made a flat statement that the Senate should confirm Pickering. "The president said Pickering deserves to be confirmed," the source says. "When he said that, Lott jumped in and said he was disappointed in how Pickering was being treated." Daschle, according to the source, was non-committal.

Afterwards, Daschle denied that Bush had made an appeal for Pickering's confirmation. "The president didn't ask for a floor vote," Daschle told reporters Wednesday afternoon. "He asked what the prospects were, and I said I didn't know. There wasn't any request of me to take it to the floor. He made his general views known about the need to move ahead on judges, and expressed the hope that we could confirm as many as possible." Daschle said he told Bush "that's a matter for the Judiciary Committee....I respect the Judiciary Committee's decisions, and we have to accept those."

Daschle's account appears implausible; it seems unlikely that Bush would bring up the Pickering nomination simply to ask what the prospects were, since the president surely knows they are dismal. It's more likely that Bush said just what other witnesses said he said - that Pickering should be confirmed. Republicans in Congress can take some comfort in that, since it is unusual for a president to make a personal appeal on behalf of a nominee to an appeals-court seat. On the other hand, Bush's pro-Pickering pitch was not terribly forceful - Daschle felt free to ignore it completely - and it came very, very late in the game.

Now, Republicans appear to have come to the conclusion that they must do much, much better the next time. Democrats are making no secret of their intention to oppose several of the president's more conservative nominees, and even some of the Senate's less-confrontational Republicans have realized that the Pickering fight was just the first of many to come.

Is Pickering Dead?

By Byron York
National Review Online
Monday, March 4, 2002

In a move that could restart a struggle that many observers - and some participants - thought was over, Republicans are planning a renewed battle this week over the nomination of Charles Pickering to a place on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. There is even some discussion that President Bush will become personally involved in the fight, perhaps by making an appearance with Pickering or making a public statement on his behalf.

While it is not clear that the Pickering nomination can be saved at this very late date, there seems to be an awakened spirit among some in the GOP that a defeat would be seriously damaging for President Bush - not because Pickering is an indispensable man, but because a Democratic victory would embolden the president's enemies to press ever harder to defeat more judicial nominees, including those for the Supreme Court.

"We intend to fight specifically for Judge Pickering because we feel he is the best qualified man for that position, but there is also a higher principle involved," says a White House source. "Good nominees shouldn't have to go through the kind of character assassination that Judge Pickering has been through, and we should not let people who are opposed to one ideology or another dictate who sits on the federal judiciary." For the moment, however, the Pickering nomination is considered all but dead. One leading Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee has said that all ten Democrats on the committee intend to vote against Pickering. In addition, some Senate Republicans who have been deeply involved in past confirmation battles have stayed on the sidelines during this fight. And appearing on NBC Sunday, Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle attempted to put an end to already-slim GOP hopes that the Pickering nomination might still receive a vote in the full Senate, even if it is rejected in the Judiciary Committee. When Meet the Press host Tim Russert asked, "If the committee votes 10 to 9 against [Pickering], is the nomination dead?" Daschle responded tersely, "It is."

Nevertheless, some Republicans believe there is still hope for Pickering. This is their scenario: The nomination will indeed be voted down in committee, with all ten Democrats voting against Pickering and all nine Republicans voting for him. At that point, Republicans will make a motion to send the nomination to the full Senate with no recommendation or with a negative recommendation. The committee would then take a vote on that motion. If Democrats stay together and vote the motion down, the nomination will be officially dead. But Republicans believe there might be hope of convincing - or pressuring or horse-trading with - one Democrat into voting to send the nomination to the floor. If that were to happen, Pickering would likely be confirmed, because at two Democrats have said they would support him in a floor vote.

While their chances of victory are not clear, some Republicans are promising a hard-fought, behind-the-scenes campaign to move Pickering to a full-Senate vote. "He's not going down," says one Hill Republican of Pickering. "There's going to be a fight."

But why now? If Republicans really wanted to win Pickering's confirmation, why weren't they better prepared when he faced intense Democratic attacks at his second confirmation hearing on February seventh? Why had they not responded more energetically to the charges against Pickering in the weeks leading up to that hearing? Why, after all that, make a last-second stand when it might be too late to win?

The answer appears to lie in a growing Republican perception that the fight for Pickering far transcends Pickering himself. Some Republicans were deeply struck on February 24, when Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein, a member of the Judiciary Committee, resurrected the Democratic contention that the narrowness of Bush's victory in the 2000 election disqualifies him from appointing conservatives to the bench. "President Bush did not have a large mandate," Feinstein said. "There is no mandate, in my view, to skew the courts to the right. And so I think you're going to see a Judiciary Committee that's really going to be looking for mainstream judges, and those judges that they find outside of the mainstream I do not believe will have Democratic support."

Feinstein's words were an across-the-board challenge to Republicans, and the White House in particular. Using the kind of rhetoric that has not been heard since the contentious days after the Supreme Court decided the case of Bush v. Gore, Feinstein made clear that Pickering will be just the first of many confirmation fights. Now, although it seems to have taken a few days to sink in, Feinstein's challenge has made a profound impression on Republicans. "The Constitution gives the president the mandate to choose judges," says a White House source. "If the Democrats see the need to change the Constitution, that's something they need to take up with the American people."

A Judge Gets Grilled

Kate Michelman President, National Abortion Rights Action League

Washington, D.C.

Dear Kate,

Thanks for your telephone call of a couple of weeks ago. I'm sorry I was away from home when you rang. But I guess it doesn't matter because it was just a recorded message. Sorry, Kate. I never did call Sen. John Edwards and ask him to vote against U.S. District Court Judge Charles Pickering's Senate confirmation to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Not that there was much doubt about how John would vote. After all, John wants to win the Democratic nomination for president in 2004.

That is why John used his considerable courtroom ability to try to tear Pickering apart during a Senate Judiciary Committee confirmation hearing last month. He treated the judge like a doctor accused of malpractice. Then John went out to Los Angeles and boasted to the California Democratic convention about how hard-nosed he was.

All the liberal interest groups, including yours, Kate, want to hang Pickering out to dry. A Republican from Laurel, Miss., he is one of the first controversial judicial appointments by President George W. Bush. And judicial confirmation hearings have become just another form of political warfare.

John particularly went after Pickering's handling of a 1994 trial in which a man was convicted of burning a cross on the lawn of an interracial couple who had a 2-year-old child. Bad stuff that. Pickering sentenced the man to 27 months, even though the U.S. Justice Department had recommended seven and a half years.

Pickering said he gave the lighter sentence because the man's two accomplices got off much lighter, and one of them was let off with home confinement after he pleaded guilty. John also criticized Pickering for inappropriately contacting a Justice Department official about the case, which the senator said breached ethics. Pickering said he was just expressing his frustrations.

White Republican from Mississippi? Cross burning? Whoa boy, that is raw meat in liberal Washington circles.

There is just one problem. The New York Times sent a reporter down to Mississippi and talked to a lot of black people and they all said Pickering was a fine man, more like Atticus Finch than Ross Barnett.

Pickering was praised by black people for helping to set up after-school youth programs, and for directing federal money to medical clinics in low-income areas when he was a state senator. Black business leaders say he was influential in persuading white-owned banks to lend money to black entrepreneurs.

"I can't believe the man they're describing in Washington is the same one I've known for years," said Thaddeus Edmonson, a former local president of the NAACP who is now president of the Laurel City Council. "If those people who are voting against him because of some press release would just come down here and talk to the people who know him, I think they would have a very different opinion."

But none of this fazed John, who announced last week that he would vote against the Pickering nomination. I guess, Kate, you can't get any cheers in L.A. by describing Pickering as a fair man.

Call again soon.

Love ya,

Rob

Pickering Foe Gets Broadside from Scruggs; Lawyer Claims Senator is Ignoring Him

By Ben Bryant
The Sun Herald
Saturday, March 2, 2002

Last month, Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., took on Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. Now, he has to deal with Richard "Dickie" Scruggs, too.

Scruggs, the Pascagoula lawyer who made national headlines by suing tobacco companies in the mid-1990s and winning millions, was angered by Edwards' harsh questioning of Pickering Feb. 7 during the Hattiesburg judge's second appearance before the Senate Judiciary Committee. The committee will vote next week on his nomination to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. If Edwards fulfills his pledge to vote against the nomination, Scruggs said he will marshal his influence to turn trial lawyers against the senator's future campaigns, which some speculate might include a run for the White House in 2004.

That could mean trouble for Edwards, himself a millionaire trial lawyer and a major recipient of campaign donations from his profession. Lawyers and law firms have given him $1.5 million since 1997, and his political action committee, New American Optimists, has gotten more than $650,000 from lawyers since November.

A sizable chunk, $167,000, of the latter figure came from Mississippi trial lawyers, their family members and employees of their firms. Federal Election Commission records show that Scruggs has not been among Edwards' direct financial backers, but he said he has urged other lawyers to support the senator.

But since Pickering's Feb. 7 hearing, Scruggs said he has re-evaluated his feelings toward Edwards. He said Edwards angered him by not returning calls he made in support of Pickering in the days leading up to the hearing, an account confirmed by an Edwards spokesman.

"He can call me when he wants to have a fund-raiser, but he can't call me back when I want to talk to him about Judge Pickering," said Scruggs, who has been a friend of Pickering for more than 20 years. "To me, that indicates a character flaw."

Scruggs said Edwards called him "a few days" after the hearing, during which the senator suggested that Pickering violated judicial ethics in 1995 by intervening at the Justice Department on behalf of a cross-burning suspect whose case he was hearing.

That charge added to and underscored some interest groups' contention that Pickering has been insensitive to civil rights since his Ole Miss law school days, when he wrote a law review article suggesting ways to strengthen the state's ban on interracial marriages.

The judge has also criticized elements of voting rights law and has routinely ruled against plaintiffs in employment discrimination cases in his current position as a U.S. District Court judge for the Southern District of Mississippi.

"Every allegation that Democrats on the committee are throwing at (Pickering) falls apart when it's examined closely or put in context," said Scruggs, a lifelong Democrat who has given thousands of dollars to state and national party causes. "There are a lot of liberals who are for Charles Pickering. I'm one of them."

Another Coast trial lawyer and Edwards donor, Paul Minor of Biloxi, said he asked the senator to give "favorable consideration" to Pickering before the hearing.

"I've represented a number of clients before him, most of whom have been African-American, and we have been treated with complete fairness," said Minor, who gave $5,000 to Edwards' PAC in December. Minor did not know that Edwards had announced his opposition to Pickering's nomination and planned to call him this week to ask him to reconsider.

Minor said he planned to try to get Scruggs and Edwards to reach a compromise on their positions. But Scruggs' threat to cut off support for Edwards may not be very potent even if it is effective, said Doug Weber, an analyst at the Center for Responsive Politics, a nonpartisan Washington organization that tracks campaign donations. Weber pointed out that Edwards' personal fortune gives him room to offend donors and potential donors.

"Self-financed candidates have a lot to fall back on," Weber said of Edwards, who has given himself more than $6 million since 1997, accounting for about 60 percent of individual donations to his war chest.

Still, Scruggs could cause a headache for Edwards, said W.C. "Cham" Trotter III, president of the Mississippi Bar Association.

"If I were Sen. Edwards, I wouldn't want to have Dickie Scruggs mad at me," Trotter said. "I think it's something he should definitely be concerned about."

Whitewashing a Mississippi Judge

By George Curry
BlackPressUSA.com
Monday, March 4, 2002

In an attempt to bolster the proposed appointment of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering Sr. to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, which is scheduled to be voted on this week by the Senate Judiciary Committee, his supporters are trying to soften his anti-Black image by depicting him as courageously standing up against the Ku Klux Klan in Mississippi.

That's only part of the story. The other part is that Pickering's opposition to the Klan, like that of many other powerful Whites in Laurel, Miss., was prompted by the KKK attacking members of the White establishment, not trampling on the rights of African-Americans.

Even the "Washington Post" praised Pickering in an editorial, saying "...he testified publicly against the Ku Klux Klan in the 1960s...as a young prosecutor, he aided the FBI's efforts against the Klan."

Significantly, it is Pickering, not his opponents, who keeps bringing up his decision to testify against the Klan. When Pickering was first considered for a federal judgeship in 1990, he cited that act to counter the NAACP's opposition to his nomination.

In the Judiciary Committee's first round of hearings last October to consider his elevation to the appeals level, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) questioned Pickering about affirmative action in higher education. Again, Pickering mentioned his anti-Klan testimony in an effort to portray himself as the equivalent of White Freedom Riders of that period who risked their lives by helping desegregate interstate travel in the Deep South.

Pickering served as County Attorney for Jones County in the mid-1960s. He had grown up in Laurel, Miss., the seat of Jones County and a hotbed of Klan activity. In fact, Sam Bowers, the head of the White Knights of the KKK, had his headquarters in Laurel.

Pickering and other members of the White establishment did not take on the Klan until they felt they were losing control of the city. The Klan had been implicated in a series of bombings, including the destruction of "Lauren Leader-Call" newspapers in May 1964, even though the paper supported racial segregation.

Most of the tensions at that time centered around the efforts of the Masonite Corp., a hardwood producer and the town's largest employer, to comply with the 1964 Civil Rights Act. As the company and the union became more diverse, there was a corresponding increase in attacks on the union and the plant. There were two strikes, in 1964 and 1967, dynamite explosions, beatings and shooting into homes and cars.

According to the book, "Clear Burning," written by Chet Dillard, who was the Laurel city attorney at he time, Pickering was serving as his Jones County counterpart, "...The violence had reached the proportion of a regular civil war, with the Masonite plant in a state of siege, because of the violence involved in striking and the Klanish activities."

It was Henry Bucklew, the mayor of Laurel and a top official in segregationist Alabama Gov. George Wallace's presidential campaign, who had rallied the White establishment to take on the Klan, mostly for safety and economic reasons. He was quoted in one 1966 news account: "I am a segregationist but I'm not a criminal. For that reason, I'm going to accept the law."

A group of law enforcement officials, including Jones County Attorney Pickering, issued a statement expressing the same sentiment. According to "Clear Burning," the statement read: "...While we believe in continuing our Southern way of life and realize that outside agitators have caused much turmoil and racial hatred, let there be no misunderstanding, we oppose such activities, but law and order must prevail."

The reference to the "Southern way of life" was unmistakable: Racial segregation should be maintained. White Southerners of that period always blamed "outside agitators" for stirring up racial tensions, not their White supremacy views.

In March 1968, Sam Bowers, the Klan leader from Laurel, went on trial for the murder of civil rights activist Vernon Dahmer (Bowers' first trial ended in a hung jury but he was later convicted). It was in that first trial that Pickering testified.

REV_00141454

Defense Counsel: Do you know of Sam Bowers' reputation in the community?
Pickering: Yes.
Defense Counsel: Is it good or bad?
Pickering: It's bad.
Defense Counsel: Do you know that Sam Bowers teaches Sunday School?
Pickering: Yes.
Defense Counsel: Thank you. That will be all.

And that's what we're supposed to applaud Pickering for?

A more accurate reflection of Pickering's views of the period was evidence of his support of the Sovereignty Commission, the state-funded agency that spied on civil rights leaders and compiled dossiers on activists. As a state senator, Pickering voted twice to appropriate state money to "defray the expenses" of the commission.

In 1990, Pickering testified at his Senate confirmation hearing, "…I never had any contact with the Sovereignty Commission." However, commission documents released subsequently, painted a different picture. A staff memo dated, Jan. 5, 1972, noted that Pickering and two other state senators were "very interested" in a commission investigation into union activity at a Laurel, Miss., company, presumably Masonite. It said the senators had "requested to be advised of developments" to infiltrate the union and sought information on the union's leader.

Regardless of how hard they may try, Pickering supporters can't whitewash his White supremacy record.

Letter: Judge not Unethical

By Ben Bryant
The Sun Herald
Thursday, February 28, 2002

Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. did not breach judicial ethics by phoning the Justice Department in 1995 on behalf of a man convicted in his court of cross-burning, the former official who received the call has told the Senate committee considering Pickering's appeals court nomination.

In a Feb. 12 letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee, former Assistant Attorney General Frank Hunger endorsed Pickering as "a fair-minded judge who would never knowingly do anything improper or unethical."

Senate Republicans say the letter is significant because Democrats have cited Pickering's contact with Hunger as a reason for opposing the judge's nomination.

Mimi Devlin, a spokesman for committee Democrats, said Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., didn't receive the letter until Tuesday night. Hunger took issue with that, saying he had the letter hand-delivered to Leahy and Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch, the committee's ranking Republican, two weeks ago. A committee vote on Pickering's nomination to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is set for next week.

Pickering phoned Hunger, his friend for more than 30 years, in 1995 in search of a lighter sentence for Daniel Swan, who was convicted before Pickering in 1994 for burning a cross on the lawn of an interracial couple in Walthall County. Hunger said he took no action as a result of the call.

"I have little or no recollection of the call," Hunger wrote in his letter to the Judiciary Committee. "The significance of this to me is, had I felt at the time that there was anything inappropriate or improper about Judge Pickering's call, I would most assuredly remember it today."

Now a Washington attorney, Hunger is a Greenville native and brother-in-law to former Vice President Al Gore.

"(Pickering) has been a distinguished judge, and I think it most regrettable that his nomination has become controversial," Hunger wrote in his letter.

In a telephone interview Wednesday, Hunger termed the Judiciary Committee's treatment of Pickering "a tragedy." But Hunger's words had little effect on Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., the committee member who questioned Pickering about the call at a Feb. 7 confirmation hearing, the judge's second.

"Sen. Edwards has solicited opinions from a number of legal experts from around the country, and they said the contact was improper and unethical," said Mike Briggs, a spokesman for Edwards.

But legal opinions solicited by Judiciary's Republican minority have rendered contrary views of the call, underscoring the intense division generated by Pickering's nomination.

Edwards and two other committee Democrats have said they will vote against sending the nomination to the full Senate for a vote, and the other Democrats are expected to join. Because Democrats hold a 10-9 majority on Judiciary, that means Pickering's nomination wouldn't make it to the floor, where he would likely be confirmed with the support of Democrats such as Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., and Zell Miller, D-Ga., who have both announced their support.

On Wednesday, Republican aides said a compromise may be brokered by moderate senators of both parties in which Pickering's nomination is reported to the floor, albeit with an unfavorable recommendation from the committee.

A Nomination Worth Fighting For

By Terry Eastland
The Weekly Standard
Monday, March 4, 2002

Among the announcements White House press secretary Ari Fleischer made in his daily briefing on February15 was this: "The president believes in and will fight for the nomination of [Charles] Pickering." Pickering certainly could use the president's help. His nomination -- the first judicial confirmation battle of the Bush presidency -- is in trouble and may fail even with Bush's engagement. But Pickering's confirmation chances will improve if the president stands up for him. With the Senate returning this week and a Judiciary Committee vote looming, "will fight" must become "is fighting."

In case you're new to the story, Charles Pickering is a federal trial judge, a 1990 appointee of George Bush. Last year George W. Bush designated Pickering for elevation to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee, who hold a 10-to-9 edge, have been digging in their heels against Pickering. If Pickering were to be voted out of committee, he might be confirmed, since two Democrats -- Zell Miller of Georgia and Fritz Hollings of South Carolina -- have indicated their support. Thus the committee vote is crucial. In deciding to target Pickering first among Bush nominees, committee Democrats would seem to have made a peculiar choice. After all, a Democrat-controlled Senate unanimously confirmed Pickering to his district judgeship in 1990. A substantial majority of the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on the Judiciary has now rated him "well qualified," and the ABA, not a conservative body, is an organization Senate Democrats, if not this Republican White House, routinely salute. Consider, too, that Pickering is 64 -- old as appellate court nominees go. He's unlikely to serve long enough to make a substantial jurisprudential difference, even assuming he's the sort of lawyer apt to make that kind of difference, which administration officials in whispered asides say he's not. Instead, they say he's "Lott's guy."

Lott, as in Trent Lott, a close friend of Pickering. From the first days of the Bush presidency, Lott pushed Bush to nominate Pickering. Bush settled on Pickering the same week in May that James Jeffords left the GOP. Senate Democrats didn't exactly admire Lott when he was majority leader. Now in the majority themselves, they can exact some revenge by opposing Pickering. No other Bush nominee so qualifies as an anti-Lott target. This is petty, yes, but this is the Senate.

Pickering also affords Democrats a chance to raise a topic on which Republicans are easily put on the defensive -- race. Democrats have forced Pickering to voice regrets for some things he said and did decades ago that lent support to or failed to oppose the status quo of segregation. The nomination thus has allowed Democrats to strut their presumed moral superiority -- notwithstanding the fact that Democrat Robert Byrd of West Virginia was once a member of the Ku Klux Klan, while Pickering prosecuted it and testified against one of its imperial wizards.

With Pickering, the Democrats are pursuing what might be called a strategy of prevention. Because the Supreme Court takes so few cases, the nation's 13 appellate courts effectively function as mini-supreme courts. Bush wants to appoint judicial conservatives. His appointees could shift the balance of power in a conservative direction on more of these courts -- unless the Senate says no. The necessity for the Democrats is to challenge nominees they see as beatable at low political cost, which they think Pickering is. Absent the president's engagement in the battle, they are right.

Democrats believe the Fifth Circuit is too conservative already, and that Pickering would add to the imbalance. By defeating Pickering -- the first of four judges Bush has nominated to the Fifth Circuit, a court of 17 members when at full strength -- Democrats aim to tell Bush that he must cease and desist from nominating judicial conservatives to appellate courts and instead pick "mainstream" judges. And, for that matter, "mainstream" Supreme Court justices, should vacancies on the high court occur.

As for Pickering himself, the effort to portray him as "insensitive" on race (racist, if you know how to read these things) is unfair. Democrats have seized on this and that -- a law review article on Mississippi's anti-miscegenation statute that he wrote in 1959 as a law student; trivial contact in the early 1970s with the pro-segregationist Mississippi state Sovereignty Commission; and support as a state senator in the 1970s for an open primary bill that the Justice Department blocked on account of its negative impact on black voters. None of this amounts to much when the man is seen in full, for Pickering also stood against the Klan in Mississippi when that took courage and, over the past two decades, has led racial reconciliation efforts in the state. Blacks in Pickering's hometown of Laurel support him even as they wonder what the fuss in Washington is all about. Larry Thomas, owner of a pharmacy in Laurel, told the New York Times: "Over the years I've seen him work with black leaders and really try to make an effort to understand and help the community. That's progressiveness that we need to see more of in this state." A black councilman offered this: "So many people are angry about the past. But if the judge has moved beyond his past, I think we should all try to do the same."

Notwithstanding that the ABA in its review of Pickering found nothing to object to in terms of ethics, committee Democrats have. Last fall, Pickering asked lawyers who had appeared in his court to write letters in support of his nomination. Russell Feingold worries whether this does not raise an "appearance" problem, and a legal ethics expert, consulted by Legal Times, has said the solicitation might amount to "unintentional coercion." Pickering's actions strike us as unwise, but not unethical. Another "ethics issue": During the sentencing phase of a cross-burning case in 1995, Pickering, frustrated with the Justice Department's handling of the case, had a phone conversation with the then head of the Civil Division, a friend from Mississippi, who had no line authority over the prosecutors involved and in any case took no action. John Edwards has seized on this phone call to charge Pickering with an "ex parte" communication in violation of the Code of Judicial Conduct. But on close inspection, the allegation falls apart. Ethics authorities disagree.

As a judge, Pickering has at times gone off point, as it were, to offer his views about the law at hand or some public controversy. In a 1993 voting rights case, for example, he criticized the Supreme Court's "one man, one vote" principle. In another, he elaborated his views on federal pension law. Judges of all jurisprudential stripes have been known so to digress, and it's not a practice we'd hold up as ideal. Still, Pickering's record on the bench, taken whole, is not that of a judge who twists the law to reach decisions enforcing his own personal or political views.

Pickering has repeatedly tried to assure committee Democrats that as an appeals court judge he would read the law as it is, not rewrite it to suit his views. But Democrats see that Pickering is a conservative and that he is a judge, and they seem determined to believe that he would be a results-oriented judge. Abortion, as you might expect, is a huge Democratic concern. Pickering, who has never had to rule on an abortion case, disagrees with the Supreme Court's abortion jurisprudence. Long before becoming a judge, he supported a constitutional amendment that would have overturned Roe v. Wade. Queried on all of this, Pickering has insisted that as an appellate judge he would of course adhere to what the Supreme Court has said on the issue.

There's really nothing more that Pickering can say in his own behalf on that or anything else. Which of course is his problem, just as it was Robert Bork's problem 15 years ago. There's little a judicial nominee can do in his own behalf when the Judiciary Committee is preparing to vote no. Needed in these circumstances is an energetic executive, a president willing to argue publicly for his nominee -- in the present case, to challenge the inaccurate and unfair portrayals of Pickering and to expose the Democratic effort for what it is, an attempt to force the president to choose judges more to the liking of Al Gore. Let there be no mistake: Pickering is Bush's nominee, not Trent Lott's. This is a battle for the president to fight, for if Pickering loses, it will be the president's defeat.

Judging Judges

Connecticut Law Tribune
Monday, March 4, 2002

On the page opposite, the Law Tribune's Advisory Board this week opines on President George W. Bush's pending judicial nominations and on the legitimacy of those nominations. Although the Advisory Board is by no means constrained to hold the same views as this newspaper, we have not frequently publicly disagreed on a topic. However, on the subject of judicial nominations, our view is substantially different. At the beginning of this year, there were 94 vacancies in the federal judiciary, representing about 11 percent of all federal judgeships. That is the highest number of vacancies since 1994. Such a dearth is a serious impediment to the delivery of justice on the federal level. The holdup, of course, isn't that President Bush hasn't proffered enough nominations, it's that the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee isn't moving very fast to vote on those picks.

Our colleagues would have us believe that the fault here lies primarily with the president. There is much wailing that he has nominated for judgeships people whose ideology he is in agreement with, followed by much moaning that he wants those nominations acted on quickly. And there is the shallow argument that he owes the nation a duty to ignore his own principles in favor of his opponents' because of the nature of his election-as if presidents ever checked their margin of victory in choosing judicial nominees.

Far be it from us to suggest that such criticism is politically nave; let us say instead that it is politically one-sided. Indeed the structure of the argument itself-please put in our ideologues rather than your ideologues-directly undercuts the assertion that politics should take a back seat in this process.

These judicial posts need to be filled, and the president's call for swifter action is not isolated. Indeed, our colleagues ignore the fact that Chief Justice William Rehnquist is also pushing senators to speed up the judicial confirmation process, and has castigated the Senate on its lax attention to the needs of the federal judiciary.

Every president, Democrat or Republican, nominates jurists that he thinks will represent a certain philosophy. It is a feint to suggest that President Bush's picks are any more ideologically suspect than those of President Clinton-or Reagan, or Carter, or Kennedy.

To safeguard against extremism and incompetence is exactly why the president's nominations must be vetted by the Senate. And Bush's record so far actually demonstrates that he has not chosen ideological fanatics. The Senate in 2001 confirmed more of his choices than it did for the previous two presidents. Of Bush's 64 judicial nominations, 28 were confirmed in his first year in office, compared with 27 for President Clinton and 15 for the first Bush administration. One would hardly expect such success if the nominee pool were of such low quality.

Criticism of President Bush's choices, moreover, sometimes hovers on the politically ignorant. Our Advisory Board suggests that Bush take the opportunity to name "some well-qualified Democrats the bench." One has to wonder what Democrat Barrington Parker Jr., nominated by Bush and sworn in to the 2nd Circuit last month during ceremonies at Yale, will make of such a statement.

The Senate Judiciary Committee knows how to give nominees a grilling, and lately is having much fun with Charles Pickering's quest for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit. Frankly, that's as it should be, albeit quicker. The Senate should look for qualified nominees, and either vote them up or down. Indeed, no one is suggesting that qualified candidates should be denied based solely on party affiliation. Well, almost no one.

Article on Pickering Missed Key Points

By Ralph Neas
Legal Times
Monday, March 4, 2002

Jonathan Groner's recent article ["Judge's Record: What Was Left Out," Feb. 4, 2002, Page 1] claimed that "liberal groups," including People for the American Way, have overlooked parts of U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering's record in concluding that he should not be confirmed to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit. In fact, it is Groner's article that has overlooked key aspects of Pickering's record demonstrating hostility to civil and constitutional rights.

It is not surprising that Groner could find individuals in Pickering's hometown who were willing to praise him to the media, particularly since Pickering will remain a sitting federal district judge even if he is not confirmed to the 5th Circuit. What is surprising is that Groner apparently did not bother to interview local individuals who courageously stepped forward as early as last October to oppose Pickering's confirmation, including officials with the Mississippi NAACP and the Magnolia Bar Association, a predominantly African-American bar group. Pickering's long public record, both before and after becoming a judge, is one of insensitivity and hostility toward key principles protecting the civil and constitutional rights of minorities, women, and all Americans. For example, both as a Mississippi State senator, and then as a federal judge, Pickering has sought to criticize or limit important remedies provided by the Voting Rights Act. As a federal judge, he has criticized the fundamental "one-person, one-vote" principle recognized by the Supreme Court under the 14th Amendment. Pickering called the principle "obtrusive" and suggested that large deviations from equality, which the Supreme Court has held presumptively unconstitutional, were "relatively minor" and "de minimis."

When he was a state senator, Pickering supported voting-related measures that helped perpetuate discrimination against African Americans, and voted to appropriate money to fund the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission, the notorious agency created by the state in 1956 to resist desegregation. As a law student, Pickering wrote an article advising the Mississippi legislature how to fix the state law making interracial marriage a felony punishable by up to 10 years in prison. A loophole had rendered the law unenforceable; Pickering's advice, which the legislature promptly took, enabled the law to be enforced. Pickering was specifically asked about this disturbing article at his district court confirmation hearing in 1990; rather than repudiate it, he sought to brush it aside as an "academic exercise." This past October, at his most recent confirmation hearing, Pickering continued to misrepresent his article.

As a judge, Pickering has gone out of his way to disparage plaintiffs in civil rights cases, even inserting the same disparaging dicta in more than one case. Our report does not attempt to evaluate Pickering's view of the evidence in each specific case, evidence to which neither Groner nor we were privy, but rather the disturbing hostility towards civil rights plaintiffs reflected by Pickering's repeated and gratuitous dicta. When a federal judge makes clear his hostility to civil rights laws and those protected by them, he creates a chilling effect on potential litigants and an impression that they will not receive a fair hearing in his court.

Our report also documents Pickering's long-standing opposition to women's reproductive freedom. Groner attempts to minimize these concerns by noting that Pickering has testified that he would consider it his duty as an appellate judge "to follow" Roe v. Wade. But even without overruling Roe v. Wade, the 5th Circuit has already found ways to limit women's reproductive freedom, making the addition of a judge like Pickering even more troubling.

In addition to these troubling aspects of Judge Pickering's record, there is clear reason to be concerned about his understanding of or willingness to follow clear precedent. Fifteen of the 26 times that he has been reversed by the 5th Circuit have been through unpublished decisions. According to 5th Circuit rules, unpublished decisions are used to decide "particular cases on the basis of well-settled principles of law." Eleven of those 15 cases in which Pickering violated "well-settled principles of law" involved constitutional, civil rights, criminal procedure, or labor issues. In contrast, Edith Brown Clement, who was also nominated by President Bush and was recently elevated to the 5th Circuit after serving as a district judge for a slightly shorter period than Pickering, was never reversed in an unpublished opinion by the 5th Circuit, according to the information that she provided to the Senate.

No federal judicial nominee is presumptively entitled to confirmation. Because federal judicial appointments are for life, nominees must demonstrate, as more than 200 law professors wrote the Senate Judiciary Committee last year, a "commitment to protecting the rights of ordinary Americans" and a "record of commitment to the progress made on civil rights, women's rights and individual liberties." Judge Pickering's record falls well short of the mark. The Senate Judiciary Committee should reject his confirmation.

My article was based on interviews with Pickering's supporters and critics in Washington and Mississippi, including county officials, civic activists, and attorneys who have appeared before him. It was also based on my reading of dozens of his opinions, both published and unpublished. Despicable Tactics

Saturday, March 2, 2002

I am a liberal Democrat and a lawyer. I simply do not agree with the attacks on U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith by liberal groups, in connection with his nomination to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The evidence seems to indicate that he recused himself from the John Gardner Black case as soon as he realized he had an apparent conflict of interest. Also, the trips he took to privately sponsored seminars are apparently permissible under the ethical rules for district judges. Thus these issues provide no basis for the type of attacks that have occurred.

Judge Smith also has been attacked because he had a number of his decisions overturned by the 3rd Circuit. However, all judges have decisions overturned on appeal. An assessment of the importance of the reversals depends upon legal analysis of the reasons for the reversals. Such analysis is far more difficult than spreading rumors.

I have a suspicion that the attacks on Judge Smith are motivated by politics, i.e., the desire of some liberals and Democrats for vengeance for the Republicans' obstruction of Clinton administration judicial nominees and other nominees. I hated the rumor-mongering and inaccurate accusations when the Republicans used these tactics against Democratic nominees. I hate these tactics even more now that I see my own party using them. I do not care whether those attacking Judge Smith agree with his political philosophy. I only wish that those opposing the Smith nomination would be fair.

I am greatly tempted to change my registration to Independent simply because I do not wish to be associated with the tactics being used by my fellow liberals and Democrats. I have been a Democrat since 1972, the first year I was eligible to vote.

By the way, I am not involved in any cases that are before Judge Smith.

A Judiciary Worth Fighting For

By E.J. Dionne, Jr.
The Washington Post
Friday, March 1, 2002

There is a big problem in the appointment and confirmation of federal judges. It's not the one you're accustomed to reading about.

The conventional story is that Democrats and liberal interest groups are doing terrible things to stop certain judges appointed by President Bush. The first casualty of this campaign may be near. The Senate Judiciary Committee was supposed to vote yesterday on Bush's nomination of Charles Pickering Sr. for the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott, Pickering's main sponsor, asked for a delay because he knew the committee's Democratic majority was about to vote his man down. If Pickering is defeated, you will hear that he was done in by unfair accusations. The anti-Pickering campaign did get ugly. Liberal groups dug deep into Pickering's past to make charges about his racial attitudes. On this front, Pickering was defended by African Americans from his home town. But the Democrats ended up opposing him on other grounds. They questioned why he was so often reversed on appeal and whether his record showed respect for precedent.

And then there's the central issue. Liberals are angry that during the Clinton years, Senate Republicans blocked one presidential nominee after another. The idea was to keep lots of judgeships open in the hope that a Republican president would some day name conservatives to the empty jobs.

The strategy worked, and Bush has many slots to fill. But now a conventional wisdom pushed hard by conservative groups holds that Democrats, having denounced Republican obstruction, should avoid delaying tactics themselves.

This reasonable-sounding view ignores the obvious: If Democrats roll over, they will be rewarding past obstruction by allowing the conservative nominees to dominate the courts for decades. To say Democrats shouldn't oppose weaker Bush nominees such as Pickering and 3rd U.S. Circuit appointee D. Brooks Smith is to argue that Democrats have an obligation to let Bush pack the courts. If Democrats can't fight these guys, who can they fight?

"To a large extent, the White House has taken the position that the Senate's obligation is not advise and consent but advise and rubber-stamp," says Sen. Patrick Leahy, the Vermont Democrat who chairs the Judiciary Committee.

There is an alternative to confrontation. It would involve accepting that the federal courts are at close parity in ideological and partisan terms and that neither liberals nor conservatives want a judiciary in thrall of their opponents. An honest approach would avoid empty assertions that politics has nothing to do with selecting judges and acknowledge the ideological struggle for control over the judiciary that has raged since at least the '70s.

If the goal is to have good judges confirmed without ugly fights, the White House and Senate Democrats should sit down and agree on lists of nominees. The lists might include a balance of highly qualified liberals and conservatives. Or they might consist of well-respected moderates.

There is ample precedent for genuine consultation. Presidents of both parties have long conferred with senators, including those from the opposition party, before making appointments in their states or regions. The Clinton administration reached agreements with former Judiciary Committee chairman Orrin Hatch to bring about at least a partial break in the appointments logjam toward the end of Clinton's presidency.

Leahy notes that when senators from both parties agree on judges, approval is swift. Bush nominees from Nebraska, Montana and Iowa -- all states represented by a senator from each party -- breezed through, because both senators signed off on appointees who were, as Leahy put it, "non-ideologues."

Why worry about a judiciary that tilts too far toward one party? Consider Tuesday's move by a three-judge federal panel to impose by fiat a congressional redistricting plan on the state of Mississippi. All three judges were Republican appointees. Their plan just happened to favor Rep. Charles W. Pickering Jr., a Republican. Yes, he's the son of the aforementioned judicial nominee.

Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, who handles cases from the 5th Circuit, which includes Mississippi, promptly rejected an appeal of the decision. Justice Scalia just happened to preside at the younger Pickering's first congressional swearing-in ceremony. No, no, this isn't the vast right-wing conspiracy at work, just an indication that the partisan leanings of judges sometimes seem to correlate with their decisions.

The president is free to nominate whomever he chooses. But his opponents have no obligation to acquiesce in his choices, and very good reasons to resist. The alternative is to seek balance, quality and moderation in our judges. Should a president who repeatedly assails partisan bickering have a problem with that?

Political Pinatas Judicial Nominees Get Bashed in Senate

The Daily Oklahoman
Friday, March 1, 2002

Two appeals court nominees, Charles Pickering of Mississippi and Brooks Smith of Pennsylvania, have been turned into political pinatas - part of a larger effort to block Bush's exercise of his constitutional privilege to fill vacancies on the federal bench with individuals whose philosophies, values and temperament are compatible with his own.

Unfortunately, Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee largely have succeeded in erecting caricatures of each man, which they have then opposed with a great degree of self-righteous table thumping and tut-tutting. Pickering, nominated to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, looks dead in the water with a 10-9 committee vote along party lines shaping up against him early this month, all but dooming his nomination.

His record on civil rights has been purposefully distorted, thanks to the efforts of the liberal People For the American Way. Indeed, Charles Pickering has been rendered almost unrecognizable to the folks back home.

"I can't believe the man they're describing in Washington is the same one I've known for years," Thaddeus Edmonson, former president of the Laurel, Miss., NAACP chapter told the Wall Street Journal editorial page. "If those people who are voting against him because of some press release would just come down here and talk to the people who know him, I think they would have a very different opinion."

Similarly, Smith, chief U.S. district judge for Pennsylvania's Western District who's been nominated to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, is taking a battering.

He's accused of failing to recuse himself soon enough from a 1997 case involving defrauded school districts and municipalities in which some funds had been deposited in a bank that employed Smith's wife. It's not that the judge didn't withdraw from the ase; he didn't do it soon enough to satisfy critics looking for an excuse to block his elevation to the appeals court.

It's clear what's going on. Democrats, who control the Senate by one vote, think they're entitled to demand that Bush appoint judges closer philosophically to Bill Clinton than to himself. Never mind that the Constitution grants the Senate only the role of "advice and consent." These people are in demand mode.

They also suffer from selective amnesia. When they were in the minority, Democrats believed each of Clinton's judicial nominees deserved a vote from the full Senate.

It was only a few years ago that Sen. Joe Biden, D-Del., said his reading of the Constitution made no mention of the Judiciary Committee. "We only in the Judiciary Committee have the right to give advice to the Senate, but it is the Senate that gives its advice and consent on judicial nominations," Biden said. "But it is not... appropriate not to have hearings on them (judicial nominees), not to bring them to the floor and not to allow a vote."

That was then, and this is now. With this kind of mean-spirited partisanship surrounding Bush's nominees to the district and appeals courts, we can only imagine what it will be like when it becomes his turn to name someone to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Experience Isn't Everything in Picking a Judge

Dale Minami
The Recorder
Friday, March 1, 2002

I read your editorial column on Feb. 22, 2002, ["Connolly for Judge Seat No. 10"] and wanted to offer my comments. I am an attorney who has practiced in the Bay Area for the past 30 years and has served on the Commission on Judicial Nominees Evaluation and Sen. Barbara Boxer's Judicial Evaluation Committee. As such, I have been involved in interviews and evaluations of literally hundreds of candidates for judicial office. While jury trial experience is a significant consideration, I believe many other qualities must be analyzed in the overall rating of judicial candidates. Integrity, compassion, an understanding of human nature, common sense, humility, connection to diverse communities, among others, should be considered.

While your editorial suggested that Ms. Lew "deliberately obfuscated" her jury trial experience, I can personally attest to her honesty and integrity as I have known and worked with her for many years. I also believe one personal interview conducted in a short period of time does not reflect the sum total of a candidate's qualifications and any conclusions drawn from such an artificial setting should not be conclusive about a person's character.

Attack Pack of Liberals Unleashed on Nominee

Not since the confirmation battles over Robert Bork and Clarence Thomas have liberal attack groups like the NAACP and People for the American Way waged as vicious a campaign against a judicial nominee as they have against Charles Pickering Sr.

REV_00141466

"A vote for Pickering is a vote against civil rights," declared Julian Bond, the NAACP's national chairman. "Pickering poses a grave danger to Americans' rights and liberties," charged Ralph Neas, president of People for the American Way.

The Senate Judiciary Committee is expected to vote next week on Pickering's nomination to sit on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. At least one committee member, California Democrat Dianne Feinstein, flatly predicts: "He will not be confirmed." "This particular seat is as important to us as a Supreme Court seat," said Feinstein, who chaired the Judiciary Committee hearing at which Pickering was "Borked," given the Thomas treatment.

She noted that the 5th Circuit, covering Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, led the way in years past on desegregation and voting rights. And she agreed with Bond and Neas that seating Pickering on that federal appellate court would set back those rights.

Pickering's foes all but declare him a racist, without going so far as to use the R-word. They thoroughly dissected his record going all the way back to his law school days to come up with ammunition to shoot down his nomination.

And, of course, they came up with a few items:

[] A 1959 law review article Pickering authored suggesting changes in Mississippi's anti-miscegenation law that would make it more effective.

[] His contacts as a state lawmaker in the 1970s with the state's so-called Sovereignty Commission, which, according to People for the American Way, was created to resist desegregation.

[] And, more recently, his criticism as a federal district court judge of redistricting based on race, and his handling of a cross-burning case.

To Pickering's critics, these and other selected incidents amount to prima facie evidence that the Mississippi jurist is, in Feinstein's words, "outside the mainstream."

But even the usually liberal Washington Post editorial page felt compelled to protest the ad hominem attack on Pickering.

"None of these incidents, when examined closely, amounts to much," the Post opined, "but opponents string them together, gloss over their complexities and self-righteously present a caricature of any unworthy candidate."

But it is absurd to suggest that Pickering's confirmation to the 5th Circuit would somehow turn back the clock on racial progress in America.

REV_00141467

That blacks would suddenly lose the right to vote. Or would be returned to the back of the bus. Or be denied service at lunch counters throughout the country.

Indeed, if Pickering represented such a threat, one would expect to hear it from the black folks who know him best -- those who hail from his hometown of Laurel, in southeast Mississippi.

Yet the appeals court nominee is held in high regard in Laurel's black community, as The New York Times recently reported.

According to the Times, Pickering was praised by Laurel city officials for helping to set up after-school youth programs there, and for steering federal money to medical clinics in low-income areas when he was a state senator.

Laurel's black business leaders say Pickering was influential in persuading white-owned banks to lend money to black entrepreneurs, which helped strengthen the city's black middle class.

"Over the years I've seen him work with black leaders and really try to make an effort to understand and help the community," said Larry Thomas, owner of a local pharmacy.

"I can't believe the man they're describing in Washington is the same one I've known for years, said Thaddeus Edmonson, president of the seven-member Laurel City Council and one of its five black members.

"If those people who are voting against him because of some press release would just come down here and talk to the people who know him, I think they would have a very different opinion."

But neither Feinstein nor her Democratic colleagues have troubled themselves to travel to Laurel to hear from Pickering's black supporters.

They have blindly accepted the dishonest portrait of Judge Pickering painted by the NAACP, People for the American Way and other liberal attack groups.

Senate Nomination Process

The Detroit News
Monday, March 4, 2002

The process by which the U.S. Senate approves presidential nominations to executive and judicial posts has been deteriorating for some time. The downward spiral has occurred under both the Republican and Democratic parties.

But the Democrats are in control of the Senate, and it is now their responsibility. The decline can be seen in two ways: the gratuitous vilification of nominees - and refusing to give them hearings.

REV_00141468

The vilification process can be seen in the nomination of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi for the Fifth Circuit of the U.S. Court of Appeals, which sits in New Orleans. Judge Pickering has been attacked as racially insensitive by People for the American Way, a special interest group based in Washington, D.C., and abetted by Senate Democrats.

But in Mississippi, he has the support of the former head of the local National Association for the Advancement of Colored People chapter, who told the Wall Street Journal that he "can't believe the the man they're describing in Washington is the same one I've known for years."

Similarly, D. Brooks Smith, a federal district judge nominated to the Philadelphia-based Third Circuit Court of Appeals, underwent an attack in the Senate described in the Journal by a colleague and former Third Circuit judge (and an African-American) as "character assassination." The colleague also wrote "I thought I had seen it all in the terms of the lengths people will go to destroy a nominee without any real justification."

Senate Democrats have the absolute constitutional right to oppose presidential nominations. But do they have to trash the nominees - in this case both U.S. district judges who have passed muster in the Senate once before? The Washington Post called the Pickering attacks "the latest example of the degradation of the confirmation process."

The Senate's Democratic majority is sullying itself with these tactics.

Even worse, of course, is its refusal to give some nominees a hearing. There are three Michigan nominees to the Cincinnati-based Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals: U.S. District Judge David McKeague, based in Laning; state Court of Appeals Judge Henry Saad, and Wayne Circuit Judge Susan Neilson. No hearings have been scheduled for any of these nominees.

U.S. Sen. Carl Levin of Michigan has instructed his Democratic colleague Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, to put a hold on all GOP nominations to the Sixth Circuit until two prior Democratic nominees, who didn't receive hearings when the GOP controlled the Senate, get named to appellate court seats.

The White House has gone to the extraordinary length of offering the Democratic candidates, whose nominations lapsed with the arrival of George W. Bush in the White House, seats on the federal district court in Detroit. But Sen. Levin is holding out for appellate court seats for the Clinton nominees.

This is an abdication of the Senate's responsibility to advise and consent. If the Senate doesn't want to approve a nominee, it should at least give him or her a hearing and a vote. Usually, the kind of intransigence and vilification currently practiced by the Senate Democrats is seen toward the end of an opposition party president's term. Bush has only been in office for a little over a year.

It's going to be a long four years if these tactics continue. The senators ought to behave better - or prepare to endure yet more public disgust.

The Democratic Persecution of Judicial Nominee Pickering

The Tampa Tribune
Monday, March 4, 2002

The Senate Judiciary Committee's Democratic majority is quietly going about its business, arbitrarily and unjustly crucifying one of President Bush's nominees to a federal appeals court.

Theirs is a pure power play, and apparently a successful one.

The Democrats and special interests have so distorted the record of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, a nominee to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, that he is all but unrecognizable to friends and acquaintances back home. With particular relish, opposition groups like People for the American Way and senators like John Edwards of North Carolina have portrayed him as a racist and Neanderthal, although his defenders from Mississippi - of particular interest his black defenders - insist the man the committee describes is not the man they know.

Such senators as Diane Feinstein of California have fallen back on the old partisan line that Pickering is "well outside the mainstream." What she means is he doesn't veer to the left.

The Democrats appear to be making good on threats to refuse any conservative nominee a place on the federal bench - no matter how well qualified (Pickering was rated well qualified by the liberal American Bar Association).

The attempt to justify such a detestable tactic goes like this: Bush failed to win the popular vote so he has no mandate to pick conservative judges. So the committee is determined to steal the executive's prerogative.

We know gifted conservative lawyers and judges who would be a welcome addition to any appeals court but are having second thoughts about exposing themselves to Democratic tactics.

Ah, but perhaps that's the point the senators are trying to make: We'll arbitrarily label you conservative, distort your record and destroy you.

There are those who would suggest that the Democrats are acting no differently than their Republican predecessors. Well, we have two names that suggest otherwise: Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen Breyer.

The Borking of Judge Charles Pickering; Character Assassins Are Out in Full Force

By Nat Hantoff

The Washington Times
Monday, March 4, 2002

I opposed the nomination of Robert Bork to the Supreme Court because I believe the Constitution is more of a living document than he does. But I was more opposed to the reckless and often factually inaccurate attacks on him by People for the American Way and various Hollywood celebrities impersonating constitutional scholars. The term, "Borking" a candidate, came from what happened to him. It's now happening again to Bush nominee Charles Pickering before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

For weeks, the NAACP and People for the American Way have led the attack on Judge Pickering - a federal district judge in Mississippi nominated for elevation to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. They have, as David Firestone of the New York Times writes, depicted him "as the personification of white Mississippi's oppressive past." When Republicans are the majority of the Senate Judiciary Committee, they, too, have at times amended the Constitution to "advise and disgrace." As a journalist covering the civil rights movement in the 1950s and since, I greatly admired such civil rights leaders as A. Philip Randolph, Roy Wilkins, Fred Shuttleworth, Martin Luther King Jr. and Bayard Rustin, organizer of the 1963 March on Washington, who was a friend of mine.

In recent years, however, some current members of that leadership have dissipated the moral force of the movement. For example, Julian Bond, national chairman of the NAACP - who judiciously accused the president of choosing nominees from "the Taliban wing of the Republican Party" - now says that "a vote for Judge Pickering is a vote against civil rights." And Rep. Robert C. Scott of Virginia - one of the more thoughtful members of Congress - claims, along with other members of the Congressional Black Caucus, "it's hard to imagine a person more hostile to civil rights."

During his appearance before the Senate Judiciary Committee, Judge Pickering was treated by Democratic questioners as if he and they were back in Mississippi in the 1960s, and as if Charles Pickering is still there, fixed in time. This, not insignificantly, is the man who, in 1967, testified against Sam Bowers, a Ku Klux Klan leader, on trial for the firebombing death of a black civil-rights activist.

But the Democratic senators brushed by that fact, let alone his record in the years since that has made him - as Mr. Firestone wrote from Laurel, Judge Pickering's largely black hometown in Mississippi - "widely admired by blacks" who have known him all these years.

Mr. Firestone writes: "Black business leaders say he was influential in persuading white-owned banks to lend money to black entrepreneurs, helping to strengthen the city's black middle class."

Are these witnesses for Charles Pickering - many of whom have been in the civil rights trenches all of their lives - Uncle Toms? Or rather, as Mr. Firestone writes, does their witnessing "reflect the distance between national liberal groups and many Southern blacks in small towns" who place more importance on the person they know.

REV_00141471

Johnny Magee, a black councilman in Laurel, said, "So many people are still angry about the past. But if the judge has moved beyond his past, I think we should all try to do the same."

But even in 1967, when Judge Pickering was a county attorney - and was warned by the Klan not to testify against its leader - he, with two small children, felt impelled to speak up because the black man who was killed, Vernon Dahmers, "was doing nothing more," as Judge Pickering told the senators, "than helping African-Americans obtain their constitutional right to vote."

In its editorial, "The Pickering Nomination," The Washington Post said that Judge Pickering has, since 1990, "been a federal district judge of no particular distinction," and he "would not have been our choice to sit on a federal court of appeals . . . But opposing a nominee should not mean destroying him. And the attack on Judge Pickering has become an ugly affair."

I would not have voted for Judge Pickering because, as Sen. Russell Feingold has noted, Judge Pickering asked attorneys who currently practice before his court for letters of support for his nomination. A lawyer who refused to write such a letter could make him and his clients vulnerable. That's a failure of judicial ethics. But the distortion of Judge Pickering's actual history among black citizens in Laurel, Miss., has indeed been "a degradation of the judicial process." Will any of the Democratic senators on the committee say so?

Pickering Doesn't Polarize, the Process Does

By Diana West
Jewish World Review
Friday, March 1, 2002

IT'S not easy to decide which weapon wielded in the character assassination of Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. has done more dishonor to our democracy: the lies and half-truths that have falsely caricatured an upstanding public servant, or the pedestal-ready self-righteousness with which these lies and half-truths have been told and left hanging. "Hopefully, this destructive political process will stop," Rep. Charles W. Pickering Jr., (R-Miss.) said last week, voicing a son's frustration over a father's ordeal. On this point, at least, the congressman has reason to be hopeful. The process will stop, all right. But not until after the Senate Judiciary Committee is expected to vote down Judge Pickering's elevation to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

And while that vote will almost surely end the political process for the 64-year-old federal judge from Mississippi, abruptly releasing him from the Senate's pincer-like grip, the political destruction he has suffered at its hands has no conclusion. It remains a shameful testament to the grossly abusive, modern-day confirmation process.

Don't just take my word. "Opposing a nominee should not mean destroying him," said the Washington Post -- not exactly the conservative voice of empathy -- in editorializing on the Pickering nomination. "And the attack on Judge Pickering has become an ugly affair. ... The need on the part of liberal groups and Democratic senators to portray him as a Neanderthal -- all the while denying they are doing so -- in order to justify voting him down is the latest example of the degradation of the confirmation process."

And so, a man whom James Charles Evers, brother of murdered civil rights activist Medgar Evers, praises for a racially "inclusive approach to politics" is transformed by the attack-jargon of the inflamed Left into a knuckle-dragging throwback who, as the National Women's Law Center's Marcia Greenberger puts it, lacks "commitment to protecting the rights of ordinary citizens."

Evers – no Republican -- writes of Pickering's "admirable record on civil rights issues," beginning with his 1967 testimony against a Ku Klux Klan leader accused of firebombing a civil rights activist's home (testimony that cost Pickering his re-election as local prosecutor), but Greenberger sees fit to denounce the man for an "antagonistic view of civil rights for minorities."

Then there's what People for the American Way calls Pickering's "disregard for the separation of church and state" demonstrated "by repeatedly using his position on the bench to promote involvement in religious programs."

Proof?

A typical example from the PFAW report concerns the sentencing of someone convicted of conspiracy to commit murder. Pickering spoke of the man's need to participate in "the study and consideration of effects and consequences of crime ... in a civilized society. This," he explained, "may be a program through your church or some other agency or organization so long as it is approved in advance by the probation service." As National Review's Byron York has noted, the PFAW report underscores the words "through your church or some other such agency" as evidence of theocratic impulses only an ayatollah could share.

Abortion rights activists also weigh in on the Pickering appointment. In some 4,000 cases on the federal bench, Pickering has never actually heard an abortion case. Still, as a political conservative, he's been tagged by National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League's Kate Michelman as "part of a continuing effort to hasten the reversal of (Roe v. Wade) and the end of legal abortion." Pickering's personal opposition to abortion may be clear from his record as a Mississippi state senator, but as a Legal Times analysis of Pickering's judicial career points out, he's testified that he would "consider it his 'duty as an appellate ... judge to follow'" Roe v. Wade. So much for hastening the landmark decision's reversal. The subtitle of the Legal Times article, by the way, is "You won't get the full story on Charles Pickering Sr. from liberals' portrayal of life and record."

That portrayal, however, has been gulped down as gospel by Senate Democrats eager for guidance on which to reject a conservative nominee to the appellate court who is not only ranked "well qualified" by the American Bar Association, but who, as a nominee to the federal bench in 1990, has been confirmed unanimously once before by the full Senate. Sen. Dianne Feinstein, California Democrat, repeatedly uses the word "polarizing" to explain the Democrats' expected rejection of the appointment. What is polarizing, however, is not Pickering, but the personal smear campaign against him. Senate Democrats may wash their hands of the matter by voting "nay" tomorrow, but that's not very likely to leave them clean.

Fox Special Report with Brit Hume

Fox News
Monday, March 4, 2002

EXCERPT

HUME: After a long period of seeming inaction to save the nomination of Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi to the federal appeals bench, the White House appears poised now to make a last ditch effort. It comes as Fox News learns extraordinary details of a political deal allegedly offered in exchange for the nomination's confirmation. Chief political correspondent Carl Cameron reports -- hi, Carl.

CARL CAMERON, FOX NEWS CHIEF POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT: Hi, Brit. Well, on this Thursday, the nomination of Judge Charles Pickering to the federal appellate judge is set for a vote in the Senate Judiciary Committee. And on the eve of that vote, Fox News has learned that the White House is planning an Oval Office meeting with Judge Pickering and the president in what is described as a bipartisan, biracial group of Mississippi Democrats who come to Washington specifically to say that Democratic criticism on Capitol Hill of Pickering's nomination is unfounded.

This follows what Fox News -- what has been described to us as an extraordinary, not to say unethical, series of political propositions.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: The whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

CHARLES PICKERING, JUDICIAL NOMINEE: I do.

CAMERON (voice-over): When Charles Pickering testified at his Senate Judiciary Committee confirmation hearings, sources tell Fox News that a controversial offer was made to his son, three-term Mississippi Republican Congressman Chip Pickering. In short, sources say intermediaries told Congressman Pickering that if he accepted a congressional redistricting plan in his home state that heavily favored Democrats and would probably lead to his own defeat in this election year, he could save his father's nomination, which faces unanimous opposition from Democrats on the Senate Judiciary committee.

Democrats wanted a redistricting plan drawn up by a Mississippi state judge that combined Pickering's congressional district with another currently represented by Democrat Ronnie Shows.

REV_00141474

The new district would have been 37 percent African-American and would have heavily favored Democrats.

But Pickering fought it in federal court. And an alternative redistricting plan that was more favorable to him was drawn up with slightly different boundaries and an African-American population of 30 percent.

As Judge Pickering's confirmation hearings were underway, sources say his son the congressman was contacted by a lobbyist. His name is Prince Bolin (ph), a former aide to Mississippi Republican Senator Trent Lott. He was acting, sources say, as a go-between with another operative named Richard Buchman (ph), formerly a GOP consultant now working for Mississippi Democrats, including Ronnie Shows and Congressman Betty G. Thompson.

It's not clear if the proposed deal was concocted by lawmakers on Capitol Hill or the intermediaries themselves. But sources with direct knowledge of the talks say some Senate Democrats on the Judiciary Committee opposed to the Pickering nomination did discuss it with other members of the Senate who have privately expressed support.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

CAMERON: A number of House and Senate Republicans and Democrats have confirmed that they have heard about this. Democrats have a completely different take on it. They say it was actually initiated by Republicans. And the chairman of the Mississippi party said he was contacted personally.

On Friday of last week, the U.S. Supreme Court struck down the Mississippi plan and sided with Pickering in favor of his congressional district. No comment from any of the intermediaries, at least publicly, Brit.

HUME: So this thing would appear to be moot anyway because of the court decision, right?

CAMERON: At this point it is. The Pickerings aren't talking either.

HUME: All right, thanks, Carl.

Interview with Robert Weiss and Armstrong Williams

Fox Hannity & Colmes
Monday, March 4, 2002

COLMES: Welcome back to HANNITY & COLMES. I'm Alan Colmes.

Coming up: Are the College Republicans at Georgia State University a racist organization? Some students think so. And we'll tell you why.

First, this week, Senate Democrats on the Judiciary Committee are expected to defeat President Bush's nomination of Charles Pickering to the U.S. Court of Appeals by a vote of 10-9. Democrats have criticized the former Mississippi prosecutor and lawmaker for his conservative views on abortion and civil rights issues. But Fox News has learned that a controversial offer was made to Pickering's son, Mississippi Republican Congressman Chip Pickering, that might have helped his father's chances. Sources say intermediaries told Chip Pickering he would save his father's nomination if he accepted a congressional redistricting plan in his own state. He did not accept the offer.

Joining us from Washington is radio talk host Armstrong Williams. And here with us in New York: Democratic attorney Robert Weiss.

Good to see you both.

Robert, if that deal was offered, it is bad. It is wrong.

ROBERT WEISS, DEMOCRATIC ATTORNEY: It is.

COLMES: Do you agree?

WEISS: I agree with that.

COLMES: And, Armstrong, you would agree with that as well?

Can you hear me, Armstrong?

ARMSTRONG WILLIAMS, RADIO TALK SHOW HOST: Absolutely.

COLMES: We all agree that let's hope that deal, reportedly -- it was reported to Fox News it happened. Let's hope it didn't happen.

But here's my issue with Pickering. I don't believe he's a racist. I don't know that he's a racist. But shouldn't we ask some hard questions about whether or not he favored a law a number of years ago that banned interracial marriage, that he was a contributor to helped raise money for the Sovereignty Commission in Mississippi? That is a segregationist group.

Aren't these things we want to know about, Armstrong? Are these legitimate questions?

WILLIAMS: No, I think the best way for us to judge any candidate -- and I just think that this process has gotten, really, totally out of control.

COLMES: But are those legitimate questions?

WILLIAMS: It's the people who know him the best.

REV_00141476

I read in an editorial in "The Wall Street Journal" where Medgar Evers' brother wrote this stirring editorial supporting this man for the nomination.

COLMES: OK, so?

WILLIAMS: People in the community, who know him best, African- Americans, who you supposedly are protecting, support him and feel that he should be confirmed.

(CROSSTALK)

COLMES: Armstrong, just answer me. Are these legitimate questions I just said? Are those not legitimate questions that should be part of the discourse here to determine if he is qualified to be on the appeals court? Are those legitimate questions?

WILLIAMS: That's in the past. We're talking about where the man is right now.

COLMES: It's a yes-or-no answer.

WILLIAMS: The man is qualified to be a federal judge.

COLMES: These are the questions being raised. Are they legitimate?

WILLIAMS: This is a corrupt process, is what it is. I will not address that question because it is irrelevant.

(CROSSTALK)

COLMES: I think he is ignoring the question, but go ahead.

WEISS: These are very good questions. In 1959, he wrote a law review article on the interracial marriage. He was very closely associated with the Sovereignty Commission. It wasn't an issue when he was confirmed in 1990, but there were subsequent documents that came out after that. So there are very good questions. And I think this is a healthy debate. It's a good thing that we're debating this.

(CROSSTALK)

WILLIAMS: Wait a minute. 1959, we're going back to 1959, the year that I was born? Robert Byrd, who was a former...

HANNITY: Bingo.

WILLIAMS: ... grand dragon in the Ku Klux Klan.

HANNITY: Grand poobah.

REV_00141477

WILLIAMS: They don't seem to have a problem with him in the United States Senate.

WEISS: Robert Byrd is not before the full Senate for confirmation.

(CROSSTALK)

HANNITY: Armstrong, hang on.

Here is a legitimate issue. Robert Byrd was a member of the Ku Klux Klan.

WILLIAMS: Yes, a grand dragon.

HANNITY: Hang on. Hang on. Hang on. He votes on the qualifications of nominees like Pickering. He gets to sit in judgment of them.

WEISS: Because that's the way the Constitution was written, Sean.

HANNITY: Forget about that. Is that right?

WEISS: Forget about the Constitution?

HANNITY: No, no, no. I'm asking you, is that right?

WEISS: Yes, it is right.

HANNITY: And you feel comfortable having a former Klan member judge the moral qualifications?

WEISS: Let me explain to you --

(CROSSTALK)

HANNITY: Explain. I'm very interested in this. Do you support the Klan?

WEISS: I don't support the Klan.

But that information was there for the voters of, I think, West Virginia, where Robert Byrd was elected. He is elected. And in the event that he decided to become a federal judge...

HANNITY: You are embarrassed that he is a member of your party, aren't you?

WEISS: No, I'm not embarrassed, because he is somebody...

HANNITY: And you are embarrassed by some of the statements of Ernest Hollings earlier in his career about black Americans, aren't you? And you're embarrassed.

REV_00141478

(CROSSTALK)

HANNITY: All these guys with this history of just pure, unadulterated racism are going to sit in judgment of a man who, in 1967, was a county prosecutor, who went and testified in a court proceeding at a time when it was dangerous to his own life against the Ku Klux Klan, because this is about politics for you guys. This is about Borking this man. This is about what you did to John Tower. This is about smearing and besmirching.

(CROSSTALK)

WEISS: This is partially about what was done to all the Democratic judicial nominees during the Clinton administration

(CROSSTALK)

HANNITY: Yeah, name one. Tower, Bork, Thomas, Bork, you guys have made blood sport out of this.

WEISS: The fact is, we have absolutely the right to look at these nominees. The Senate Judicial Subcommittee is in the hands of the Democrats. They have the right to vote their conscience. This is completely a legitimate issue.

HANNITY: Yes, a former Klansman.

Hey, Armstrong, I look at black Americans in Pickering's hometown, including some that you mentioned, plus his history of standing up to racism and the Ku Klux Klan in his lifetime...

(CROSSTALK)

HANNITY: Excuse me.

And then I look at somebody like Robert Byrd, voluntarily joined the Klan. He was a recruiter for them. He gets to vote on this.

WEISS: Robert Byrd is not before the Senate.

HANNITY: Excuse me. Is your name Armstrong?

What's wrong with that picture?

WILLIAMS: You know what? You talk about the racists, the racism in this. The racists are people like Hollings and Byrd and others who would participate in what is just a corrupt and ugly process.

REV_00141479

(CROSSTALK)

WEISS: The Congressional Black Caucus is opposed to this. The NAACP is opposed to this.

(CROSSTALK)

COLMES: We've got to go.

(CROSSTALK)

COLMES: All right, guys, we've got to ring a bell. We've got to go.

Armstrong, you are saying my party is more racist than your party.

Thank you both for being here.

WILLIAMS: They all have racism. They all have a past. Let's deal with the man as right now.

COLMES: Thank you, sir.

EXCERPT

MR. MCLAUGHLIN: Issue Four: Bickering Over Pickering

(Begin videotape.)

JUDGE CHARLES PICKERING (Bush Nominee To Court of Appeals): The charges that have been made against a me have been hurtful, and they have been painful. I have a record of standing up for equal protection, respecting the rule of the law."

SEN. DIANE FEINSTEIN (D-CA): I believe that there's virtually unanimous opinion on the Democratic side of the Judiciary Committee that he will not be confirmed."

(End videotape.)

MR. MCLAUGHLIN: Judge Charles Pickering, President Bush's nominee to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, is in big trouble. Democrats oppose the Mississippi judge's record on abortion and civil rights. This Democratic congressional opposition to Pickering mystifies black officials on the Mississippi scene, notably Thaddeus Edmonson, the former president of the regional NAACP and now a councilman.

(Begin videotape.)

MR. EDMONSON: The portrayal of him as a racist is totally wrong. This gentleman cares about people. He has a Christian heart. And above all, he's part of the new Mississippi.

(End videotape.)

MR. MCLAUGHLIN: Editorialists are even more critical of the Democrats, lambasting them for foul play and worse, race baiting. Why are Pickering's opponents playing this kind of ugly racial politics, asks the Wall Street Journal? "First is to create a public misconception that the Bush administration's judicial nominees are right-wing extremists who want to turn back the clock on race, abortion and religion. Call this a dress rehearsal for the president's first Supreme Court nomination.

"Second is to scare Senate Democrats from the South into voting against Judge Pickering out of fear of losing crucial black support back home. This gives the unscrupulous every incentive to shout 'race' at every opportunity."

Lawrence O'Donnell, do you think the Wall Street Journal in this respect, that this is a dress rehearsal for the president's nomination to the United States Supreme Court?

MR. O'DONNELL: Yeah, that's more what it's about than anything else. I mean, even the New York Times, which is no fan of Pickering, says the in their editorial that accusations of racism on his part are just false.

MR. MCLAUGHLIN: Really?

MR. O'DONNELL: There's just no grounding to it.

MR. MCLAUGHLIN: Yeah.

MR. BARONE: Well, the Washington Post went farther and just lambasted People for the American Way and the other left-wing, special-interest groups that have engaged in a slimy, reprehensible, intellectually dishonest campaign to portray somebody with one of the worst labels that you can portray an American with: racist.

Charles Pickering went and testified against the grand wizard of the Klu (sic) Klux Klan in 1967 in Mississippi. I don't think that very many of the 10 members of the Democratic Party on the Judiciary Committee that are going to vote him out of a federal judgeship have shown the kind of courage that it would take to testify against the Klu (sic) Klux Klan of Mississippi in 1967. They were intellectually shabby and dishonest and scurrilous.

MS. CLIFT: This is all -- there is -- look, I -- Michael, there's another side to the story.

REV_00141481

MR. BARONE: Yeah, theirs was wrong.

MS. CLIFT: I don't think the man is racist, but he has, in his rulings --

MR. MCLAUGHLIN: What is that?

MS. CLIFT: -- he has in his rulings showed an insensitivity to civil rights and civil liberties concerns. But the question on Capitol Hill is, one, how conservative is too conservative? And do the Democrats have the votes to defeat this nomination? And the answer on both those questions is yes. And it's not only a dress rehearsal for the Supreme Court. There's a whole line of judges awaiting confirmation, and --

MR. MCLAUGHLIN: There could be --

MS. CLIFT: -- how far is Bush going to get to turn the court to the right?

MR. MCLAUGHLIN: There could be some breakaways from the Democratic line-up.

MS. CLIFT: We'll see.

MR. MCLAUGHLIN: And it would be a conscience vote, because they know that this man is worth.

(Cross talk.)

MR. MCLAUGHLIN: Let me hear from you, quickly.

MR. BLANKLEY: Michael is completely correct. Eleanor is half correct when she says that this is also about a long-term struggle to fill a lot of vacancies in the federal bench below the Supreme Court in which the Democrats judge as long as they've got the Senate, they've got the votes to force the White House to nominate moderates rather than conservatives.

MS. CLIFT: Right.

MR. BLANKLEY: And regretfully, they're going to prove that.

MR. MCLAUGHLIN: Why is Lott asking for a seven-day delay for the committee vote? He's got until the middle of next week.

MR. O'DONNELL: Maybe he's trying to turn this around.

MR. MCLAUGHLIN: Why? Does he want to try to, through backroom politicking, persuade them to vote his way? And why doesn't -- why doesn't the president lift up his -- lift up the phone and call his new-found friend, Teddy Kennedy, and say, "Why don't you be fair? Do me a favor on this one."

REV_00141482

MR. O'DONNELL: Well, for one thing, because this is not the president's -- (end PBS segment.)

Mr. Kavanaugh,

We're in receipt of the letter from Judge Gonzales dated March 7 updating the status of your review of the remaining Reagan records previously sent. Would you be able to send us a listing of the 150 records remaining to be reviewed? I understand that the materials have been numbered making it relatively easy to create a list. With that in hand, staff at the Reagan Library will be able to expeditiously proceed with a further opening of all but the 150 pages still subject to review. (I'm also informed this morning from Craig Blackwell at DOJ Federal Programs that plaintiffs will be raising an issue in their filing today concerning the lack of forward progress in opening 59,000 pages; but the Reagan library staff will be able to do so once NARA has received your list specifically identifying the remaining pages.)
Gary Stern is off til Monday; please feel free to call Amy Krupsky or me today if you have any questions. Amy is at 301-713-6025 x230 and I'm at x232. Thanks, Jason

March 11, 2002

Dear Senator Kerry, Senator Kennedy, Congressman Frank, Congressman Delahunt, Congressman Meehan, and Congressman Lynch:

I write in response to your letter to the President regarding his December 12, 2001, invocation of executive privilege. Your letter focuses on one of the four sets of documents subject to the President's claim of privilege: those related to possible corruption in the FBI in Boston. As you may know, the Administration and the House Committee on Government Reform have now reached an accommodation that has resolved this matter insofar as it related to those Boston documents.

Thank you for your interest in this issue.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

MEDIA ALERT March 12, 2002

Additional Reagan Presidential Materials to be Released

WHAT: Approximately 59,850 pages of presidential records of Ronald Reagan's Presidency that were previously withheld under the Presidential Records Act restriction for confidential advice between White House officials. These records are the second segment of the approximately 68,000 pages of records that the National Archives and Records Administration proposed to release last year. In accordance with Executive Order 13233, representatives of former President Reagan and President Bush have reviewed these records and have chosen not to assert any constitutionally based privilege.

On January 3, 2001, the Reagan Library opened the first segment of these records, approximately 8,000 pages. Approximately 150 pages of records are still under review.

This opening consists of records from the staff member and office files, National Security Council files, and the alphabetically arranged Subject Files of the White House Office of Records Management (WHORM).

107TH CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 2341

[Report No. 107–]

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

JUNE 27, 2001

Mr. GOODLATTE (for himself, Mr. BOUCHER, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, Mr. MORAN of Virginia, Mr. ARMEY, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. HYDE, Mr. DOOLEY of California, Mr. BRYANT, Mr. HOLDEN, Mr. COX, Mr. CHABOT, Mr. CRAMER, Mr. OXLEY, Mr. SUNUNU, Mr. BACHUS, Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland, and Mr. GOSS) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

MARCH , 2002

Reported with an amendment, committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed

[Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the part printed in italic]

[For text of introduced bill, see copy of bill as introduced on June 27, 2001]

A BILL

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2002".

(b) REFERENCE.—Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.

(c) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; reference; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.
Sec. 3. Consumer class action bill of rights and improved procedures for interstate class actions.
Sec. 4. Federal district court jurisdiction of interstate class actions.
Sec. 5. Removal of interstate class actions to Federal district court.
Sec. 6. Appeals of class action certification orders.
Sec. 7. Effective date.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of our legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly, and that have thereby undermined public respect for our judicial system.

(3) Class members have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including—

(A) plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified rewards being made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where—

(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;

(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and

(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.

(5) These abuses undermine our Federal system and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are—

(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;

(3) to restore the intent of the framers of the Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate class actions; and

(4) to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CLASS ACTION BILL OF RIGHTS AND IMPROVED PROCEDURES FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part V is amended by inserting after chapter 113 the following:

"CHAPTER 114—CLASS ACTIONS

"Sec.
"1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements.
"1712. Protection against loss by class members.
"1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location.

"1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties.
"1715. Clearer and simpler settlement information.
"1716. Definitions.

"§ 1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

"The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

"§ 1712. Protection against loss by class members

"The court may approve a proposed settlement under which any class member is obligated to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member outweigh the monetary loss.

"§ 1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

"The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

"§ 1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.

"(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit any payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling his or her obligations as a class representative.

"§ 1715. Clearer and simpler settlement information

"(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain—

"(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point Times New Roman type or other functionally similar type, stating 'LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.';

"(2) a short summary written in plain, easily understood language, describing—

"(A) the subject matter of the class action;

"(B) the members of the class;

"(C) the legal consequences of being a member of the class;

"(D) if the notice is informing class members of a proposed settlement agreement—

"(i) the benefits that will accrue to the class due to the settlement;

"(ii) the rights that class members will lose or waive through the settlement;

"(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;

"(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking; and

"(v) an explanation of how any attorney's fee will be calculated and funded; and

"(E) any other material matter.

"(b) TABULAR FORMAT.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)—

"(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;

"(2) contain clear and concise headings for each item of information; and

"(3) provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each heading.

"(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE.—Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from the class action or a proposed settlement of the class action, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language—

"(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and

"(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person's inclusion in the class action or settlement.

"§ 1716. Definitions

"In this chapter—

"(1) CLASS ACTION.—The term 'class action' means any civil action filed in a district court of the United States pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or any civil action that is removed to a district court of the United States that was originally filed pursuant to a State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representatives on behalf of a class.

"(2) CLASS COUNSEL.—The term 'class counsel' means the persons who serve as the attorneys for the class members in a proposed or certified class action.

"(3) CLASS MEMBERS.—The term 'class members' means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

"(4) PLAINTIFF CLASS ACTION.—The term 'plaintiff class action' means a class action in which class members are plaintiffs.

"(5) PROPOSED SETTLEMENT.—The term 'proposed settlement' means an agreement that resolves claims in a class action, that is subject to court approval and that, if approved, would be binding on the class members.".

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for part V is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 113 the following:

"114. Class Actions ..... 1711".

SEC. 4. FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) APPLICATION OF FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION.—Section 1332 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:

"(d)(1) In this subsection—

"(A) the term 'class' means all of the class members in a class action;

"(B) the term 'class action' means any civil action filed pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or similar State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representative persons on behalf of a class;

"(C) the term 'class certification order' means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of a civil action as a class action; and

"(D) the term 'class members' means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

"(2) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action in which the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is a class action in which—

"(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;

"(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or

"(C) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.

"(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any civil action in which—

"(A)(i) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed; and

"(ii) the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed;

"(B) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or

"(C) the number of proposed plaintiff class members is less than 100.

"(4) In any class action, the claims of the individual class members shall be aggregated to determine whether the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

"(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.

"(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the requirements of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

"(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.

"(7) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves a claim that relates to—

"(A) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(B) the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

"(C) the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).

"(8) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 of this title, an unincorporated association shall be deemed to be a citizen of the State where it has its principal place of business and the State under whose laws it is organized.

"(9) For purposes of this section and section 1453 of this title, a civil action that is not otherwise a class action as defined in paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection shall nevertheless be deemed a class action if—

"(A) the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

"(B) monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

In any such case, the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members. The provisions of paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (A). The provisions of paragraph (6) of this subsection, and subsections (b)(2) and

(d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (B).".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1335(a)(1) is amended by inserting "(a) or (d)" after "1332".

(2) Section 1603(b)(3) is amended by striking "(d)" and inserting "(e)".

SEC. 5. REMOVAL OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS TO FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 89 is amended by adding after section 1452 the following:

"§ 1453. Removal of class actions

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the terms 'class', 'class action', 'class certification order', and 'class member' have the meanings given these terms in section 1332(d)(1).

"(b) IN GENERAL.—A class action may be removed to a district court of the United States in accordance with this chapter, without regard to whether any defendant is a citizen of the State in which the action is brought, except that such action may be removed—

"(1) by any defendant without the consent of all defendants; or

"(2) by any plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member without the consent of all members of such class.

"(c) WHEN REMOVABLE.—This section shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order in the action, except that a plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member of the action may not seek removal of the action before an order certifying a class of which the plaintiff is a class member has been entered.

"(d) PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL.—The provisions of section 1446 relating to a defendant removing a case shall apply to a plaintiff removing a case under this section, except that in the application of subsection (b) of such section the requirement relating to the 30-day filing period shall be met if a plaintiff class member files notice of removal within 30 days after receipt by such class member, through service or otherwise, of the initial written notice of the class action.

"(e) REVIEW OF ORDERS REMANDING CLASS ACTIONS TO STATE COURTS.—The provisions of section 1447 shall apply to any removal of a case under this section, except that, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1447(d), an order remanding a class action to the State court from which it was removed shall be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.

"(f) EXCEPTION.—This section shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves—

"(1) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(2) a claim that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

"(3) a claim that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).".

(b) REMOVAL LIMITATION.—Section 1446(b) is amended in the second sentence by inserting "(a)" after "section 1332".

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections for chapter 89 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 1452 the following:

"1453. Removal of class actions.".

SEC. 6. APPEALS OF CLASS ACTION CERTIFICATION ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1292(a) is amended by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:

"(4) Orders of the district courts of the United States granting or denying class certification under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, if notice of appeal is filed within 10 days after entry of the order.".

(b) DISCOVERY STAY.—All discovery and other proceedings shall be stayed during the pendency of any appeal taken pursuant to the amendment made by subsection (a), unless the court finds upon the motion of any party that specific discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice to that party.

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to any civil action commenced on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Curious about PRA stuff: At this point, how many of the 68,000 pages have been processed and, of those processed, how many have privilege issues so far? And how many have been released?

That is correct. Remember that we are applying the standard outlined in the EO that absent "compelling circumstances," the current President will defer to the decision of the former President NOT to assert privilege. (As Judge Gonzales said at the time, the EO is quite good for proponents of disclosure in this circumstance.) Keep in mind, however, that there are hundreds of thousands/millions of other privileged pages yet to be requested/processed, and we have no idea whether and to what extent the former President may assert privilege over them.

there are potential issues as to only 150 of them, and it isn't even clear how many, if any, of those 150 will be withheld?

MEDIA ALERT March 12, 2002

Additional Reagan Presidential Materials to be Released

WHAT: Approximately 59,850 pages of presidential records of Ronald Reagan's Presidency. These records are the second segment of the approximately 68,000 pages of records that were previously withheld under the Presidential Records Act's 12-year, post-Presidency protection for records reflecting confidential advice among White House officials. On January 3, 2002, the Reagan Library opened the first segment of these records, approximately 8,000 pages. Approximately 150 pages of records are still under review.

In accordance with the procedures established by Executive Order 13233, representatives of former President Reagan and President Bush have carefully reviewed the approximately 59,850 pages of records to determine whether to assert any applicable constitutionally based privilege. Both Presidents decided not to assert any constitutionally based privilege with respect to these records.

This opening consists of records from the staff member and office files, National Security Council files, and the alphabetically arranged Subject Files of the White House Office of Records Management (WHORM).

RE: Death of Judge Mansmann

DATE: March 11, 2002

It is with profound sorrow that I inform you of the death Saturday evening of our beloved colleague Carol Los Mansmann, after a long and valiant fight against breast cancer. I attach the obituary from this morning Pittsburgh Post Gazette.

The funeral will be held on Thursday, March 14, 2002 at St. James Church Roman Catholic Church, 200 Walnut Street, Sewickley, PA. It will be preceded by a closed casket viewing at the Church from 9:00 to 11:00 am. Additionally friends will be received from 2:00 to 4:00 pm and 7:00 to 9:00 pm tomorrow and Wednesday at the H. Samson Funeral Home, 537 N. Neville Street, Oakland.

The family invites everyone to a reception at the Allegheny County Club following the service. In lieu of flowers, the family asks that donations be made to The Carol Los Mansmann Fund c/o Duquesne University, 600 Forbes Avenue, Pittsburgh, PA 15219.

Chief Judge D. Brooks Smith has ordered that the flag at the Pittsburgh Courthouse fly at half mast.

CAROL LOS MANSMANN

Carol Los Mansmann, the first woman appointed to the federal bench in Pittsburgh, won friends with her lively personality and the respect of judges and lawyers with thorough, well-reasoned opinions.

A judicial centrist who served three years in U.S. District Court before her elevation to a federal appeals court in 1985, Mrs. Mansmann, 59, of Sewickley, died Saturday at UPMC-Montefiore of breast cancer. In 1996, she underwent a bone marrow transplant.

After President Ronald Reagan appointed her to the U.S. District Court in 1982, the 39-year-old was sworn in by Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor. She told well-wishers at the time that she had come a long way for a Polish girl from Dormont.

In September, O'Connor came to Duquesne University to receive the first Carol Los Mansmann Award for distinguished public service, where she described Mrs. Mansmann as one of "a distinguished class of jurists."

As a tireless trailblazer, Mrs. Mansmann put in long hours.

"She worked constantly. I could never figure out how she could accomplish so many things in one day," recalled Barbara M. Carlin, who was Mrs. Mansmann's first law clerk after she took the federal bench and one of her many proteges.

A 1996 opinion on an affirmative action case written by Mrs. Mansmann for the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeal drew national attention.

She held that the Piscataway, N.J., school board violated the 1964 Civil Rights Act by retaining a black high school teacher and laying off a white teacher of equal seniority and qualifications.

The judge wrote that "a nonremedial affirmative action plan, even with a laudable purpose, cannot pass muster."

Some affirmative action supporters were frightened by the judge's conclusion that racial "diversity" was not an objective of the Civil Rights Act. The case was headed to the U.S. Supreme Court before it was settled, and civil rights groups feared that the Supreme Court would use it to outlaw racial preferences in employment.

From the start of her career, Mrs. Mansmann excelled and enjoyed a succession of firsts.

She was one of only two women graduates in Duquesne law school's class of 1967. But only one local law firm granted her an interview and it did not hire her.

After Allegheny County District Attorney Robert Dugan gave her a job in 1968, she became the first female prosecutor in Allegheny County to try a murder case.

Chief U.S. Magistrate Judge Kenneth Benson recalled why Mrs. Mansmann took the challenge of prosecuting a homicide.

From 1968 to 1972, she worked in the appeals division of the district attorney's office, where she defended prosecutors' legal positions. In that job, she had the luxury of reading trial transcripts and began second-guessing her colleagues, asking them why they failed to raise objections or make certain requests of the trial judge.

The queries frustrated assistant district attorneys, who insisted to Mrs. Mansmann that she did not understand how difficult it was to always think clearly during the heat of a trial. So, she tried a case and won a first-degree murder conviction.

Afterward, Benson said, she conceded that her colleagues were right. From then on, he added, Mrs. Mansmann simply defended her fellow prosecutors while drafting appeal briefs.

That experience and her appellate expertise paved the way for her trip to the U.S. Supreme Court on April 27, 1970. On that date, she became the youngest woman to argue before the nation's highest court, and won a significant constitutional case that Benson still teaches his students today.

In its decision in the case, Chambers vs. Marone, the high court broadened the power of police to search automobiles once they had arrested a driver and passengers.

From 1974 to 1979, Mrs. Mansmann was employed as a special assistant attorney general. During that same period, she maintained a private practice with the now defunct law firm McVerry Baxter & Mansmann, that included her husband, attorney J. Jerome "Jerry" Mansmann.

Long before her elevation to the federal appeals court, Mrs. Mansmann encouraged women to pursue careers in the law. While finishing a bachelor's degree at Duquesne in 1964, she befriended a freshman named Donetta Wypiski, who planned to become a teacher. With Mrs. Mansmann's encouragement, Wypiski obtained a scholarship, earned a law degree, became a prosecutor and was elected to the state bench in Westmoreland County. In January 1994, Donetta Wypiski Ambrose rose to the federal bench in Pittsburgh.

Looking back on the early days of their friendship, Ambrose recalled why she looked up to Mrs. Mansmann.

"She was smart. She was nice. She was popular. She was friendly. She was Polish. I was Polish. It was a connection," Ambrose said.

Mrs. Mansmann took pride in her ethnic heritage and once began a speech to a Christian Mothers group at a Polish church by greeting them in Polish. The audience, Carlin said, went wild with approval.

Even as she maintained a law practice, Mrs. Mansmann also served as an associate professor at Duquesne's law school from 1974 to 1983. From 1987 to 1994, she was an adjunct professor of law.

In that academic post, she encouraged a whole generation of women to pursue legal careers.

U.S. Magistrate Judge Ila Jeanne Sensenich said she was indebted to Mrs. Mansmann, personally and professionally.

"I remember one evening we were returning together by plane from a meeting we had attended. I was exhausted and anxious to get home and relax," Sensenich said. "Judge Mansmann was leaving for another meeting early the next morning and her secretary was meeting her at her home that evening for a few hours work."

Carlin, now a prosecutor with the U.S. attorney's office in Pittsburgh, said the judge taught her some important lessons.

"The law doesn't have all the answers in black and white. You have to look at the situation. You have to look at the people involved and above all, to apply the law in a very fair manner," she said.

While on the district court bench, Mrs. Mansmann displayed a special knack for settling civil cases.

During conciliation conferences, Carlin said, "she listened very intently to both sides, never dismissing anyone's position as ridiculous, out of hand, or unwarranted. She treated all the parties with absolute dignity."

On one occasion, Carlin recalled, Mrs. Mansmann quickly granted a one-day recess in a trial so that a lawyer could take his disabled son to college.

"She never forgot that she had been a practicing lawyer and that there was a life outside the law. I think that was because she was so very family oriented. She came from a large family," Carlin said.

Mrs. Mansmann's death is a loss to the bench and bar as well as to the community, said U.S. District Judge Donald Ziegler.

"She was a teacher in every aspect of her life. She lived her life with truth, kindness and wisdom, as instructed in Proverbs. She is now counsel to the angels," he added.

Senior U.S. District Judge Maurice B. Cohill Jr. said Mrs. Mansmann was "an extremely bright and cheerful person. Even at times when I know that she was under stress, she never lost that pleasant way of hers."

Friends will be received from 2 to 4 and 7 to 9 p.m. tomorrow and Wednesday at the H. Samson funeral home, 537 N. Neville St., Oakland. There also will be visitation Thursday from 9 until the 11 a.m. Mass at St. James Church, 200 Walnut St., Sewickley.

In addition to her husband of 32 years, survivors include their children, Michael, Casey and Patrick Mansmann, all of Sewickley, and Megan Gallagher of Los Angeles; sisters Gloria Baytosh of Orange, Calif., Patricia Burke and Kathleen Los, both of Gulf Port, Fla., and Rosemary Lieberman of Lake Havasu, Ariz.; and brother Larry Los of Santa Maria, Calif.

Just to clarify something Lori said: All children, regardless of age, are welcome at the event and will receive a wooden egg. For the egg roll game (where a child pushes an egg with a spoon), the planners are going to try to limit it to children 6 and under, although this rule will not be strictly enforced and no one will have to show proof of age.

Att'd below is a note about Nick's meeting w/ Sen. Byrd yesterday.
As Brett heard this a.m., Christine Ciccone also notes that Sec. Card was firm in his view that no Ass't to the President is going to be able to testify.
(FYI, it also appears there is a rumor that the Majority Leader may offer a non-binding resolution that the Governor should testify.)

The meeting went well. Byrd did pull Card aside and express concern over Ridge's refusal to testify and he is anxious for the response. Nick is controlling the timing of the release right now, but I expect it to be in the next day or so. No longer.
Byrd also mentioned that he was concerned about our succession planning in the event something happened to Ridge.
And, last but not least, the latest bomb is that Daschle may offer a non-binding resolution on the Senate floor that Ridge should testify. We are tracking this down now....

Mark, Wendy and Julie --
Judge Gonzales told me this a.m. that Nick's plan (or maybe it's just a WH plan) for the way ahead -- following Monday's meeting here with Sen. Byrd. Sec. Card and Nick -- was as follows:
That BEFORE the Calio letter to Byrd (turning down the request for Gov. Ridge to testify) goes out -- there will be ANOTHER meeting with Sen. Byrd.
It was not clear WHEN meeting No. 2 would be (I got the sense it was soon), WHERE it would be, or WHO from the WH (other than, presumably, Nick) would be participating.
Wendy or Julie -- can you illuminate the landscape here? I'm sure we've got a detail or a nuance missing -- please let us know what YOU know of the plan and the timetable going forward.
Many thanks --
-- Ed

03/13/02 DRAFT

Statement of
Roy A. Bernardi
Assistant Secretary, Community Planning and Development United States Department of Housing and Urban Development
before the Committee on Financial Services
Subcommittee on Housing and Community Opportunity
United States House of Representatives

March 14, 2002

Chairwoman Roukema and Members of the Subcommittee, thank you for the opportunity to testify before you today. My name is Roy Bernardi and I am the Assistant Secretary for Community Planning and Development at the Department of Housing and Urban Development. On behalf of Secretary Martinez I want to extend our commitment to work with you to improve the effectiveness of the Community Development Block Grant program and to assure that America's neediest communities receive adequate Federal resources to meet local development needs.

These communities have fewer local resources for addressing housing and community and economic development needs and are, consequently, in greater need of Federal financial assistance. The lowest income residents of these communities deserve to share in Congress' vision of viable urban communities that could be established and maintained through systematic and sustained action of Federal, state, and local governments.

The CDBG program, authorized by the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, as amended, is one of the most successful government aid programs to have ever been created. A testimony to this success is the longevity of the program and how it has adjusted over the years in response to changes in public policy over the nearly twenty-eight years since its inception. The CDBG program remains one of the most flexible local tools for revitalizing neighborhoods and encouraging economic development. Since its inception, the CDBG program has provided approximately $100 billion to our nation's cities, towns, counties and states to undertake a wide range of activities that are locally determined. The imprint of the CDBG program can be seen in nearly every jurisdiction of this great country. As a former mayor and municipal worker, I can attest to the significant impact that the CDBG program has had on communities large and small.

Immediately prior to accepting my current position at HUD, I served as mayor of Syracuse, New York. This provided me with first hand knowledge of the usefulness of the CDBG program as a tool to encourage revitalization and growth, especially in older, poorer cities. More than that, however, was the appreciation I developed for the devolution of this wonderful Federal program back to the community level and for the insight of the designers of this program in recognizing the basic truth that the people know what their needs are better than government officials. As a mayor, I often interacted with mayors and other officials on issues related to community development and the dwindling availability of resources. The CDBG program, however, has remained one of the most useful and dependable sources of funding for municipalities.

There are currently 865 cities and 158 counties "entitled" to receive CDBG funds directly from HUD; these are our entitlement communities. In addition, 49 states and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico award more than 3,000 grants to smaller cities and counties from CDBG funds allocated to the states by HUD each year. HUD administers CDBG funds to Hawaii's three non-entitlement counties.

Within this vast number of grantees exists a wide variety of recipients, some quite wealthy, especially when compared with the poorest grantees. It is, therefore, quite understandable that calls would be made to re-evaluate the method of allocating the limited resources of the CDBG program. The continually increasing number of grant recipients has resulted in CDBG funds being stretched further and further with, in some localities, a lessening of the impact CDBG dollars can have on local housing, neighborhood development, public facilities, economic development and the provision of social services.

While the CDBG program may be heralded as the dependable grand dame of Federal financial resources, the Department clearly recognizes that current economic realities require at least some rethinking of how we do business. The Department supports targeting of CDBG funds to provide assistance to lower income persons to the greatest extent permissible under the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (the Act), as amended. The Department has proposed an adjustment to the method of allocating CDBG funds: a reduction in the level of funds provided to the wealthiest communities to provide more funds for distribution to the poorest communities.

Currently, CDBG funds are already targeted in two ways: first, by use of need-based formulas; and second, by requiring that 70% of a grantee's allocation benefit low- and moderate-income persons. In the first instance, CDBG program funds are allocated by use of one of two need-based formulas. The original formula is calculated by counting poverty, 50 percent; population, 25 percent; and overcrowded housing, 25 percent. The second formula is calculated by counting poverty at 30 percent; population growth lag from 1960 to 2000, at 20 percent; and age of housing stock (number of units constructed before 1940), at 50 percent. A locality's annual allocation is determined by the higher of the two formulas with slight pro rating to assure that the total amount of funds distributed does not exceed the total amount appropriated.

In addition to the use of two needs-based formulas to determine annual local allocations, the Act requires that not less than 70 percent of the CDBG funds provided to states and entitlement communities be used for the support of activities that benefit low- and moderate-income persons.

While the Act and our regulations require that CDBG funds primarily benefit low- and moderate-income persons, more can be done to further target these very funds to the neediest grantees. In a period of reduced budget authority such as we are experiencing now, it is apparent that a strong effort must be made to adjust allocations of our limited funds. Our wealthiest recipient communities would have their annual formula allocation reduced, but not eliminated, to provide for needier communities to receive more adequate levels of funding.

The Department is currently proposing a change in determining grantee eligibility that may better target our funds in just such a way. Our 2003 budget proposes reducing the annual CDBG allocation to the wealthiest one percent of eligible grantees, those with per capita income two times the national average ($14,277 in 1989), by 50 percent. Using the latest available data (from the 1990 census), an example of the effect of such a reduction, based upon FY 2002 data, would provide approximately $8.6 million that could be distributed, by formula, to all remaining grantees.

REV_00141724

This would also allow budget resources to be shifted to other efforts, such as the proposed Colonias Gateway Initiative that will serve some of the most distressed communities in the country.

The communities that would lose funding based upon the 1990 census data currently available are:

Community	Per Capita Income as a multiple of National Average	FY 2002 CDBG funds
Greenwich, CT.	3.2	$1,157,000
Newport Beach, CA	3.2	$ 490,000
Lower Marion, PA	2.9	$1,407,000
Naples, FL	2.9	$ 149,000
Palo Alto, CA	2.3	$ 808,000
Westchester County, NY	2.1	$7,004,000
Santa Monica, CA	2.0	$1,787,000
Brookline, MA	2.0	$1,872,000
Newton, MA	2.0	$2,663,000
TOTAL		$17,337,000

The following communities were inadvertently listed in the original 2003 budget summary: Colorado Springs, CO; Penn Hills, PA; Virginia Beach, VA; and Malden, MA.

By reallocating the funds from the wealthiest communities, the Department will be able to target CDBG funds to communities that have lesser local resources for housing, community and economic development needs. The nine communities (with a total CDBG allocation level of $17.3 million) were identified from 1990 census data as meeting the threshold of exceeding the per capita income by 200 percent. However, these communities may change once the 2000 census data is available. A final analysis of the actual communities to receive a reduction of a portion of their CDBG funds will not be possible until the new per capita income data is available in the fall of 2002.

REV_00141725

Revisions to our formulas will not be possible until the data used for each element of these formulas is available for use; the earliest possibility will be during calendar year 2003. In actuality, the Department and Congress will not have an opportunity to apply the data until fiscal year 2004. The proposed shift in allocations is an interim step to facilitate some change until the actual demographic data is available for our use.

Thank you very much. This ends my opening remarks.

The Honorable Lane Evans
Ranking Democratic Member Committee on Veterans' Affairs
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Congressman Evans:

This is in response to your request for the views of the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) on H.R. 1957, 107th Congress, the "Justice for Atomic Veterans Act of 2001," a bill "to amend title 38, United States Code, to expand the list of diseases presumed to be service connected in the case of radiation-exposed veterans" and to expand the definition of "radiation-risk activity." VA opposes this bill.

Section 2 of the bill would amend 38 U.S.C. § 1112(c)(2) by adding ten diseases to the list of diseases that are presumed to be service connected for radiation-exposed veterans. H.R. 1957 would add to the existing list the following diseases: lung cancer, bone cancer, skin cancer, colon cancer, posterior subcapsular cataracts, non-malignant thyroid nodular disease, ovarian cancer, parathyroid adenoma, tumors of the brain and central nervous system, and rectal cancer.

As you know, VA recently amended 38 C.F.R. § 3.309(d)(2) by adding cancers of the bone, brain, colon, lung, and ovary to the list of diseases that may be presumptively service connected. VA therefore does not oppose amending 38 U.S.C. § 1112(c)(2) to add these five cancers. Our decision to amend section 3.309(d) was based upon our conclusion that public policy and equity dictate that veterans are entitled to the reduced burden of proof for these five cancers available to persons covered under the Radiation Exposure Compensation Act (RECA), Pub. L. No. 101-426, 104 Stat. 920 (1990) (codified as amended at 42 U.S.C. 2210 note), the RECA Amendments of 2000, Pub. L. No. 106-245, § 3, 114 Stat. 501, 502, and the Energy Employees Occupational Illness Compensation Program Act of 2000, Pub. L. No. 106-398, tit. XXXVI, 114 Stat. 1654A-1232. We also noted in our notice of proposed rulemaking that Congress has found that nuclear weapons testing involves "unique dangers, including . . . recurring exposures to radioactive substances that, even in small amounts, can cause medical harm." Pub. L. No. 106-398, § 3602(a)(1). We noted, in addition, that enactment of this recent legislation was a result of congressional findings that scientific data resulting from the enactment of the Radiation-Exposed Veterans Compensation Act of 1988, Pub. L. 100-321, and obtained from the Committee on the Biological Effects of Ionizing Radiation and the President's Advisory Committee on Human Radiation Experiments, "provide medical validation for the extension of compensable radiogenic pathologies." RECA Amendments of 2000, § 2(4), 114 Stat. 501.

VA opposes creation of a presumption of service connection for the five other diseases listed in section 2 of H.R. 1957, because we are unaware of any scientific evidence concluding that these conditions are likely to have been caused by the levels of radiation to which veterans were exposed during atomic tests and at Hiroshima and Nagasaki. The extent of exposure to ionizing radiation experienced by atomic test participants and Hiroshima/Nagasaki occupation forces has been thoroughly studied and the results peer reviewed. The military services have documented that individual exposures were, for the most part, so low as to pose little health risk to most former members – as dose-responses are currently understood from decades of observations of exposed populations, primarily the Japanese atomic-bomb survivors. We are aware that these data are not without their critics, but if the doses were significantly higher than reported to VA or the health risks much greater from the reported doses, the effects would be observable when sizable populations of exposed veterans have been studied. Yet, studies such as the 1996 Institute of Medicine's "Mortality of Veteran Participants in the CROSSROADS Nuclear Test," which analyzed causes of death among 40,000 test participants, have not borne this out. The authors of that report determined that exposure to ionizing radiation did not contribute to increased mortality among this sizable study population.

Veterans who have skin cancer, posterior subcapsular cataracts, nonmalignant thyroid nodular disease, parathyroid adenoma, and rectal cancer can establish direct service connection for these conditions under 38 U.S.C. §§ 1110 or 1131, or the Veterans' Dioxin and Radiation Exposure and Radiation Exposure Compensation Standards Act, Pub. L. No. 98-542, 98 Stat. 2725 (1984). In addition, pursuant to 38 U.S.C. § 1710(a)(2)(F) and (e)(1)(B), veterans exposed to radiation are currently eligible to receive health-care services for their exposure-related disabilities from VA.

Section 3 of H.R. 1957 would amend 38 U.S.C. § 1112(c)(3)(B), which defines "radiation-risk activity," to include service at Amchitka Island, Alaska, involving performance of duty related to the Long Shot, Milrow, or Cannikin underground nuclear tests between October 23, 1965, and December 31, 1973. In our recent rulemaking, we revised the definition of "radiation-risk activity" in 38 C.F.R. § 3.309(d)(3)(ii) by adding service at Amchitka Island, Alaska, prior to January 1, 1974, if exposed to ionizing radiation in performance of duty related to certain underground nuclear tests. This was done to ensure that veterans exposed to radiation during military service receive the same consideration for the risks of radiation exposure as the employees of the Department of Energy (DOE), DOE contractors and subcontractors, and atomic energy employers with whom they worked. We therefore have no objection to this amendment to section 1112(c)(3)(B). We also have no objection to amending section 1112(c)(3)(B) to specifically authorize the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to determine by regulation service that constitutes participation in a "radiation-risk activity."

H.R. 1957 is subject to the pay-as-you-go requirement of the Omnibus Budget

REV_00141732

Reconciliation Act of 1990 with regard to the five diseases currently not included in 38 C.F.R. § 3.309(d)(2). VA estimates that enactment of H.R. 1957 would result in benefits costs of $822,000 for one year and will exceed $23 million for five years. We estimate further that enactment of this bill would result in an administrative cost of $630,000 for one year and $2.9 million for five years.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

Anthony J. Principi

H. R. 1957

To amend title 38, United States Code, to expand the list of disease s presumed to be service connected in the case of radiation-exposed veterans an d to expand the circumstances deemed have been radiation-risk activities for me mbers of the Armed Forces.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

May 23, 2001

Mr. EVANS (for himself, Ms. BERKLEY, Mr. FILNER, Ms. BROWN of Florida, Mr. R ODRIGUEZ, Mr. UDALL of New Mexico, Ms. MCKINNEY, Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA, Mr. FROST, M s. PELOSI, Mr. SANDERS, and Mr. WYNN) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs

---

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to expand the list of disease s presumed to be service connected in the case of radiation-exposed veterans an d to expand the circumstances deemed have been radiation-risk activities for me mbers of the Armed Forces.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Un ited States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Justice for Atomic Veterans Act of 2001' .

SEC. 2. EXPANSION OF LIST OF DISEASES PRESUMED TO BE SERVICE CONNECTED F OR RADIATION-EXPOSED VETERANS.

Section 1112(c)(2) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by addi ng at the end the following new subparagraphs:

`(Q) Lung cancer.

`(R) Bone cancer.

`(S) Skin cancer.

`(T) Colon cancer.

`(U) Posterior subcapsular cataracts.

`(V) Nonmalignant thyroid nodular disease.

`(W) Ovarian cancer.

`(X) Parathyroid adenoma.

`(Y) Tumors of the brain and central nervous system.

`(Z) Rectal cancer.'.

SEC. 3. EXPANSION OF SERVICE CIRCUMSTANCES DEEMED TO BE RADIATION-RISK A CTIVITIES.

Section 1112(c)(3)(B) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by a dding at the end the following new clauses:

> `(iv) Service at Amchitka Island, Alaska, involving the perfor mance of duty related to the Long Shot, Milrow or Cannikin underground nuclear tests which were conducted on that island during the period beginning October 2 3, 1965, and ending December 31, 1973.
> `(v) Service at such other locations, during such periods of t ime, as the Secretary determines by regulation to be service that is comparable as a radiation-risk activity to the service specified in clauses (i) through (iv).'.

There are items that will need to be staffed this evening for meetings tomorrow. The response time will be short. I would appreciate your making arrangements in your offices to have someone available to handle these staffings. If you would let us know special arrangements, I would appreciate it. Thanks.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT
OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20503

March 12, 2002
(House Rules)

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY

(THIS STATEMENT HAS BEEN COORDINATED BY OMB WITH THE CONCERNED AGENCIES.)

H.R. 2341 - Class Action Fairness Act of 2002

(Rep. Goodlatte (R) Virginia and 56 cosponsors)

The Administration strongly supports the enactment of H.R. 2341 as an important step in reforming class action litigation. Among the bill's many commonsense provisions, the Administration supports the proposal to establish a consumer class action bill of rights that would: (1) require notice of a lawsuit to class members in "plain English"; (2) require judicial review of settlements that give class members only "coupons" or other non-cash benefits; and (3) prohibit a court from approving a settlement that discriminates among plaintiffs on account of their geographical location or status as class representatives.

The bill also would make long-needed changes to the requirements for federal diversity jurisdiction over class action cases. The Administration strongly supports the proposal to permit removal to federal court of a class action if the aggregate amount in controversy exceeds $2 million and there is minimal diversity (at least one plaintiff representative and one defendant are from different States). Combined with existing federal rules for consolidation of related federal cases, this proposal would help avoid the inefficiency, waste, and unfairness that has too often resulted from multiple overlapping class action suits.

The Administration would support adding, at the appropriate point in the legislative process, a provision to Section 7 of the bill to make clear that the authority of the Supreme Court under Section 2072, 2074 or 2075 of Title 28 of the U.S. Code to issue certain rules that supersede conflicting laws cannot be used to supersede this legislation and amendments made by this legislation.

Very well done. My only comment (in addition to adding/quoting something about what the President said in today's press conference) would be that you might want to consider deleting the line that Kristen and Jay deleted from the SAP. But I don't feel strongly about that.

Speech to ATRA

March 14, 2002

[Acknowledgements]

Thank you all for inviting me here today. I would like to talk to you this morning about my job as Counsel to the President and also about the Administration's approach to civil justice reform issues. And then I would be happy to answer questions that you may have about any subject.

First of all, I could not help but notice that you have a panel later this morning that will discuss judicial elections. I will say definitively that I am very happy that I no longer have to run in judicial elections. Raising money is no fun. And without stealing any thunder, let me add my two cents to your panel: I personally oppose the election of judges.

I. Role of Counsel to the President

Of course, to me, running for elective office seems a part of the distant past. I have been President Bush's counsel in the White House for nearly 14 months. And a lot has happened. Thinking back over the last 14 months, what has really struck me is how important the integrity and honesty of the President are to the proper functioning of the Administration in general and the Counsel's office in particular. During the campaign, President Bush pledged repeatedly that he would uphold not just the laws of the land, but also the honor and dignity of the Presidency. And I think we all can be grateful that President Bush is as advertised: a man of integrity and of his word whom all Americans can respect and look to for principled leadership in times of peace and, as now, in times of war.

As Counsel to President Bush, much of my day-to-day job is necessarily reactive, responding to the crisis or issue at hand. But that said, standing here with the benefit of over a year of service, I can say that two core principles guide me in serving the Presidency and this President.

The first is fidelity to the rule of law. Several prior Counsels to the President have been criticized -- or worse -- for disserving the Presidency: for subordinating the rule of law to the political and personal interests. Knowing this history, the lawyers on my staff and I fully understand that the first principle that must influence and determine everything we do is fidelity to the rule of law.

The second principle is preservation and defense of the constitutional prerogatives of the Presidency. Those prerogatives are constantly tested and challenged: Congressional requests for documents of internal policy debates, Senatorial demands regarding nomination of judges, congressional attempts to ensure that certain Executive Branch agencies, or at least certain Executive Branch officers, operate independently of the President. One of the most important jobs we have in the Counsel's office is to preserve the powers and prerogatives of the Presidency against inappropriate congressional incursions.

II. Civil Justice Reform

Another aspect of my job is to participate, in conjunction with the President's domestic policy advisors and the relevant departments and agencies, in the development of legal policy. Civil justice reform is one part of that. So let me turn to that subject.

A. Background

We cannot begin to achieve meaningful civil justice reform without first convincing the American people and the Congress that there is a problem that needs fixing. When the issue of civil justice reform is described -- as is often is -- as big business against consumer or big business against labor, we have seen that meaningful reform is not likely to get very far.

REV_00141780

So the first imperative continues to be educational -- to educate the Congress and the public on the problem and to show that proposals for reform will benefit consumers, labor, and shareholders.

The civil justice system must strongly protect consumers by ensuring that legitimate victims of corporate malfeasance can obtain justice and receive fair and just compensation. The issue is one of balance. We do not want a tort system that unduly sacrifices product development and innovation -- new drugs and new vaccines, for example. But we also do not want a legal system that unduly sacrifices safety -- allowing new drugs that have deadly side effects, for example. Finding the right balance so as to ensure appropriate standards of liability and appropriate damages awards is therefore a critical function of the tort system.

Apart from substance, we also want sensible and efficient litigation procedures to ensure that shareholders, employees, and plaintiffs are not penalized by waste and undue inefficiency in the litigation process.

On both substance and procedure, there is surely room for improvement. The existing tort regime is often characterized by excessive payouts, lottery-style awards, and an inequitable division of the spoils among claimants and counsel. It not only fails properly to deter unsafe conduct, but also often fails to compensate victims fully for their losses.

Escalating lawsuit abuse imposes enormous and varied costs on our economy. Consumers pay higher prices for fewer products. Shareholders lose value when stock prices drop as a result of a spurious lawsuit. Employees lose their jobs or receive reduced compensation as the companies for which they work are forced to cover excess litigation expense.

America's civil justice system is the most expensive in the industrialized world. The overall cost of our system is conservatively estimated at nearly $180 billion annually, or about 2 percent of GDP. And costs have grown steadily over time, up from only 1.3% of GDP in 1970, and approximately 0.6% in 1950.

Americans understand that the current system is broken. The better they understand the inequities of the system, the more inclined they will be to view civil justice reform favorably.

Of course, when we talk about the civil justice "system" in the singular, we ignore one major issue -- federalism. Lawsuits to recover damages for injuries are traditionally governed by state substantive law. And many in my party are appropriately cautious about the federal government stepping in to override substantive state law. To justify federal tort reform measures that would alter state tort law, therefore, one must convincingly show the relationship and effect of state tort law on the national economy and interstate markets.

B. Administration's Approach to Congress

Let me turn to the Administration's views on the civil justice reform outlook in Congress. As with any matter requiring legislation, we work very closely with Congress and must be aware of the views of Congress. It appears that meaningful civil justice reform in Congress is most likely to be accomplished not through one massive tort reform bill covering a slew of often controversial issues, but rather through targeted measures on specific bills related to specific issues -- whether that be a class action bill, a terrorism insurance bill, a patients bill of rights, a vaccine liability bill.

With that in mind, I want to focus on two pieces of proposed legislation that the Administration strongly supports and that are now before the Congress.

REV_00141782

1. Class Action Legislation

The first relates to class action reform. As you know, one of today's major civil justice problems is class-action litigation. In many cases, defending on the merits is a bet-the-company strategy, as Judge Richard Posner noted some years ago. The threat of class certification inevitably leads to settlement because every good lawyer or savvy client knows that markets will respond to certification with a major drop in the stock price.

Right now, moreover, a handful of State courts, through their certification and settlement of large-scale class action lawsuits, are effectively making law and dictating corporate behavior for 49 other States. A class action lawsuit brought in State court may be removed to federal court only if there is full diversity among the defendants and the named plaintiffs. In addition, each class member's claim alone must exceed $75,000, even if the aggregate amount in controversy far exceeds this amount. These requirements make it easy for plaintiffs' lawyers to bring large class actions in favorable state forums, even where these lawsuits have significant interstate commerce implications and involve the residents and laws of multiple states.

The individual consumers on whose behalf these suits are brought often receive only a few dollars each from a class action settlement. Frequently, they do not even get cash, but instead receive a "coupon" for a noncash discount on one of the defendant's products. By contrast, the lawyers who bring the suits often negotiate very large fees.

To address these problems, the Administration strongly supports the Class Action Fairness Bill, H.R. 2341, currently before the House. The commonsense provisions in that bill include (1) notice of a lawsuit to class members in "plain English"; (2) judicial review of "coupon" settlements; and (3) prohibitions against court approval of proposed settlements providing for preferential payments to certain designated members of the class.

REV_00141783

In addition, this bill calls for modification of diversity requirements for federal jurisdiction over class actions, such that cases would be removable if the aggregate amount in controversy exceeds $2,000,000 and there is minimal diversity. Federal jurisdiction for major class actions of this kind would help protect out-of-state defendants, as well as out-of-State plaintiff class members, from local biases in cases that affect their substantial interests and therefore is consistent with and fulfills the Constitution's original design.

2. Procedures for mass tort terrorism cases.

I also want to talk briefly about one other important issue currently being debated in Congress -- the legal system's handing of mass terrorism incidents. Congress has been debating for months how the legal system and the insurance industry will cope with additional terrorist attacks.

As to insurance, the Administration and most in Congress agree that some level of government backstop is necessary so that the insurance industry can manage the risk of future terrorism incidents and continue to provide coverage for major building projects, stadiums, air carriers, and the like.

A sticking point in passing any bill has concerned the appropriate litigation procedures for mass tort terrorism incidents. The Administration has proposed that sensible litigation procedures for mass terrorism incidents be part of any terrorism insurance bill.

Sensible litigation procedures for mass tort terrorism incidents are necessary for several reasons.

First, sensible litigation procedures will help reduce the substantial uncertainty faced by the insurance industry in pricing terrorism risk. The largest piece of the terrorism risk to insurers is likely to be the liability component of property and casualty insurance.

REV_00141784

Second, absent sensible litigation procedures, the resources of liable defendants, including resources from their liability insurance policies, will not suffice to compensate the class of successful plaintiff-victims in mass tort terrorism incidents.

Third, the number and variety of cases, plaintiffs, defendants, causes of action, liability standards, and damages rules in mass tort terrorism cases will overwhelm the ordinary legal system and cause extraordinary delays.

The Administration advanced four proposals to respond to these issues.

First, tort cases arising out of a mass tort terrorism incident should be consolidated in a single federal court. This is a common procedure in mass tort cases and was a central feature of the legislation recently enacted by Congress for the tort cases arising out of the September 11 attacks.

Second, there should be no punitive damage awards in mass tort terrorism cases. In mass tort cases, only a limited pool of resources will be available to plaintiffs who prove liability (whether because of bankruptcy or settlement). Because of the limited pool of resources, it would be grossly inequitable and unfair to allow one plaintiff or class of plaintiffs to receive an excessive award -- including a punitive component entirely unrelated to the plaintiff's injuries and unnecessary to compensate the plaintiff -- that could greatly limit or outright preclude recovery by other plaintiffs.

Third, there should be no joint and several liability for non-economic damages in mass tort terrorism cases, but rather should be proportional fault for recovery of non-economic damages. Without such a provision, a court could hold any defendant "jointly and severally" liable for the full amount of the plaintiff's non-economic damages, even for those damages attributable to the terrorists' acts and unrelated to the defendant's actions.

Fourth, the plaintiff's recovery in mass terrorism cases should be offset by the amount of first-party insurance received by the plaintiff. This will ensure that injured parties receive appropriate compensation, but also preserve the pool of defendant assets and thereby allow equitable recovery for all injured parties.

I am pleased to report that the House of Representatives agreed with the Administration's four proposals (and even added a fifth proposal to limit attorneys' fees) and passed a strong bill at the end of last year.

That leaves the Senate.

In negotiations with the Senate, we thought we had achieved a good bipartisan agreement. The Administration -- along with key members of the Banking Committee, Democrat Senators Sarbanes and Dodd and Republican Senators Gramm and Enzi -- agreed that some sensible litigation procedures should be part of any terrorism insurance bill. In particular, there was a bipartisan agreement for two provisions: consolidation of claims in a single court and the elimination of punitive damages.

But just when we thought there was agreement, Senator Daschle intervened at the 11th hour and overrode his Senators, Sarbanes and Dodd, and prevented the bill from coming to the Senate floor. The sole ground on which Senator Daschle took this action were the liability procedures, modest and limited as they are.

The Administration remains deeply disappointed that Senate leadership took this extraordinary step and prevented the Senate from considering a bill that had wide bipartisan agreement. We are continuing to support a terrorism insurance bill with sensible litigation management procedures. But what happened in the Senate shows us all that any civil justice reform, no matter how sensible the proposal in question, will be a real fight in the Senate.

REV_00141786

III. Conclusion

In closing, let me say how much we appreciate your efforts on behalf of reform. And please know that the Administration is committed to supporting sensible litigation procedures that will make our legal system as effective as possible. With that, I would be happy to answer questions.

Speech to ATRA

March 14, 2002

[Acknowledgements]

Thank you all for inviting me here today. I would like to talk to you this morning about my job as Counsel to the President and also about the Administration's approach to civil justice reform issues. And then I would be happy to answer questions that you may have about any subject.

First of all, I could not help but notice that you have a panel later this morning that will discuss judicial elections. I will say definitively that I am very happy that I no longer have to run in judicial elections. Raising money is no fun. And without stealing any thunder, let me add my two cents to your panel: I personally oppose the election of judges.

I. Role of Counsel to the President

Of course, to me, running for elective office seems a part of the distant past. I have been President Bush's counsel in the White House for nearly 14 months. And a lot has happened. Thinking back over the last 14 months, what has really struck me is how important the integrity and honesty of the President are to the proper functioning of the Administration in general and the Counsel's office in particular. During the campaign, President Bush pledged repeatedly that he would uphold not just the laws of the land, but also the honor and dignity of the Presidency. And I think we all can be grateful that President Bush is as advertised: a man of integrity and of his word whom all Americans can respect and look to for principled leadership in times of peace and, as now, in times of war.

As Counsel to President Bush, much of my day-to-day job is necessarily reactive, responding to the crisis or issue at hand. But that said, standing here with the benefit of over a year of service, I can say that two core principles guide me in serving the Presidency and this President.

The first is fidelity to the rule of law. Several prior Counsels to the President have been criticized -- or worse -- for disserving the Presidency: for subordinating the rule of law to the political and personal interests. Knowing this history, the lawyers on my staff and I fully understand that the first principle that must influence and determine everything we do is fidelity to the rule of law.

The second principle is preservation and defense of the constitutional prerogatives of the Presidency. Those prerogatives are constantly tested and challenged: Congressional requests for documents of internal policy debates, Senatorial demands regarding nomination of judges, congressional attempts to ensure that certain Executive Branch agencies, or at least certain Executive Branch officers, operate independently of the President. One of the most important jobs we have in the Counsel's office is to preserve the powers and prerogatives of the Presidency against inappropriate congressional incursions.

II. Civil Justice Reform

Another aspect of my job is to participate, in conjunction with the President's domestic policy advisors and the relevant departments and agencies, in the development of legal policy. Civil justice reform is one part of that. So let me turn to that subject.

A. Background

We cannot begin to achieve meaningful civil justice reform without first convincing the American people and the Congress that there is a problem that needs fixing. When the issue of civil justice reform is described -- as is often is -- as big business against consumer or big business against labor, we have seen that meaningful reform is not likely to get very far.

REV_00141790

So the first imperative continues to be educational -- to educate the Congress and the public on the problem and to show that proposals for reform will benefit consumers, labor, and shareholders.

The civil justice system must strongly protect consumers by ensuring that legitimate victims of corporate malfeasance can obtain justice and receive fair and just compensation. The issue is one of balance. We do not want a tort system that unduly sacrifices product development and innovation -- new drugs and new vaccines, for example. But we also do not want a legal system that unduly sacrifices safety -- allowing new drugs that have deadly side effects, for example. Finding the right balance so as to ensure appropriate standards of liability and appropriate damages awards is therefore a critical function of the tort system.

Apart from substance, we also want sensible and efficient litigation procedures to ensure that shareholders, employees, and plaintiffs are not penalized by waste and undue inefficiency in the litigation process.

On both substance and procedure, there is surely room for improvement. The existing tort regime is often characterized by excessive payouts, lottery-style awards, and an inequitable division of the spoils among claimants and counsel. It not only fails properly to deter unsafe conduct, but also often fails to compensate victims fully for their losses.

Escalating lawsuit abuse imposes enormous and varied costs on our economy. Consumers pay higher prices for fewer products. Shareholders lose value when stock prices drop as a result of a spurious lawsuit. Employees lose their jobs or receive reduced compensation as the companies for which they work are forced to cover excess litigation expense.

America's civil justice system is the most expensive in the industrialized world. The overall cost of our system is conservatively estimated at nearly $180 billion annually, or about 2 percent of GDP. And costs have grown steadily over time, up from only 1.3% of GDP in 1970, and approximately 0.6% in 1950.

Americans understand that the current system is broken. The better they understand the inequities of the system, the more inclined they will be to view civil justice reform favorably.

Of course, when we talk about the civil justice "system" in the singular, we ignore one major issue -- federalism. Lawsuits to recover damages for injuries are traditionally governed by state substantive law. And many in my party are appropriately cautious about the federal government stepping in to override substantive state law. To justify federal tort reform measures that would alter state tort law, therefore, one must convincingly show the relationship and effect of state tort law on the national economy and interstate markets.

B. Administration's Approach to Congress

Let me turn to the Administration's views on the civil justice reform outlook in Congress. The President spoke to this issue yesterday at his press conference and stated: "I am for reducing the number of lawsuits in our society. I think everybody will have their day in court, but I think a society that is so kind of litigious-oriented is one that is bad for jobs, bad for the creation of jobs. And . . . I will support reforms which reduce lawsuits and at the same time provide -- give people the opportunity to take their case to court."

On civil justice reform, as with any matter requiring legislation, we work very closely with Congress and must be aware of the views of Congress. It appears that meaningful civil justice reform in Congress is most likely to be accomplished not through one massive tort reform bill covering a slew of often controversial issues, but rather through targeted measures on specific bills related to specific issues -- whether that be a class action bill, a terrorism insurance bill, a patients bill of rights, a vaccine liability bill.

With that in mind, I want to focus on two pieces of proposed legislation that the Administration strongly supports and that are now before the Congress.

1. Class Action Legislation

The first relates to class action reform. As you know, one of today's major civil justice problems is class-action litigation. In many cases, defending on the merits is a bet-the-company strategy, as Judge Richard Posner noted some years ago. The threat of class certification inevitably leads to settlement because every good lawyer or savvy client knows that markets will respond to certification with a major drop in the stock price.

Right now, moreover, a handful of State courts, through their certification and settlement of large-scale class action lawsuits, are effectively making law and dictating corporate behavior for 49 other States. A class action lawsuit brought in State court may be removed to federal court only if there is full diversity among the defendants and the named plaintiffs. In addition, each class member's claim alone must exceed $75,000, even if the aggregate amount in controversy far exceeds this amount. These requirements make it easy for plaintiffs' lawyers to bring large class actions in favorable state forums, even where these lawsuits have significant interstate commerce implications and involve the residents and laws of multiple states.

The individual consumers on whose behalf these suits are brought often receive only a few dollars each from a class action settlement. Frequently, they do not even get cash, but instead receive a "coupon" for a noncash discount on one of the defendant's products. By contrast, the lawyers who bring the suits often negotiate very large fees.

REV_00141793

To address these problems, the Administration strongly supports the Class Action Fairness Bill, H.R. 2341, currently before the House. The commonsense provisions in that bill include (1) notice of a lawsuit to class members in "plain English"; (2) judicial review of "coupon" settlements; and (3) prohibitions against court approval of proposed settlements providing for preferential payments to certain designated members of the class.

In addition, this bill calls for modification of diversity requirements for federal jurisdiction over class actions, such that cases would be removable if the aggregate amount in controversy exceeds $2,000,000 and there is minimal diversity. Federal jurisdiction for major class actions of this kind would help protect out-of-state defendants, as well as out-of-State plaintiff class members, from local biases in cases that affect their substantial interests and therefore is consistent with and fulfills the Constitution's original design.

2. Procedures for mass tort terrorism cases.

I also want to talk briefly about one other important issue currently being debated in Congress -- the legal system's handing of mass terrorism incidents. Congress has been debating for months how the legal system and the insurance industry will cope with additional terrorist attacks.

As to insurance, the Administration and most in Congress agree that some level of government backstop is necessary so that the insurance industry can manage the risk of future terrorism incidents and continue to provide coverage for major building projects, stadiums, air carriers, and the like.

A sticking point in passing any bill has concerned the appropriate litigation procedures for mass tort terrorism incidents. The Administration has proposed that sensible litigation procedures for mass terrorism incidents be part of any terrorism insurance bill.

REV_00141794

Sensible litigation procedures for mass tort terrorism incidents are necessary for several reasons.

First, sensible litigation procedures will help reduce the substantial uncertainty faced by the insurance industry in pricing terrorism risk. The largest piece of the terrorism risk to insurers is likely to be the liability component of property and casualty insurance.

Second, absent sensible litigation procedures, the resources of liable defendants, including resources from their liability insurance policies, will not suffice to compensate the class of successful plaintiff-victims in mass tort terrorism incidents.

Third, the number and variety of cases, plaintiffs, defendants, causes of action, liability standards, and damages rules in mass tort terrorism cases will overwhelm the ordinary legal system and cause extraordinary delays.

The Administration advanced four proposals to respond to these issues.

First, tort cases arising out of a mass tort terrorism incident should be consolidated in a single federal court. This is a common procedure in mass tort cases and was a central feature of the legislation recently enacted by Congress for the tort cases arising out of the September 11 attacks.

Second, there should be no punitive damage awards in mass tort terrorism cases. In mass tort cases, only a limited pool of resources will be available to plaintiffs who prove liability (whether because of bankruptcy or settlement). Because of the limited pool of resources, it would be grossly inequitable and unfair to allow one plaintiff or class of plaintiffs to receive an excessive award -- including a punitive component entirely unrelated to the plaintiff's injuries and unnecessary to compensate the plaintiff -- that could greatly limit or outright preclude recovery by other plaintiffs.

Third, there should be no joint and several liability for non-economic damages in mass tort terrorism cases, but rather should be proportional fault for recovery of non-economic damages. Without such a provision, a court could hold any defendant "jointly and severally" liable for the full amount of the plaintiff's non-economic damages, even for those damages attributable to the terrorists' acts and unrelated to the defendant's actions.

Fourth, the plaintiff's recovery in mass terrorism cases should be offset by the amount of first-party insurance received by the plaintiff. This will ensure that injured parties receive appropriate compensation, but also preserve the pool of defendant assets and thereby allow equitable recovery for all injured parties.

I am pleased to report that the House of Representatives agreed with the Administration's four proposals (and even added a fifth proposal to limit attorneys' fees) and passed a strong bill at the end of last year.

That leaves the Senate.

In negotiations with the Senate, we thought we had achieved a good bipartisan agreement. The Administration -- along with key members of the Banking Committee, Democrat Senators Sarbanes and Dodd and Republican Senators Gramm and Enzi -- agreed that some sensible litigation procedures should be part of any terrorism insurance bill. In particular, there was a bipartisan agreement for two provisions: consolidation of claims in a single court and the elimination of punitive damages.

The sole ground on which Senator Daschle took this action were the liability procedures, modest and limited as they are.

REV_00141796

The Administration remains deeply disappointed that Senate leadership took this extraordinary step and prevented the Senate from considering a bill that had wide bipartisan agreement. We are continuing to support a terrorism insurance bill with sensible litigation management procedures. But what happened in the Senate shows us all that any civil justice reform, no matter how sensible the proposal in question, will be a real fight in the Senate.

III. Conclusion

In closing, let me say how much we appreciate your efforts on behalf of reform. And please know that the Administration is committed to supporting sensible litigation procedures that will make our legal system as effective as possible. With that, I would be happy to answer questions.

Draft: March __, 2002

MEMORANDUM FOR [SELECTED] PERSONNEL IN THE WHITE HOUSE OFFICE, THE NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL STAFF

FROM: TIMOTHY E. FLANIGAN
DEPUTY COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: COOPERATION WITH DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION

The White House is cooperating with, and fully supports, a criminal investigation being conducted by the United States Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois and the Federal Bureau of Investigation relating to the disclosure last year of confidential government information concerning the blocking and freezing of the assets of the Global Relief Foundation, the Benevolence International Foundation, and the Holy Land Foundation.

To assist the Justice Department's investigation, we ask that you are hereby directed to complete and return to the head of your office the Certification attached hereto no later than March 22, 2002.

You are also asked directed to produce all documents in your possession (including e-mails and internal memoranda) that:

(a) were created (or are dated) between September 11, 2001 and on or before September 30, 2001, and indicate that the Global Relief Foundation and/or the Benevolence International Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of organizations whose assets would by frozen by the United States government; or

(b) were created (or are dated) on or before December 4, 2001, and indicate that the Holy Land Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of suspected terrorist fund-raising organizations or would otherwise have its assets blocked or frozen by the United States government; or

(c) were created (or are dated) on or before December 14, 2001, and indicate that the Global Relief Foundation was to be searched or would have its assets frozen or blocked on or about December 14, 2001 or which discusses the expected date and time of any such action.

Please deliver all responsive documents to my office (2nd Floor, West Wing) no later than March 22, 2002.

If you have any questions, please call Brett Kavanaugh (6-7984) or Chris Bartolomucci (6-7963).

CERTIFICATION

I hereby certify, to the best of my knowledge, [reference to perjury?] that _____ I had access

_____ I did not have access

(a) on or before September 30, 2001, to the information that the Global Relief Foundation and/or the Benevolence International Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of organizations whose assets would be frozen; or

(b) on or before December 3, 2001, to the information that a search would be conducted of (or that a blocking action would be taken against) the Holy Land Foundation on December 4, 2001; or

(c) on or before December 13, 2001, to the information that a blocking action would be taken against (or that a search would be conducted of) the Global Relief Foundation on December 14, 2001.

I further certify that

_____ I have produced to the ~~Counsel's~~ Office of the Counsel to the President ("Counsel's Office) all documents in my possession (including e-mails and internal memoranda) responsive to the document production directive in the March 15, 2002 memorandum to which this Certification was attached.

_____ I have conducted a search and determined that I have no such documents.

I understand that the information and documents I provide to the Counsel's Office are likely to be disclosed to the U.S. Department of Justice for use in its criminal investigation and that the Counsel's Office is not acting as my private attorney in this matter.

TRANSFER OF EMERGENCY FOOD AND SHELTER PROGRAM FROM FEMA TO HUD.

SEC. ___. TRANSFER OF EMERGENCY FOOD AND SHELTER PROGRAM FROM FEMA TO HUD.

(a) TRANSFER.--Title III of the McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act is amended--

(1) in the title heading, by striking "FEDERAL" and "MANAGEMENT";

(2) in section 301(a), by striking "Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency" and inserting "Secretary of Housing and Urban Development";

(3) by revising the first and second sentences of section 301(b) to read as follows:

"The National Board shall consist of the Secretary and six members. The Secretary shall appoint members to vacancies on the National Board existing on, or occurring after, the effective date of this sentence.";

(4) in section 301(c), by striking "Director" and inserting "Secretary";

(5) by repealing section 301(e);

(6) in the heading for section 303, by striking "FEDERAL EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT AGENCY" and inserting "DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT";

(7) in section 303, by striking "Director" the two places it appears and inserting "Secretary";

(8) in section 303(b)(1), by striking "legal counsel and Inspector General of the Federal Emergency Management Agency" and inserting "General Counsel and Inspector General of the Department of Housing and Urban Development";

(9) in the heading for section 311, by striking "DIRECTOR" and inserting "SECRETARY";

(10) in section 311, by striking "Director" and inserting "Secretary";

(11) by revising section 321(1) to read as follows:

"(1) The term `Secretary' means the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development."; and

(12) in section 322, by striking "$180,000,000 for fiscal year 1993 and $187,560,000 for fiscal year 1994" and inserting "$153,000,000 for fiscal year 2003 and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2004".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.--The amendments made by subsection (a) shall be effective on the later of the date of enactment of this Act or October 1, 2002.

March 2002 – DRAFT

TRANSFER OF EMERGENCY FOOD AND SHELTER PROGRAM FROM FEMA TO HUD

Currently, the Emergency Food and Shelter program is administered by FEMA and is implemented through a National Board consisting of the Director of FEMA as chairperson and six other members appointed by the Director from nominations submitted from six specified organizations. Section ___ would support the proposal in HUD's FY 2003 Budget to transfer the program from FEMA to HUD.

Under this proposal, the Secretary of HUD would replace the Director of FEMA as chairperson of the Board and the Secretary would appoint members to the Board when there are Board vacancies. In addition, this proposal would reauthorize the program through FY 2004. The transfer of this program to HUD would improve the coordination and delivery of homeless resources, given HUD's lead responsibility for housing and shelter.

Hi Brett. I work for Lezlee Westine in OPL; we have a quick question.

I have been invited by the American Council of Young Political Leaders (ACYPL) to "represent the US on an educational mission" to Egypt and Morocco (I am quoting their literature & invite letter). They needed an Arab American female Republican, and I fit the bill. :)

The trip consists of an 8-member delegation that meets with government & political officials, executives, and community leaders on a wide range of political, cultural, and economic issues. It is a highly regarded program, lots of congress people & other elected officials go on their trips. ACYPL is a 501(c)(3), and it's programs are funded by a State Dep't grant.

But we are wondering if I am allowed to go, because they pay for the whole deal. Can you let me know? I can fax you all the info if neccessary.

Thanks!
Nina DeLorenzo

Brian -

Thanks for the two emails containing articles on the above issue.

I noticed that these only go back to December of 2001.

It is very important that we go all the way back to September of 2001 and check very carefully for any mention of the below organizations:

Organizations: "Global Relief Foundation", "Holy Land Foundation" and "Benevolence International Foundation"
Publications: Washington Post, NY Times and USA Today

In addition to being time sensitive it is important that we get all of the articles that reference the announcement of the actual organizations names that will have a connection to the terrorist finance blocking actions.

Thanks!

TEXT AS PREPARED FOR DELIVERY

March 21, 2002

TREASURY DEPUTY CHIEF INFORMATION OFFICER TESTIMONY

BEFORE THE

HOUSE SUBCOMMITTEE ON TECHNOLOGY AND PROCUREMENT

POLICY

HOUSE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT REFORM

Mr. Chairman and members of the Subcommittee, I appreciate the opportunity to appear today to discuss the progress of the Department of the Treasury in using information technology to retool its information management architecture with a goal of simplifying and unifying information for the enterprise. I would like to thank the Chairman and the other members of the Subcommittee for your continued support and interest in the improvement of information technology performance and accountability in the Federal Government.

I serve as the Deputy Chief Information Officer (CIO) for the Treasury Department. In this role I provide strategic direction, oversight and management of all information technology programs within the Treasury Department and its Bureaus. I also serve on the Federal CIO Council Executive Committee as the E-Government Coordinator. My Federal role is to promote E-government initiatives that focus on results oriented, citizen-centric government.

How do you address enterprise-wide issues that have traditionally been dealt with bureau by bureau and/or department by department within your agency? How do you determine which information systems are suitable for cross cutting implementation enterprise-wide?

In the Treasury Department, forums such as the Treasury Chief Information Officers (CIO) Council, the Capital Investment Review Board (CIRB), and the newly formed Chief Officers (CXO) Council address the enterprise-wide issues facing the Department and its bureaus. I have provided a handout with my testimony of the structure within the Treasury Department to address enterprise decisions and strategic planning. The Treasury CIO Council provides the strategic technical direction and evaluates technical solutions considered on an enterprise basis. Business cases for enterprise solutions are evaluated and approved by the Capital Investment Review Board. The Chief Officers Council (CXO), a newly formed group, is designed to act as a Steering Group – adopting initiatives and developing high level Departmental benchmarks. Its membership is comprised of the highest-level executives of the following four disciplines: CIOs, Chief Financial Officers (CFOs), Human Resource Officers (HROs), and Procurement Executives (PEs). Our method for determining information systems that are suitable for implementation on an enterprise-wide basis boils down to requirements, economies of scale, and common sense. We hold periodic strategic planning sessions with the CIOs and other departmental officials to determine initiatives we can all benefit from, initiatives that are doable, areas where we already share common technology and issues that we all need to address. Financing options are discussed. Leadership is assigned. Every enterprise initiative has a champion CIO within the Department or its bureaus.

The CXO Council approved a number of technology initiatives that will provide a baseline for many business initiatives within the Department and its bureaus, and is exploring implementation issues necessary to move forward. These initiatives include Portal technology; Self Service Travel; Public Key Infrastructure and Smart Cards; Electronic Records and Document Management; and the Wireless Program. A portal framework was ready on October 1st. The portal will support departmental directory services, communities of practice and the secure sharing of electronic information. The internal communities of practice under consideration include management, procurement, finance, human resources and legislative. We are in the process of evaluating proposals for an enterprise travel solution and hope to have a streamlined and cost effective solution in place within six months. We are providing this information to the Federal E-Gov Travel initiative. Discussions are underway for the provision of public key technology and smart cards for the Department. There is an immediate need to provide 2,000 certificates to the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration to support the transmission of confidential files via public mechanisms. The smart cards, we are exploring, would be used for building access and eventually as an employee identification and network access card. For the wireless program, we are working closely with local, state and federal entities to improve the public safety wireless network. Treasury has the leadership role for this effort in the Federal E-Gov initiatives. One of the first successful uses was at the 2002 winter Olympics.

The next logical step in the process will be to manage investments across agency silos to address citizen focused services such as health care, grants, licensing or taxes.

Discuss specific enterprise-wide infrastructure initiatives that are being implemented that will allow the federal government to harness the benefits of technology. How will your efforts support the work of the OMB Associate Director of IT and E-Government, Mark Forman, in implementing priority e-government and IT initiatives? How will your agency's initiatives benefit citizens? State and local governments? Other agencies?

The Department of the Treasury has more direct contact with the public than most Federal agencies. According to Media Metrics, the Treasury web properties are consistently among the top most frequently accessed sites. The majority of Treasury's E-government initiatives are directed at its customer base – citizens, businesses and other government agencies. This strategy maximizes Treasury's return on its investment, by reducing costs, leveling off its workforce and leveraging technology across all its business lines. I could spend the rest of the afternoon detailing the Department's E-government initiatives, but let me focus on some of the major enterprise initiatives underway at the Department.

Treasury is implementing an enterprise Human Resources system – HR Connect. We are currently spending $53 million a year to support more than 90 personnel and payroll systems. The majority of these systems do not interoperate or "talk" to each other and were never designed for use with today's technology. The objectives of this effort are:

- Enable strategic management of the Treasury workforce
- Facilitate process improvements increasing productivity and achieve high performance
- Provide improved services to employees and managers at reduced costs
- Replace legacy systems with integrated state-of-the-art technology
- Improve the organization's ability to recruit, develop and retain high caliber individuals.

The first three bureaus that went live on HR Connect represented a major milestone. It was the first time that multiple Treasury bureaus were supported within a single line of code. At this time we are working to bring our 7th bureau on line with HR Connect. Total investment plus operational costs of $262 million over 10 years yields a cumulative net benefit of $195 million. The return on investment is $2.31 for every dollar invested. This system supports the internal efficiency and effectiveness goal set forth by OMB.

Our Treasury Communications System (TCS) is the largest private data network in the world. The Department is transitioning TCS into the Treasury Communications Enterprise (TCE). This is essentially a set of corporate utilities that take advantage of Treasury's volume to reduce costs plus managed services to integrate several Treasury telecommunications management programs into a single corporate telecommunications and information technology service. This system serves as a backbone for Treasury's E-government initiatives and supports over 200,000 users worldwide. This system definitely supports the internal efficiency and effectiveness goal but will also provide the baseline for many of Treasury's E-Government initiatives supporting the areas of government to citizen (G2C), government to business (G2B) and government to government (G2G).

As is well known throughout the government and the IT world, Treasury and its bureaus have a number of modernization efforts in various stages of implementation. These modernization efforts address the most difficult issues by reengineering the business processes they support as well as reengineering the technology. The federal tax system, which produces close to $2 trillion in revenue each year, is dependent on a collection of obsolete computer systems developed by IRS over the last 35 years. The purpose of the IRS Business Systems Modernization effort is to raise all major IRS business systems to the level of best practice that exists in private and public sectors, while managing risks inherent in the process. This modernization effort will impact every component of IRS over time. Implementation work on the first approved modernization projects to facilitate call routing and electronic filing will begin in 2001-2002. The Business Systems Modernization Program has reorganized the IRS into business lines which will be supported by the technology. The business lines are: Wage and Investment; Large and Mid-sized Business; Small Business/Self Employed; and Tax Exempt. The IRS has three strategic, customer focused goals: service to each taxpayer, service to all taxpayers, productivity through a quality work environment. Congress has established the aggressive goal that 80 percent of all tax and information returns should be filed electronically by 2007. The 2000 tax year was a banner year for the IRS with one out of every four individual taxpayers filing their tax returns electronically. The IRS E-file program provides faster refunds, an acknowledgement that the tax return has been accepted by the IRS, and nearly 100% accuracy, all of which translates into fewer contacts with the IRS. As of March 30, 2001, the IRS received about 69.9 million Form 1040 returns, down about .4% from last year at that time. This includes 32.6 million returns that were filed electronically, up about 11.2% from the same period last year. The IRS modernization effort addresses all four OMB priorities: internal efficiency and effectiveness, G2C, G2B, and G2G.

In the last decade, trade has grown 132%. U.S. Customs is currently using the Automated Commercial System (ACS), which is sixteen years old and taxed to its limits. To address this deficiency, Customs has designated its replacement, the Automated commercial Environment (ACE) under the overall Customs Modernization Program. Other government agencies, such as Agriculture, Food and Drug Administration, Transportation, Immigration and Naturalization Service, and the Bureau of the Census, rely on Customs systems to perform their internal operations. Currently, a single international shipment can require as many as 40 different government paper forms. Ninety percent of the information is redundant. ACE will significantly reduce the paperwork burden, provide functionality long sought by the trade, and respond to legislative requirements. This contract will put in place a system that not only replaces the current trade system, but in later stages or modules it will upgrade the investigative case management system and internal administrative systems – financial and human resources. A cost-benefit analysis for ACE has determined that a $1 billion investment in ACE now will generate $3.3 billion in Government benefits through revenue recovery, labor cost avoidance, and productivity improvements. ACE is another example of a system hitting each of OMB's goals.

An example of the way that Treasury Bureaus are delivering new value to citizens, businesses, and government partners is FMS' Pay.gov. Pay.gov is an Internet portal and transaction engine that offers a package of electronic financial services to assist agencies. The services of Pay.gov rest on four cornerstones:

- Collections – enabling end-users to authorize collections over the Internet
- Forms submittals and bill presentment – accepting agency forms submitted over the Internet and presenting agency bills to end-users over the Internet
- Authentication – establishing the identity of Internet end-users
- Agency reporting – providing necessary information back to agencies about transactions.

The services of Pay.gov can help agencies meet their GPEA requirements to accept forms electronically by October 2003. The basic services of Pay.gov generally will be free for agencies and the public. FMS will price services that go beyond basic services using an "at-cost" basis.

Treasury's Bureau of Public Debt partnered with Treasury's Financial Management Service, Mellon Bank, MasterCard and IBM to build an Internet-based system to sell U.S. Savings Bonds directly to the public. The Savings Bond Connection allows citizens to buy a savings bond on a 24 x 7 basis through the Internet using a credit card. The Bureau of Public Debt sells directly to the public instead of using its traditional network of over 40,000 commercial banks. Through the Savings Bond Connection, Public Debt reduced the delivery time for bonds by one-third. The system cost $350 thousand to develop and implement. Americans bought $292 million in bonds at the site in fiscal year 2001.

The Bureau of the Public Debt's Treasury Direct Electronic Services (TDES) allows individuals to directly manage their investments in the U.S. Treasury marketable securities using either the Internet or telephone. The system is an application that uses intelligent agents to automate various investor services, such as purchasing securities, reinvesting maturing securities, viewing account status, requesting account statements, as well as other similar services. TDES was implemented to promote self-sufficiency among Treasury Direct's 600,000 customers who hold some $77 billion in securities. The system facilitated Public Debt's consolidation of servicing sites from thirty-six Federal Reserve Banks to three. By using TDES, Public Debt has reduced the processing cost of a tender to $0.50 as opposed to $30.00 to process a paper tender in the past. Now, TDES accounts for 70 percent of all reinvestments and 40 percent of new sales. Investors purchased more than $8.7 billion in bills, notes and bonds in fiscal year 2001.

The Savings Bond Connection and the Treasury Direct Electronic Services are two highly secure E-Government applications that allow individual investors the option of establishing their accounts on-line, completing transactions to include the payment process, and accessing all account information.

The U.S. Mint operates the Online Store, a highly successful electronic commerce web site with an online catalog shopping service. The site offers Internet catalog browsing with mail and phone order capability as well as secure credit card sales. The U.S. Mints; Online Store is recognized as one of the top 20 "e-tailers" in the nation, with total web sales of more that $256 million during a twelve-month period. The Mint receives orders from customers located world-wide to electronically buy Mint products. The Mint also receives coin orders electronically from the Federal Reserve Banks (FRB). E-mails and electronic spreadsheets are used quarterly by the FRB to order coins for individual banks by denomination and amount.

The Electronic Federal Tax Payment System (EFTPS) provides an electronic system for reporting and paying Federal taxes. EFTPS is the largest payment collections system in the world. The Financial Management Service (FMS) and the Internal Revenue Service (IRS), working with the private sector, have modernized the federal tax payment environment. They started with the federal tax deposit coupon system then expanded to other business and individual tax payments. By replacing the current paper-based system, EFTPS benefits taxpayers and the Federal Government by providing greater reporting efficiencies and by expediting the availability of funds and investment decision-making information to the Treasury Department. The primary objectives for EFTPS are to reduce the filing burden by providing flexible payment choices for taxpayers; to increase the speed, efficiency, and accuracy of revenue collection and taxpayer account posting; and to expedite the availability of funds to the Government.

The Financial Management Service (FMS) Payment Application Modernization and Government-wide Accounting Modernization efforts include processes in the areas of payments, collections, government-wide accounting and debt management that, when made available in an electronic form, will provide individuals and other entitles that do business with FMS, the option to submit information or transact with FMS more efficiently and with improved customer service and satisfaction. Since the implementation of the electronic funds transfer (EFT) requirement of the Debt Collection improvement Act, the percentage of total Treasury disbursed payments made by EFT has risen to 73%. FMS Payment services touch the lives of over 100 million people. Literally tens of millions of Americans depend on FMS systems to meet lifeline needs every month. FMS makes almost 900 million payments annually on behalf of civilian agencies such as the Social Security Administration, Department of Veterans Affairs and the IRS. FMS also offsets certain payments against debt owed to the Federal Government. Payment modernization is one component of a multi-year effort to replace, streamline and reengineer the critical information systems that support core FMS business processes. The processes and systems used to account for and report on the execution of the President's Budget, and on the government's receipts, outlays and surplus or deficit, have not changed fundamentally for 30 years. However, there have been dramatic changes in the government's accounting environment. The Government-wide Accounting Modernization initiative will improve the reliability and timeliness of the government's financial information by providing better tools for federal program agencies to check the status of their financial information held by Treasury and by streamlining reporting and reconciliation processes.

These are just a few of the success stories we have in the Department. The task at hand now is to continue the growth of E-Government and to manage the transformation as a team across government. The task of managing investments across departments will be difficult but we now have an internal advocate within OMB. Mark Forman is a key member of the OMB staff. For the first time, we have a dedicated person within OMB, appointed by the administration, whose purpose is to help us manage citizen-focused investments and work across agency silos.

How does the Department of Treasury view EA in the context of improving its information infrastructure? How has EA been used to modernize the Department of Treasury's IT environments? As the managing agency partner on a number of e-government initiatives, how is EA being integrated into those tasks? Please discuss specifically the Wireless Public Safety Interoperable Communications-Project SAFECOM.

At the Department of the Treasury, we are using Enterprise Architecture to create a unified approach to business solutions. We are leveraging EA to align technology to the business needs to allow sound business decisions, including anticipating and mitigating risks and making IT more accountable to business management. We believe that business objectives must be well defined before initiating information technology solutions, and that total business value is the primary objective when making information technology decisions. We are focusing on interoperability of systems and integration of data requirements. The focus is on the commonality of customers, functions and business processes.

We have a Department Enterprise Architecture Working Group that reports directly to the CIO Council. Business processes and supporting "as-is" structures have been defines. The "to-be" architecture is developed. Consistent standards and products have been defined for common processes. New initiatives will adhere to the standards. The Enterprise Architecture working group continuously identifies opportunities for consolidating services, site licenses, and economies of scale for equipment and services.

Treasury has the lead on Project SAFECOM. The intent of Project SAFECOM is to accelerate the implementation of interoperable public safety wireless communications at all levels of government throughout the nation. The goals of the program are to save lives through immediate public safety communications and coordination. By addressing federal to federal, federal to state/local, and state to local interoperability we will be able to provide effective public safety and emergency support communications for not only emergency response situations, but also for daily operations and task force support for public safety agencies. We will use EA to identify interoperability requirements across all level of government, and to achieve interoperability solutions and cost savings through standardization, resource sharing, frequency spectrum management, and sharing of information between partners.

Treasury has a history of supporting the Federal EA effort and the Federal CIO Council. Treasury was a major contributor to several CIO Council EA documents. (Federal Enterprise Architecture Framework (FEAF), Version 1.1, September 1999; the Architecture Alignment and Assessment Guide (AAAG), October 2000; and A Practical Guide to Federal Enterprise Architecture, Chief Information Officer Council, Version 1.0, February, 2001). The last two documents are primarily based on the EA work that was done at Treasury's U.S. Customs bureau. Treasury will continue to support the E-government initiatives including the Federal CIO Council, OMB and Congressional efforts.

What recommendations can you make to the Subcommittee for future legislative initiatives that would facilitate cross-agency and inter-agency cooperation for simplifying and unifying redundant business architectures, particularly in support of e-government initiatives?

Any legislation considered should focus on improving the coordination and implementation of IT efforts across functional boundaries. Any legislation that would reduce the burden on citizens to provide information is a positive step. We must envision a government in an interconnected digital world. As a member of the Executive Committee of the Federal CIO Council I believe that many government programs that share common elements or information could be vastly improved with stronger authority to enforce interagency and intergovernmental cooperation. We need to tear down stovepipes and obsolete hierarchical structures. We don't have an architecture to support our lines of business. We have 478 lines of business with multiple departments supporting the same lines. In the past, the client server based technology presented barriers to the provision of services across agency boundaries and to the sharing of information across functional areas. Today, the Internet knows no such structures or boundaries. Today, technology can facilitate the interoperability. Technology can support the path to a citizen-centered government.

How do current budgetary practices and the appropriations process affect your ability to implement enterprise-wide architectures and eliminate redundant IT investments?

The appropriations process, coupled with a variety of budgetary practices, have provided the framework for federal agencies to implement a variety of enterprise solutions. OMB's October 25, 1996 memorandum, "Funding Information Systems Investments" (also known as "Raines Rules") establishes eight decision criteria OMB uses to evaluate all major information system investments proposed in the President's budget. These rules initiated fundamental changes in the management of IT resources and provided the underpinning in the promotion of enterprise solutions.

Legislative guidelines, such as the Clinger Cohen Act, further underscore the importance for the effective management of IT resources. This particular legislation allows the CIO to maximize his role in establishing enterprise approaches to fully exploit the advantages of Information Technology. Treasury's CIO leveraged this as the chair of the Treasury's CIO Council. The CIO council serves as the forum for recommending policies and standards for enterprise applications, products and services as well as promoting new technologies and IT opportunities. The council provides the voice of the customers across a range of IT management issues, including the evaluation of the effectiveness of bureau programs and the costs of services provided. The Capital Investment Review Board and the CXO Council provide the opportunity to regularly review investment plans to ensure the most cost effective solutions; emphasis is given to those utilizing enterprise solutions.

The next step is to take the capital planning process across agency boundaries and into citizen-centered investments. With the help of the Associate Director for IT and E-Government and the President's Management Council, we can do this. The key is teamwork not technology. The technology exists; the rest is up to us.

How is your agency identifying and implementing proper security and privacy policies for information systems, both overall and with respect to systems that will be used for E-government initiatives?

The Treasury CIO Council identified Security, Privacy and Critical Infrastructure Protection as a key initiative. With the onset of E-Government initiatives, the CIO Council felt that the Department must develop baseline requirements and policies. The Council established several committees with cross bureau representation to address security issues for the Department. Most of the committees are chaired by the Department's Director of Information Systems Security. Some committees have bureau

CIOs as chairs. Policies and practices are shared and implemented across the Department. Baselines are established for security and privacy with more extreme measures for the law enforcement and crime prevention entities. The committees have established enterprise performance metrics to ensure that effective security controls are developed for every major system or application within the Department. All major systems or applications are certified and accredited. We have also established a computer security incident response capability to coordinate Treasury efforts with appropriate external Computer Emergency Response Teams and to collect agency-wide information and disseminate relevant incident reports within Treasury. Periodic audits are performed by the Office of Information Security. The Treasury CIO Council approved and adopted the IRS's Security Assessment Framework as a standard for Treasury. The IRS framework has been recognized by the General Accounting Office as a best practice within the federal sector. Treasury has also developed a web-enabled and CD-ROM based agency-wide information security awareness course.

I would like to thank the subcommittee for the support it has given to E-Government. Without your support we would not have been able to achieve the national success we enjoy to date. Mr. Chairman, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you this morning. This concludes my formal remarks and I would be happy to respond to any questions.

LLOYD A. BLANCHARD

CHIEF OPERATING OFFICER

U.S. SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

BEFORE THE

SUBCOMMITTEE ON TECHNOLOGY AND PROCUREMENT POLICY

COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMMENT REFORM

UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MARCH 21, 2002

REV_00141876

Good afternoon, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee. Thank you for inviting the U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) to testify today about our role as a managing partner for creating the Business Compliance Assistance One Stop Initiative. I am prepared to discuss in general our views on the appropriate enterprise architecture to implement this effort and describe the basic goals and objectives of the initiative.

My name is Lloyd Blanchard and I am the Chief Operating Officer for SBA. Joining me is Larry Barrett, SBA's CIO, and Dr. Jim Van Wert, our Senior Advisor for Policy Planning and E-Gov and project manager for creating the Business Compliance Assistance One Stop. I joined SBA a little over two months ago with the express goal of implementing the President's Management Agenda at the SBA. One of the core elements of the Agenda is enhancing E-Government at the SBA.

The Administration's vision for E-Government coincides with ours at SBA; namely, "an order of magnitude improvement in customer service." E-Gov is all about improving citizen service and changing the way government and citizens interact. For SBA, it is primarily about changing how we do business and what we can offer our small business customers. In the case of the Business Compliance One Stop, it's about presenting a "single face of government" to businesses to help them reduce the burden of complying with laws and regulations.

E-Gov is also about creating partnerships with other government agencies and breaking down the silo mentality that currently pervades. Perhaps there is no more difficult task than collaborating across organizational boundaries to provide integrated services, breaking down the agency stovepipes, eliminating the culture of command and control and replacing it with collaboration. And as someone once said, "teaming" is the most unnatural human act known to mankind. Our challenge is to create appropriate incentives for all of us to "take off our agency hats" and put on a government-wide hat. E-Gov asks us to "unify and simplify" our processes to eliminate redundancy and re-engineer what we do, making government more accessible to its citizens.

Let me briefly describe how the right Enterprise Architecture can help us achieve our mission, describe the Business Compliance One Stop in more detail, and answer the questions contained in your letter dated March 7, 2002.

Enterprise Architecture

The IT architecture defines what data is collected and how it is processes. Roughly defined, the Enterprise Architecture (EA) is a framework that addresses how information is used. That is how we use it to achieve our mission of serving customers better, faster, and more cost effectively.

At the outset, I should say that we at SBA are only beginning to define our enterprise architecture to implement the goals of the Business Compliance One Stop.

At the core of all the E-Gov initiatives is cross-agency (and perhaps intergovernmental) service delivery. Collaboration among agencies with a vested interest in a particular federal segment, such as regulatory compliance or licensing and permitting, will result in increased efficiency and economies of scale, not to mention reduced cost for the business customer, who can access government services more easily, cost effectively, anytime, anyplace.

It is critical to develop the right EA for this initiative. The use of an appropriate EA in a cross-agency initiative promotes development of shared common Federal processes, interoperability, and sharing of information across entities. The Business Compliance One Stop functions are government-wide and multi-agency in nature, as well as intergovernmental. Without uniform standards and structures, information and data formatting, technology, and delivery systems, we will not be able to build robust, open, interoperable, and scalable portals.

Business Compliance One-Stop Funding and Governance

The Business Compliance Assistance One Stop initiative is one of the 24 highest priority cross-agency Presidential E-Gov initiatives approved by the President's Management Council last October.

Small businesses tell us repeatedly that one of their major concerns is reducing the burden of laws and regulations. In 2000, SBA's Office of Advocacy estimated that complying with laws and regulations cost small firms nearly a half a trillion dollars, or $7,000 per employee for firms with less than 20 employees. While there are a myriad of laws and regulations that affect business at all levels of government, few compliance assistance tools and almost no capability of licensing and permitting online exists. The average business needs to apply for and receive approximately 10-15 licenses and permits, many of them from the state and local government level. With these needs in mind, we are building this Business Compliance Assistance One-Stop to make it easier for small businesses to find, understand, and comply with the laws and regulations at all levels of government.

Comment [MKB1]:

OMB has established a non-traditional budgeting and governance structure for these cross agency projects. Each managing partner is requesting funding for all elements of the project, whether it is part of the traditional core functions of that agency or not. This project is no exception.

Like other managing partners, SBA is asking for the funding to support program activities of the 8 participating agencies and other levels of government. For example, even though SBA does not normally fund compliance assistance tools, the Compliance One Stop will provide the resources and architecture for OSHA's development of a tool for businesses to learn how to evacuate a building in the event of a terrorist attack or disaster event. We will do the same for another 25 digital guides in the environment, workplace health and safety, employment and taxation areas, integrating each part into one portal.

This project will also support a prototype of a transaction engine that can be used by local, state, and federal agencies in providing certain licenses and permits. These are not traditional line items in an SBA budget, but clearly creating these tools support our statutory mission of helping small businesses succeed—by eliminating one of the most important impediments to their success. SBA is not a regulatory agency and does not traditionally include in its budget funds for creating easier access to laws and regulations, compliance assistance tools, and online licensing and permitting. Neither do we normally fund intergovernmental efforts. Yet, as managing partner for the Business Compliance effort, SBA represents the business customer, who wants a "single face of government" with whom to do business.

REV_00141878

Business Compliance Project Management and Oversight

Both SBA and OMB are taking extraordinary steps to manage and exercise oversight over this project to deliver within 24 months value-added service to American business owners.

SBA management and oversight structure. As you know, SBA hired me as Chief Operating Officer (COO) to manage and coordinate the work of the CFO, CIO, and the new office of E-Government. SBA agreed with OMB's recommendation and created the Office of E-Government, directed by an SES who reports directly to me with successful achievement of project deliverables as part of the position's performance criteria. The office will include two GS 15s as well as an "as needed" IT professional, a content and configuration manager, and an administrative staff. This office will not only manage the Business Compliance One Stop, but will develop SBA's E-Gov policy and coordinate SBA's participation in the other E-gov initiatives. These include Federal Asset Sales, E-loans, Disaster.gov, Integrated acquisition portal, Streamlined international trade, Electronic tax tools for business, Online eligibility assistance, and online rule making.

The project manager submits weekly activity status reports and meets regularly with me to describe project plans, identify milestones and deliverables, and report on progress as part of the Agency's performance monitoring and managing for results. The business case also calls for contracting for a management specialist to manage and oversee project plans and expenditures. The E-Gov office will also hire a validation and verification contractor and a content and configuration manager to ensure that the project is meeting its milestones and that there is full documentation of ongoing efforts.

OMB oversight governance structure. OMB's Associate Director for Information and Technology and E-Government (ADITEG), Mark Forman, has created a top-down governance structure that reports to the leadership of the President's Management Council, which holds him accountable for delivery of the President's E-Gov agenda. Cascading transparency and accountability downward, Mr. Forman is using portfolio managers, steering committees, and individual project managers to implement the 24 project managers in each of the managing partner agencies. He is requiring each project manager to build business cases with goals, objectives, milestones, and costs and a series of "checks and balances" to hold these managers accountable.

Procedurally, OMB reviews the progress of each project on a monthly basis and briefs the President's Management Council (PMC) quarterly on the status of all the efforts and requests PMC members assistance, when appropriate, to ensure the projects meet goals and objectives. Mr. Forman has stated he will also terminate or restructure individual projects when they do not achieve a reasonable return-on-investment.

To help Mr. Forman oversee the efforts, each customer segment has a portfolio manager who meets weekly with the project manager to guide, assist, and manage the individual project managers. The portfolio manager for the G2B segment is Tad Anderson. In addition to providing Mr. Forman a monthly status of the overall program achievement, cost, schedule and performance goals, Mr. Anderson will convene at least quarterly meetings with the individual project managers and OMB to discuss project status. The Portfolio manager is responsible for ensuring that the e-government program achieves, on average, at least 90 percent of the approved project cost, schedule and performance goals.

For still another level of oversight, OMB has established four Steering Committees (SC) composed of Chief Information Officers, Chief Financial Officers, Procurement Executives, Budget Officers Advisory, and Human Resources Councils, and with other advisors and users. Their goal is to meet monthly with the portfolio manager and project manager to advise and assist project teams in achieving the objectives expected within the budget limits.

Business Compliance One Stop Business Case

As stated earlier, OMB requires each project manager to develop a detailed business case that describes the value proposition (costs and benefits both to the clients and to the government), modular development approach, milestones and proposed deliverables, timeframes and costs (as required by the Clinger-Cohen Act). The business case also includes a description of the proposed enterprise architecture, which includes a discussion of the business needs and rules, information architecture, systems applications, data structure, and technology delivery systems. Our business case, summarized below, currently exceeds 40 pages and continues to be revised.

Problem. The cost of complying with laws and regulations is too burdensome for American businesses. SBA's Office of Advocacy estimates that the regulatory burden on citizens is more than $800 billion, with nearly $500 billion borne by small businesses in 2000. This translates to roughly $7000 per employee in firms with less than 20 employees. The volume of existing laws, expense of finding nearly inaccessible information, multi-jurisdictional systems, and lack of smart online tools contribute to this overwhelming cost.

Solution. Businesses need a single point of access – a "single face of government" -- to the applicable laws and regulations that affect them. They also need tools to help them know if they are in compliance with the law, and a one-stop that offers them an opportunity to conduct transactions. Because of the growing number of businesses with Internet access (67 percent of all firms with employees in early 2001), the Web is currently the most viable delivery channel for these services. A one-stop compliance site will significantly reduce the time needed to find, understand, and comply with the legal and regulatory burdens facing them. For these reasons, OMB selected the Business Compliance One-Stop as one of 24 approved Administration E-Gov projects.

Project Goal

- Make it easy for business to find, understand, and comply with pertinent laws and regulations at all levels of government.

Functionality

- Enable quick access to laws and regulations. Site users can access appropriate laws and regulations in three clicks or less.
- Provide Compliance Assessment Aids. Online tools can help businesses determine what laws and regulations apply to them and whether they are in compliance. More importantly, what to do and where to go to achieve compliance status.

REV_00141880

- Perform online transactions. Businesses will register online at the state level and apply and receive selected licenses and permitting at all three government levels.

Objectives

- Improve customer service by providing a single access point to business laws and regulations, licenses and permits, compliance assistance tools and hands-on help.
- Further establish results-driven government by building the site in less than two years.
- Create a market-based government by using public-private partnerships (e.g., lawyers from every state, laws schools, Martindale-Hubbell) to build the site, relying on industry best practices and solutions (e.g., UK Gateway, Washington and Illinois online transactions).
- Expand outreach to small businesses by helping up to 25 million businesses, plus countless individual citizens find, understand, and comply with laws and regulations.
- Build effective partnerships by building horizontally integrated tools across the federal level and vertically integrated tools to help individual business industries (sectors).
- Compile and employ best practices learned in the building of the recently launched BusinessLaw.gov and existing online compliance guides built by other agencies.

Results

- Save businesses time and money by reducing the legal and regulatory burden.
- Increase business compliance, thereby reducing costs for enforcement/compliance activities.
- Transform the way the federal government works by using technology to offer e-business solutions.
- Make the Federal government more accessible to its citizens.

Governance Structure/Participating Partners

- As the managing partner for this project, SBA will perform project management, develop the enterprise architecture, and find private sector consultants to develop modules for the project, (e.g., permitting, compliance guides, and interactive tools) and oversee the effort (e.g., Microsoft, Accenture, Consad Research)
- Participating partners include EPA, DOL, OSHA, GSA, IRS, DOT, DOE, DOI, INS, Trade Associations and selected State CIOs (e.g., Washington, Illinois, New Jersey Mississippi).

Approach. The initiative will incorporate best practices from the private sector to build this tool. We will build upon the experience gained in the construction of the gateway and transaction engine in the United Kingdom (e.g., cross-agency permitting). We will also use private sector best practices for knowledge management -- (i.e., individualized packaging of information to offer quick access to the right information for appropriate solutions). We will focus on improved navigation, personalization, expert tools, and interactive problem solving.

In particular, we will begin by targeting several industries, i.e., restaurants, truckers, convenience stores and gas and oil companies, across 4 functional areas, i.e., environment, workplace health and safety, employment and taxation. Through prototypes and pilots , we will enable a business in these sectors to register its business, get a tax id number, apply for a building permit, receive electronically an employer identification number, and get a permit to use federal lands.

While better portal capability and consolidation of information is needed, the one-stop compliance site needs to provide real solutions to business problems within a local context in a minimal amount of time. Rules-based software, XML and other Web-based technologies make it possible to create a site that is both horizontally and vertically integrated to meet these needs.

Short Term Deliverables

- Pilot Portal Maximizer (July 2002 -- $225,000). By purchasing this software, the project manager will have an automatic and intelligent information management capability to index, categorize, and universally link business users to both new and existing legal and regulatory content across all 50 states. In the next 30 days, we will pilot the software on BusinessLaw.gov (over 20,000 links to federal, state and local content); evaluate and user test over the next 60 days; and add new content, categorizing it by theme over the final 30 days.

- Legal and Regulatory Digital Guides (August 2002 -- $240,000). We will create and test for launching four digital guides that help reduce the burden of laws and regulations on business owners, which may include the following:

    - Working with INS, we will develop an expert tool to assist restaurant owners understand and comply with applicable employer-based immigration statutes and regulations.
    - Working with OSHA, we will also develop a record keeping and building evacuation expert tools.
    - Working with DOT Motor Carrier Safety Administration, we will create an expert tool for truckers to find, understand, and comply with transportation laws and regulations.
    - Working with Martindale-Hubbell (Lexis-Nexus), we will build tools to help small businesses identify legal issue that require expert help and where to go to find an attorney.

- Business Registry-state and Federal Licensing (August 2002 -- $275,000). Working with Washington State and IRS, we will build upon the proof of concept work done by GSA to prototype a single application that satisfies business licensing and tax id requirements (state licensing and IRS Internet EIN. Working with Illinois, we will create a prototype truckers' one-stop that incorporates federal and state DOT regulations and online licenses and permits.

Funding. SBA estimates it will cost $1,040,000 in FY 2002 and $5,000,000 in FY 2003 to develop this Business Compliance One-Stop. With the funding, SBA will build upon its legal and regulatory assistance site, BusinessLaw.gov, to create an intergovernmental portal that does three things: offer small firms access to governmental laws and regulations that impact them, provide compliance assistance digital tools, and offer online licensing and permitting. With funding in FY 2002, we will create a new office of E-Gov, build compliance assistance content, and buy software that registers existing content by theme and facilitates site content management. It will also permit us to prototype/buy a transaction engine to do the secure licensing and support work in several states working through the National Governor's Association.

Mr. Chairman, I will now address the questions you included in your invitation to testify that deal with having the right enterprise architecture.

How SBA avoids redundant information systems

The SBA organizational structure does not have autonomous bureaus and departments, which greatly reduces the occurrence of traditional issues involved in standardization of systems for agency-wide functions (i.e., payroll, personnel, accounting, travel, etc.). SBA has centralized management of information resources in the Office of the Chief Information Officer (OCIO). OCIO, originally the Office of Information Resources Management, has proactively sought to standardize and minimize redundancy of technologies and systems since the advent of desktop computing. These efforts have included standardization of hardware and software for the desk tops, local area (LAN) and wide area (WAN) networks, e-mail, and system development tools including relational databases, programming languages and tools, security, and communications protocols.

SBA's Enterprise Architecture connects information use and needs to information provided by the IT infrastructure. Using these cross walks as a guide, information technology (IT) decision makers, including the IT investment council, can easily identify information systems that are candidates for enterprise-wide implementation.

Comment [MKB2]:

Comment [MKB3]:

SBA believes that its EA offers tangible benefits to the Agency and those responsible for evolving the enterprise. SBA has used the EA to:

- Improve communication among the business organizations and IT organizations within the enterprise through a standardized vocabulary
- Provide architectural views that help communicate the complexity of large systems and facilitate management of extensive, complex environments
- Focus on the strategic use of emerging technologies to better manage the enterprise's information and consistently insert those technologies into the enterprise
- Improve consistency, accuracy, timeliness, integrity, quality, availability, access and sharing of IT-managed information across the enterprise
- Support the IT investment process by providing a tool for assessment of benefits, impacts, and capital investment measurements and supporting analyses of alternatives, risks, and tradeoffs.

Under the aegis of the Business Compliance Assistance One Stop, the project team will follow the principles of unify and simplify, using industry best practices, reducing redundancy and re-engineering processes where appropriate. For instance, we will pilot the use of a COTS package that aggregates information across all 50 states, automating the content building function. We will also prototype the use of a transaction engine that permits the user to access modules for forms entry, validation and verification, and online transactions. Each state will be able to modify the business rules and still use the proposed software. For compliance assistance, we plan to use a variety of approaches including benchmarking, expert tools, tutorials, and online call centers to help the business comply with the pertinent laws and regulations. Although the rules, forms, and security requirements will differ from regulation to regulation, our approach will include XML-P to access information (in a variety of formats) across agencies to deliver a "single face of government" to the business user.

REV_00141884

SBA eliminates redundant IT investments

Unlike larger agencies, SBA does not have multiple bureaus with unique appropriations sources. This simplifies budget execution and makes SBA's IT expenditures more visible. Because there are few funding sources, opportunities for duplicate investments are reduced. For the cross agency Business Compliance One-Stop, SBA is requesting the entire funding in its budget, which will minimize the chances of redundant systems being developed by the participating agencies.

In accordance with the Clinger-Cohen Act and implementing guidance from OMB, all of SBA's major IT investments are subject to planning and review -- including acquisition reviews -- that should detect any potential duplicate investment before it can be implemented. SBA has been moving aggressively toward capturing 100 percent of its planned and actual IT expenditures during budget formulation and in accordance with published OMB guidance (Circulars A-11 and A-130). We believe that adhering to a regimen of solid IT capital planning will prevent the likelihood of duplicative investments among IT projects across the Agency.

SBA introduces strong security and privacy policies

Over the past two years, SBA has revised its IT security program. SBA uses IT security standards, policies, procedures, and guidelines developed by the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) as the basis for the IT security program. We also use portions of the General Accounting Office Federal Information Security Controls Audit Manual (FISCAM) as a guide in developing information security controls. Finally, we rely on current industry best practices in the development of security policies and use of cutting edge technology.

Protection of business transactions conducted over the Internet has been a primary concern as SBA has introduced web enabled business transactions. To ensure data integrity of these business transactions, SBA requires high level encryption of all transactions and authentication of systems users to gain access to the web systems. SBA has also conducted penetration testing with an independent consultant to identify and correct potential weaknesses. The OCIO conducts periodic on site security reviews of SBA's offices and remote computing facilities as well. Ultimately, the Agency will be in compliance with the standards and guidelines developed by GSA under the cross-agency E-authentication effort.

SBA provides benefits through its enterprise-wide infrastructure initiatives

SBA has made significant strides in implementing an open systems technology environment, one which supports interoperability of technologies and systems both within SBA and with external entities. SBA has been a government leader in conducting business via the Internet. These activities include many web enabled business transactions such as registration in Pro-Net and HubZones, which will soon include an entirely electronic application and self-certification process. The technology we use includes relational databases, supporting easier data sharing and data access, industry accepted communications protocols that support interoperability between disparate computer platforms, and XML based file transfer formats.

REV_00141885

SBA's open systems environment, as with every federal agency, is an important part of the federal infrastructure necessary to support federal e-government initiatives. Technology environments that support interoperability between agencies and between the government and businesses will require minimal changes as e-government initiatives are implemented.

Prototyping a transaction engine that uses XML and offers modules that is based on forms-driven inquiries, validation and verification against a database, and secure transactions will expand the utility of the Business Compliance One Stop to all users. The software allows each piece of the system to use different forms and business rules at the user interface with a standardized set of processes for conducting the electronic licensing and permitting. Using this "off the shelf" approach and piloting the Portal Maximizer will provide significant savings to state and local governments reduce cost to businesses by permitting online transactions, and reduce compliance and enforcement costs for regulatory agencies who use the templates to build the digital compliance assistance guides.

The impact of the Internet can only grow among small businesses. This is reinforced by an August 2001 study by NFIB stating that 57 percent of all employers use the Internet for business-related activities. Of those using the Internet, 87 percent use it to gather business information. One third of those not presently using the Internet intend to begin using it within the next year. To the degree that businesses can inform themselves as a result of aggressive implementation of compliance assistance, taking advantage of the Internet to broadly distribute information, an agency can focus its scarce resources on addressing companies that disregard the value of community, employee health and safety, and environmental protection.

SBA is addressing enterprise architecture issues

SBA is confronted by a number of technical issues that need to be addressed to successfully implement the Business Compliance One Stop. One major issue is developing a cross-agency platform without having to dictate the databases and applications that Federal and state and local agencies use. This platform must be interoperable with existing technologies but also provide the web services infrastructure that minimizes system development. It must be open, secure, and provide maximum flexibility for participating agencies.

The Internet and its associated protocols such as HTTP (Hyper Text Transport Protocol) whether used openly, or through a Virtual Private Network, has become the fundamental underlying transport system for E-government. XML (Extended Markup Language) is a way of tagging data that can be transported over HTTP and is easily handled by applications. The data structure can change without having to change the consuming application. Key architecture design issues include linking to transaction sites versus containing a transaction engine, uploading and downloading data across platforms, creating common forms that have multiple uses, providing content, and "value network integration."

Using the portal model, organizations can provide aggregated and customized services as well as information to people in the subject areas that are of interest to them with technology that is available now. With this kind of a framework for E-government, organizations can build a secure, dynamic web presence with personalization, content management, analytics, and search capabilities for anytime, anywhere access. Additionally, the framework can assist other government agencies to reduce their operating costs and provide citizen and business services with rich transaction capabilities while at the same time providing government with data mining tools to understand salient citizen and business trends in demands and usage and measure key performance indicators.. Examples of this include on-line processing, not just forms, for change of address, wage and tax filings, and business registrations.

Another major issue is providing navigational tools to make it possible for the user to arrive at desired information or have problem-solving capability with as few clicks as possible. This means providing advanced search engines that can handle "affinities or fuzzy sets," intelligent FAQs, using an optional profiler to characterize the user and what he is looking for, and business rule driven wizards to aid in the search process. If possible, the software should simplify navigation with context dependent aids to prompt the user on where to proceed.

Conclusion

The overall goal of the Administration's E-Government initiative is to use technology as a driver for change. Using the Internet to deliver service from multiple agencies and various levels of government offers the business owner more accessibility, more timely and reliable information, more cost-effective and personalized service, and enables citizens to hold government accountable. The technology also permits the delivery of service across organizations, a key transformation from the "turf" consciousness of traditional government to strategic alliances in collaborative government. The technology also permits us to evaluate and learn from those leading this change, allowing rapid development and implementation of innovation and creativity. Unifying and simplifying our delivery of needed citizen service results in a more cost effective government that is citizen-centered, market-based, and results-driven. With leadership, resources, the right industry partners, and a little time, we can transform our public institutions. This is what the Congress asks, the President demands, the Citizen expects, and we intend to provide.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you here today. I will be happy to answer your questions.

Reagan Presidential Records Released to Public

By Robert Jablon
Associated Press Writer
Friday, March 15, 2002; 5:17 PM

SIMI VALLEY, Calif.) Nearly 60,000 pages of documents of Ronald Reagan's presidential records, from cabinet meeting minutes to policy memos, were opened to the public Friday.

Among papers, which had been withheld for years, is a Nov. 8, 1985, memo in which the administration expressed concerned about congressional criticism for dragging its feet on anti-terrorism policies.

"I see real trouble brewing here," according to the memo from Ed Fox to Alan M. Kranowitz, a fellow member of the White House office of legislative affairs and assistant to the president on House affairs.

The previous month, Palestinian terrorists had hijacked the Italian cruise ship Achille Lauro, shot U.S. citizen Leon Klinghoffer in his wheelchair and threw his body into the Mediterranean. Four of the hijackers were later captured when U.S. warplanes intercepted an airline flight they were aboard and forced it to land in Sicily "If the PLO nuts or anyone else retaliates for our intercept of their buddies from Egypt, the President will be the target of attack by a bipartisan Congress," the 1985 memo said. "As they seek to avoid responsibility they will ask why the Administration did not move to protect our sons and daughters abroad who are risking their lives in the service of our country."

The memo apparently involved strengthening U.S. embassies and facilities abroad.

The 59,850 pages of documents had been kept closed by law for 12 years because they contain confidential internal advice and deliberations among government officials.

The papers range from cabinet meeting minutes to memos on policies for issues such as air pollution and civil rights. They follow the opening earlier this year of some 8,000 pages.

The documents released Friday often lack full references or context, and have yet to be assessed by researchers for importance in the history of the Reagan White House or relevance to subsequent administrations.

Just a few people were there when they were made available Friday in the research section of the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library.

"For the first time we are releasing confidential advice," said Duke Blackwood, the library director. "I think it gives the public another inside look at how decision-making in the administration worked. And that is very important."

Still sealed are 150 pages of Reagan papers and tens of thousands of pages left behind by former Vice President George Bush. Those documents are under review by the White House or have not been scheduled for release.

TALKING POINTS ON REQUEST FOR GOVERNOR RIDGE TO TESTIFY

This is not a dispute about withholding information from Congress. The Administration has kept Congress extremely well informed about all aspects of homeland security. Administration witnesses, including the Secretary of Defense and the Attorney General, have repeatedly testified before Congress on these matters, or given members of Congress full briefings.

Governor Ridge himself has been open to Congress and repeatedly spoken with both leadership and members about his mission. In fact he recently met with the Senate caucuses of both parties over lunch. He has met with members of Congress at the White House an elsewhere.

Attempts by the White House to negotiate a satisfactory resolution to this dispute have been rebuffed by Senator Byrd. Senator Byrd has simply refused to deal with the Administration.

The principle that the President's closest advisers cannot be forced to testify before Congress rests upon constitutional bedrock. It is an essential part of the Constitution's separation of powers. Administrations of both parties have held fast to this principle for fifty years. For example, Attorney General Reno advised President Clinton that one close presidential adviser, the Counsel to the President, could not be forced to testify before Congress about President Clinton's decision to pardon a group of sixteen convicted individuals.

[Accommodation: The Administration wants to cooperate with Congress without compromising an important constitutional principle. We are seeking ways to meet any legitimate Congressional need for information from Governor Ridge with the President's need to be able to receive confidential advice.]

TALKING POINTS

- The long-standing position of Presidents of both parties -- a position long accepted by Congress out of respect for the Presidency -- is that members of the President's White House staff do not testify before congressional committees on policy matters.

    - This long-standing practice applies to close Presidential advisors such as the Chief of Staff, Counsel, National Security Advisor, and other immediate advisors such as Governor Ridge. [The exceptions that have occurred primarily involved congressional investigations of personal or other wrongdoing rather than congressional inquiry into Administration policy.]

    - For example, Attorney General Reno advised President Clinton that one close presidential adviser, the Counsel to the President, could not be forced to testify before Congress about President Clinton's decision to pardon 16 individuals.

- The long-standing Executive Branch position on testimony by White House advisors does not in any way prevent Congress from accessing the information it needs. Congress can obtain the relevant information through formal testimony by Cabinet officials or through informal briefings.

- On homeland security, the Administration has provided Congress an extraordinary amount of information to ensure that Congress has the information it needs to perform its constitutional functions.

    - Administration witnesses, including the Secretary of Defense, the Attorney General, the Director of the FBI, and the Director of FEMA, have repeatedly testified before Congress on these matters, or given members of Congress full briefings.

    - Governor Ridge himself has been open to Congress and repeatedly spoken to Members about his mission.

Subject: LRM IKK175 - - TREASURY Revised Draft Bill on Department of the Treasury Corrections Day Act of 2001

Attached is a revised Treasury draft bill, which according to Treasury would make technical amendments to various laws that affect operations of the Treasury Department. Attached for your review are: (1) a transmittal letter; (2) draft legislation; and (3) a section-by-section analysis. The revised draft bill includes one new section (section 801 at the end), which would allow the Treasury to obtain silver for minting the American Eagle silver bullion dollar from any available source when the stockpiles established under the Strategic and Critical Minerals Stock Piling Act are depleted. However, the revised bill does not include a section on use of proceeds from certain investigations (section 104 in the previously circulated bill, see IKK133). Please review and provide comments by 12:00 PM, Monday, March 25th.

The Honorable Dave Camp
Chairman, Corrections Day Advisory Group
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Camp:

This responds to your letter of July 12, 2001, to the Secretary of the Treasury soliciting recommendations for the Corrections Day Calender. Please find enclosed a draft bill, the "Department of the Treasury Corrections Day Act of 2002."

The draft bill includes provisions that are designed to improve the Department's programs and operations involving law enforcement, government securities, financial management and debt collection, financial institutions, the District of Columbia retirement funds, and coinage. Other proposals in the draft bill would eliminate or streamline a wide range of reporting requirements currently required by law.

The Department believes that many of the proposals contained in the draft bill would be appropriate for consideration under the Corrections Day Calendar. The Department of the Treasury looks forward to working with the Advisory Group to enact these provisions.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection from the standpoint of the Administration's program to the submission of the draft bill to the Congress.

Sincerely,

Enclosures

A BILL

To improve the operations of the Department of the Treasury, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Department of the Treasury Corrections Day Act of 2002".

TITLE VII – DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA RETIREMENT FUNDS

TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

SEC. 701. ABOLISHMENT OF THE FEDERAL SUPPLEMENTAL DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA PENSION FUND AND TRANSFER OF

ITS ASSETS TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FEDERAL PENSION LIABILITY TRUST FUND.

(a) Effective October 1, 2002, the Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer all assets of the Federal Supplemental Fund established by section 11051 of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, as amended, to the District of Columbia Federal Pension Liability Trust Fund established by section 11031 of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, as amended.

(b) Assets transferred to the District of Columbia Federal Pension Liability Trust Fund pursuant to subsection (a) need not be identified separately on the books of the Treasury.

(c) Sections 11051 through 11055 of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, as amended, are repealed effective upon the transfer of all assets of the Federal Supplemental Fund pursuant to subsection (a).

(d) (1) Section 11031 of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, as amended, is further amended--

(A) by amending subsection (a) to read as follows:

"(a) Establishment.--There is established on the books of the Treasury the District of Columbia Federal Pension Liability Trust Fund, consisting of the assets transferred pursuant to section 11033, the assets transferred from the Federal Supplemental District of Columbia Pension Fund pursuant to section 701(a) of the Department of the Treasury Corrections Day Act of 2001, amounts deposited into the Fund under the provisions of subsection (b), any amounts otherwise appropriated to the Fund, and any income earned on the investment of the assets of the Fund pursuant to subsection (c).";

(B) by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c) and inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b) Determination of Annual Federal Payment into the Trust Fund.--

"(1) At the end of each fiscal year the Secretary shall promptly pay into the Trust Fund from the General Fund of the Treasury an amount equal to the annual amortization amount for the year (which may not be less than zero).

"(2) During each fiscal year beginning in fiscal year 2008, the Secretary shall pay into the Trust Fund from the General Fund of the Treasury amounts not to exceed--

"(A) the reasonable and necessary administrative expenses incurred by the Secretary in carrying out the Secretary's responsibilities under this subtitle in accordance with section 11032; and

"(B) the administrative expenses of the District Government during or after the period of interim administration as are deemed appropriate by the Secretary or the Trustee in accordance with section 11041(b).

"(3) For purposes of this section:

"(A) The term `original unfunded liability` means the difference between the present value of future Federal benefit payments as of the effective date of this Act and the assets of the Trust Fund as of the effective date of this Act.

"(B) The term `annual amortization amount` means the amount determined by the enrolled actuary to be necessary to amortize in equal annual installments (until fully amortized)--

"(i) the original unfunded liability over a 30-year period;

"(ii) a net experience gain or loss over a 10-year period; and

"(iii) any other changes in actuarial liability over a 20-year period.

"(4) The first applicable fiscal year under paragraph (1) is the first fiscal year that ends more than six months after the replacement plan adoption date.

"(5) The Secretary shall provide for the keeping of such records as are necessary for determining the actuarial status of the Trust Fund."; and

(C) by amending subsection (c), as redesignated, to read as follows:

"(c) Investment of Assets.--The Secretary of the Treasury shall invest such portion of the assets of the Trust Fund as is not in the judgment of the Secretary required to meet current withdrawals. Such investments shall be in public debt securities with maturities suitable to the needs of the Trust Fund, as determined by the Secretary, and bearing interest at rates determined by the Secretary, taking into consideration current market yields on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities.".

(2) Section 11032(a) of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, as amended, is further amended--

(A) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (3); and

(B) by redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (5) and inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) for the accumulation of funds in order to finance obligations of the Federal Government for future benefits; and".

(3) The amendments made by this subsection shall become effective upon the transfer of all assets of the Federal Supplemental Fund pursuant to subsection (a).

SEC. 702. CLERICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall become effective upon the transfer of all assets of the Federal Supplemental Fund pursuant to section 701(a).

TITLE VIII – COINAGE TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

SEC. 801. ACQUISITION OF SILVER.

Section 5116(b)(2) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by striking the period at the end of the second sentence and inserting the following: ", except that the Secretary may obtain such silver by purchase from any available source at such time as the stockpiles are depleted.".

Department of the Treasury Corrections Day Act of 2002

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

TITLE I – LAW ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 101. FLEXIBLE PENALTIES FOR VIOLATIONS OF THE GUN CONTROL ACT.

Under current law, the only available administrative remedies to deal with violations by firearms licensees are the extreme measures of denying license renewal applications and license revocation. Violations of the Gun Control Act such as the failure to timely record information in required records, that may not warrant license revocation or denial. This amendment provides new administrative sanctions, less severe than current administrative remedies, including license suspension, civil money penalties, and authority to accept offers in compromise of violations of the law and regulations. This amendment also clarifies that these administrative sanctions may be imposed for violation of any regulation issued under the Gun Control Act, including regulations issued by the Attorney General governing the National Instant Criminal Background Check System.

SEC. 102. AMENDMENTS CONCERNING NONIMMIGRANT ALIEN PROHIBITIONS IN THE GUN CONTROL ACT.

The Gun Control Act of 1968 (GCA) was amended in 1998 with the intent of prohibiting nonimmigrant aliens from shipping, transporting, receiving, or possessing firearms. As enacted, however, the prohibition applies only to aliens "who have been admitted to the United States under a nonimmigrant visa (as defined in section 101(a)(26) of the Immigration and Nationality Act)." This language is deficient because aliens with nonimmigrant visas are not admitted "under" the visa, which merely expedites admission to the United States by showing that the State Department found the individual to be admissible. Moreover, only about 50 percent of nonimmigrant aliens need a nonimmigrant visa to enter the United States; other nonimmigrant aliens fall within various categories that are statutorily exempt from needing a nonimmigrant visa.

Subsection (a) effectively fulfills the congressional intent of 1998 amendment by clarifying that, with the limited exceptions discussed below, all aliens admitted in a nonimmigrant classification are prohibited from shipping, transporting, receiving, or possessing firearms.

The current prohibition does not contain an exception for nonimmigrant aliens who temporarily enter the United States to engage in commercial firearms activities (such as attendance at trade shows, working for U.S. subsidiaries of foreign firearms manufacturers and importers, and enrollment in gunsmithing schools) within the scope of their nonimmigrant classification. Nor does the prohibition contain an exception for nonimmigrant aliens who are officers or directors of foreign firearms or ammunition corporations with operations in the United States. None of these activities has raised any law enforcement concerns.

Subsection (b) establishes limited exceptions from the prohibition for nonimmigrant aliens (1) who temporarily enter the United States to engage in commercial firearms activities within the scope of their nonimmigrant classification or (2) who are officers or directors of foreign firearms or ammunition corporations with operations in the United States.

SEC. 103. AMENDMENTS TO SEIZURE AND FORFEITURE AUTHORITY.

This section amends the Gun Control Act (GCA), the Contraband Cigarette Trafficking Act (CCTA) and the explosives laws to clarify that the procedural requirements of the Civil Asset Forfeiture Reform Act of 2000 (CAFRA) govern these forfeitures.

The forfeiture provisions of the GCA, CCTA, and the explosives laws currently contain obsolete references to the procedural provisions of the Internal Revenue Code (IRC). In 1992, Congress enacted the Treasury Forfeiture Fund Statute (31 U.S.C. 9703). Section 9703 (o) provides that "the provisions of law relating to . . . the seizure, summary and judicial forfeiture, and condemnation of property for violation of Customs laws . . . shall apply to seizures and forfeitures incurred . . . under any applicable law enforced or administered by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms." It has been the legal position of the United States that section 9703(o) repealed by implication the language in these three forfeiture statutes that incorporates the IRC, and that the Customs laws (19 U.S.C. 1602-1621), not the IRC, govern all procedural issues in ATF forfeitures.

The enactment of CAFRA was intended to harmonize the procedural requirements for all administrative and civil judicial forfeitures by the United States under title 18 of the U.S. Code. See 18 U.S.C. 983(i); 146 Cong.Rec. S1753-02 (March 27,2000). CAFRA, however, included no specific language that repealed the nonconforming and obsolete language in the GCA, CCTA, or explosives laws. Accordingly, this section clarifies that CAFRA governs the procedural requirements for forfeitures under these laws, repeals the GCA requirement that forfeiture actions be commenced within 120 days of seizure in favor of CAFRA's 60-day deadline, and repeals the GCA provisions concerning attorneys fees in favor of the attorney fee provisions enacted by CAFRA.

This section also makes it clear that the current restrictions on the sale of firearms forfeited pursuant to the GCA remain in place.

This section also amends the explosives laws to provide for the forfeiture of property used or intended to be used in violation of the explosives laws. Current authority allows for the forfeiture of explosives materials and real or personal property that constitutes (or is derived from) proceeds traceable to violations of 18 U.S.C. 842 and 844. This amendment permits the forfeiture of bomb-making factories, the equipment used to manufacture illegal explosives, and items in the manufacturing stage that are substantially connected to a violation of section 842 or 844. This is consistent with the narcotics laws, which subject to forfeiture any property "used, or intended to be used, in any manner or part, to commit, or to facilitate the commission of" violations of those laws.

This section also amends 18 U.S.C. 492 to conform to the CAFRA provision. Section 492 has provided for the civil forfeiture of counterfeiting paraphernalia since 1909 and was last amended in 1938. This amendment will bring section 492 up to date and in conformance with modern civil forfeiture statutes by cross-referencing procedures pertaining to administrative forfeitures in the Customs laws and sections 981-987 of title 18, United States Code.

SEC. 104. DELETED; FOLLOWING SECTIONS TO BE RENUMBERED.

SEC. 105. CLARIFICATION OF NATURE OF PAYMENTS TO INFORMANTS.

This section makes a technical amendment to clarify that the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury under the Customs laws to make payments to informants is discretionary, and does not establish any right for a person to receive such payments that is legally enforceable.

SEC. 106. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS CONCERNING THE IMPORTATION OF TOBACCO PRODUCTS.

This section makes two technical amendments to the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

Subsection (a). The Internal Revenue Code of 1986 was recently amended to allow tobacco products, cigarette papers and tubes manufactured in the United States and labeled or shipped for exportation, to be imported or brought into the United States if, among other things, they are returned to the original manufacturer under section 5704(c). Through an oversight, the corresponding penalty provision in section 5761(c) was not amended to exempt from penalty importations permitted by section 5704(c). As a result, imported tobacco products returned to the original manufacturer authorized in section 5704(c) are technically subject to the penalties in section 5761(c). Subsection (a) corrects this anomaly.

Subsection (b) corrects an obsolete reference in section 5704(d) to tobacco products, cigarette papers and tubes "classifiable under item 804.00 of title I of the Tariff Act of 1930." The correct reference is to "subheading 9801.00.80 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States."

TITLE II – GOVERNMENT SECURITIES

SEC. 201. ELIMINATION OF CERTAIN PAPER INSTRUMENTS.

This amendment repeals the provisions in the Social Security Independence Program Improvements Act of 1994 that require the Department of the Treasury to issue paper instruments to the OASDI Trust Funds to evidence investments in those funds, and issue paper checks for payments of interest or proceeds from the sale or redemption of investments.

These provisions serve no purpose and have increased the complexity and cost of administering the Funds with no corresponding benefit to either the Funds or their beneficiaries. In addition to the normal electronic investment and redemption operations of the two trust funds, Treasury's Bureua of the Public Debt must generate extra accounting reports that are used to create the paper instruments. The paper instruments then need to printed, authenticated, signed, kept in custody, and retired. The work associated with having to create and deal with these purely symbolic documents much in the same way we would deal with real securities is unnecessary in an age when securities are held in electronic accounts.

SEC. 202. ELIMINATION OF SINKING FUND FOR RETIRING AND CANCELING CERTAIN SECURITIES.

This section would repeal the Sinking Fund provisions codified at 31 U.S.C. 3112. The Sinking Fund, which is a permanent indefinite appropriation account created in 1919 for the purpose of aiding in the retirement of the public debt, is both conceptually and operationally obsolete. The Department of the Treasury does not use the Sinking Fund to "buy back" unmatured portions of the public debt, and instead relies on other statutory authority. Repealing section 3112 would bring greater clarity to the Government's financial statements by eliminating the reporting of a vestigial appropriation account.

This proposal is consistent with the views of the Comptroller General, who in 1956 and 1961 recommended that the Congress consider the desirability of revising the machinery for debt retirement on a more realistic basis.

SEC. 203. VALUE OF SECURITIES USED IN LIEU OF SURETY BONDS.

This section provides that securities pledged as surety for the performance of an obligation to the federal government shall have a market value, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, that is equal to or greater than the amount of the required surety bond. Current law provides that securities given instead of a surety bond have a par value equal to the amount of the required surety bond.

This amendment is needed because the requirement in current law that securities given instead of a surety bond have a par value equal to the amount of the surety bond is not sufficient to protect the interests of the government. A security valued at par could trade at a discount (such as a principal component of a Treasury security stripped of its interest components under the Treasury's STRIPS program) or have a reduced market value that is insufficient to protect or make whole the Government in the event of default. This section provides that securities pledged as surety for the performance of an obligation to the federal government shall, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, have a market value that is equal to or greater than the amount of the required surety bond. Current law provides that securities given instead of a surety bond be in an amount equal at its par value to the amount of the required surety bond.

TITLE III – FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT AND DEBT COLLECTION

SEC. 301. ESTABLISHMENT OF DEBT SERVICES ACCOUNT.

This section (1) establishes a new Debt Services Account to correct an unintended consequence created by the Debt Collection Improvement Act of 1996 (DCIA) that negatively affects the way Treasury's Financial Management Service (FMS) spends appropriated funds and (2) allows critically necessary flexibility for FMS funding and transfers between FMS accounts. Similar authority was included in H.R. 436, which was approved by the House of Representatives by a vote of 419-1 during the 106th Congress. As a temporary solution, transfer authority was included in both the FY 2001 and FY 2002 Treasury Postal Appropriations bills.

The DCIA mandates that Treasury collect debts owed the Federal government that are more than 180 days delinquent. However, the DCIA inadvertently created an accounting anomaly that diverts vital resources away from collecting delinquent debt. FMS incurs a substantial amount of contractual obligations for the debt program in the first quarter of a fiscal year, but revenue from fees associated with tax refund offsets are not booked until the second and third quarters. FMS therefore runs a substantial risk of running out of appropriated funds before receiving revenue from the Tax Refund Offset Program. This section allows FMS technically to "reimburse" its Salaries and Expenses account when it provides funds to the debt program prior to the debt program receiving fees from tax refund offsets. This section also changes the fee account from a 2-year to a no-year account, and requires fees from all FMS debt collection activities to be deposited into the new Debt Services Account.

SEC. 302. STREAMLINING THE BENEFIT OFFSET PROCESS.

This amendment would eliminate a complex and burdensome provision in the DCIA.

The DCIA mandates that FMS offset Social Security and certain other Federal benefit payments to collect delinquent debt owed to the Federal government. Offsets of benefit payments are subject to an annual $9,000 ($750 per month) exemption.

The amount of the exemption, however, is required to be reduced by the amount of any Federal benefit payments that are not subject to offset. Calculating the reduced exemption requires FMS to determine the type and amount of benefit payments received by each debtor who receives more than one type of benefit payment. The process, which would have to be repeated for every payment, requires FMS to match each payee's name and TIN with those of a debtor and then to analyze other Federal benefit payments received by each payee identified as a debtor. This is administratively complex and burdensome to implement because benefit payments are administered by several Government agencies, the payments are disbursed at various times throughout the month, and the amount and type of benefits received by any payee may change on a monthly basis.

Moreover, FMS believes that repeal of the exemption reduction provision will not have a significant effect on debt collection revenues. (Note: FMS has discretionary authority to implement the DCIA in phases; although FMS is offsetting benefits payments, it has deferred implementing the provisions concerning reductions in exemptions for the reasons stated.)

SEC 303. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS TO THE DEBT COLLECTION IMPROVEMENT ACT.

Subsections (a) through (d) and (g) through (i) are technical amendments that correct typographical and/or editorial errors in the DCIA.

Section (e) clarifies that the creditor agency, not the Department of the Treasury, is the proper entity from which an aggrieved debtor should seek legal redress in connection with offsets of non-tax payments. As has been established consistently in several court cases, the creditor agency, not Treasury, is responsible to the aggrieved party for erroneous or impermissible offsets. The provision is modeled on a similar provision in the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. 6402(f)) regarding Treasury's offset of tax refund payments.

Subsection (f) clarifies that the Department of the Treasury has the authority to compromise or otherwise settle debts referred to Treasury for debt collection. Debts are transferred to Treasury after an agency has been unable to collect on the debt; the authority to compromise or settle such debts is an integral part of the collection process.

SEC. 304. TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS TO THE SECURE RURAL SCHOOLS AND COMMUNITY SELF-DETERMINATION ACT OF 2000.

This section makes technical amendments to (1) correct the title of the economic index used to adjust payments to eligible States and counties under the Act, (2) clarify that eligible States should contact the Secretary of Agriculture, rather than the Secretary of Treasury, regarding their elections under the Act, and (3) transfer from the Department of the Treasury to the Departments of Agriculture and Interior certain administrative responsibilities with respect to which the latter agencies possess the necessary data and programmatic expertise.

The Departments of Agriculture and Interior concur in this proposal.

SEC. 305. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPRO-PRIATIONS ACT, 2001

This technical amendment corrects a drafting error concerning the certification that the Inspector General of the District of Columbia must make to the Secretary of the Treasury before Federal matching funds can be paid to the Washington Interfaith Network (Network).

Public Law 106-522 authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to make a payment to the Network to reimburse costs it incurred in carrying out preconstruction activities at the former Fort Dupont Dwellings and Additions. As enacted, the Inspector General of the District of Columbia must certify that "the costs incurred in carrying out the activities were equal to or less than the amount of the reimbursement requested" (emphasis added). While the law limits reimbursement of Federal matching funds to $1 million, it neither restricts the costs that the Network may incur nor limits the amount of funds that the Network may raise from private sources and loans. Accordingly, the Network may incur costs that exceed the amount of the Federal reimbursement and pay these costs from private sources and loans. The current provision may inadvertently preclude the Inspector General's ability to make the required certification because the Network could incur costs that exceed the maximum amount of the Federal reimbursement.

Accordingly, this section would amend the law to provide that the Inspector General certify that the Network's incurred costs are "equal to or greater than" the Federal reimbursement to the Network. (Note: The Federal matching funds may not be obligated or expended after December 31, 2001.)

SEC. 306. AMENDMENT TO THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE CUSHION OF CREDIT PAYMENTS PROGRAM.

Under the Cushion of Credit Payments Program, borrowers may make voluntary deposits into "cushion of credit" subaccounts established within the Rural Electrification and Telephone Revolving Fund (the Fund) and use these deposits to make their scheduled payments on certain loans made or guaranteed by the Rural Utilities Service (RUS). The borrowers earn interest on these deposits at a rate of 5 percent. All cash balance amounts (obtained from the borrowers' cushion of credit payments, loan payments, and other sources) held by the Fund bear interest to the Fund at a rate equal to the weighted average rate on outstanding Certificates of Beneficial Ownership (CBOs) issued by the Fund in direct loans that it held.

Treasury's Federal Financing Bank (FFB) purchased CBOs from the Fund and currently holds approximately $4.3 billion of these CBOs, the last of which will mature in 2021. The program's 1987 enabling legislation contains a provision that requires that the amount of interest earned on all of the cash balances held by the Fund be credited to the Fund as an offsetting reduction to the amount of interest paid by the Fund on its CBOs. As a result, the FFB receives lower interest payments on the CBOs that it holds than it contractually is entitled to receive.

To the greatest extent possible, the FFB has used, and continues to use, amounts derived from the 1/8th of 1 percent surcharge on its loans to cover the amount of interest foregone and thereby, to repay in full the loans that it received from the Treasury to finance its purchase of the CBOs. However, the shortfalls in interest received by the FFB as a result of this provision contributed nearly $1 billion to the development of a $3.3 billion FFB accumulated deficit, which was eliminated in 1998 by an appropriation made for that purpose at the Administration's request. Unless the interest reduction provision is repealed, the FFB again may be unable to repay its Treasury loans in full and could run a deficit that will require another appropriation to be eliminated.

The portion of the shortfall in interest received by the FFB equal to the interest earned by the Fund on the cushion of credit balances is used by the Fund to pay the interest due on the cushion of credit subaccounts and to finance grants and zero-interest loans to RUS borrowers to promote rural economic development and job creation projects. The remainder of the shortfall is retained as interest earnings by the Fund. This section would repeal the FFB interest reduction provision and would require that an appropriation be used to pay interest on the cushion of credit subaccounts to the Fund on a monthly basis and to finance the rural development grants and loans. In addition, the Fund would receive interest at the weighted average rate on the Fund's outstanding CBOs only on the cushion of credit balances, not on all cash balances, so that the amount of interest earned by the Fund would equal the amount of interest required to be used to pay interest on the cushion of credit subaccounts and to finance the rural economic development grants and loans. Consequently, there would be no longer be any interest earnings remaining for the Fund to retain. Since the Fund is only a liquidating account for loans that it made or guaranteed prior to enactment of the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, it should not retain any of the interest earned on its cash balances.

This Administration proposal has no budget scoring effect and preserves funding for the rural economic development program.

TITLE IV – TAX ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 401. DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION TO LOCAL AND TRIBAL LAW ENFORCEMENT AGENCIES IN CIRCUMSTANCES OF IMMINENT DANGER OF DEATH OR PHYSICAL INJURY.

Section 6103(i)(3)(B)(i) of the Internal Revenue Code permits the disclosure of return information to Federal or State law enforcement agencies in order to prevent imminent danger or loss of life in cases involving suicide, explosions, bombings, and the like. This section, however, does not extend to local or tribal law enforcement agencies (such as police and sheriff departments), which are most readily available and best equipped to respond in these circumstances.

The amendment made by this section would amend section 6103(i)(B)(3)(i) to permit the disclosure of this information to local and tribal law enforcement agencies. The following example illustrates the need for this amendment:

> The office of the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration (TIGTA) has been investigating an individual for a criminal violation of the tax laws. The subject of the investigation calls the TIGTA Special Agent and tells her that her investigation has led him to want to commit suicide. He tells her that he is calling her so that when his body is found, she will know that it was her investigation that led him to kill himself. Under current law, the Special Agent would not be able to disclose the suicide threat to the local police department that could intervene to help prevent the subject from killing himself. Current law would permit the Special Agent to call the State police, but they usually would not be in a position to intervene.

SEC 402. RATE OF PAY FOR THE TREASURY INSPECTOR GENERAL FOR TAX ADMINISTRATION.

This section would amend 5 U.S.C. 5315 to include the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration (TIGTA) within the list of positions compensated at level IV of the Executive Schedule. The 1998 law establishing the TIGTA position inadvertently omitted a provision governing compensation for the position. All department-level Inspectors General, including the Treasury Inspector General, are compensated at level IV of the Executive Schedule.

TITLE V – FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

SEC. 501. CONFORMING REFERENCES TO SERVICE COMPANIES.

This section updates obsolete references in the Home Owners' Loan Act (HOLA) to "service corporations." The Examination Parity and Year 2000 Readiness for Financial Institutions Act (Pub. L. No. 105-164 (1988)) used the term "service company" instead of "service corporation" when it added sections 5(d)(7) and (8) to HOLA. This section makes the conforming changes that were inadvertently not included in the 1998 Act.

SEC. 502. CORRECTING INSURANCE CUSTOMER PROTECTIONS STATUTE.

This section makes a technical correction to section 47(g) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, which was added by GLBA section 305. Section 47 requires the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS), and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve to publish insurance customer protection regulations. Through a drafting oversight, Treasury's OTS was omitted from the list of the federal banking agencies in section 47(g). The amendment made by this section corrects this oversight.

SEC. 503. CORRECTING HOME OWNERS' LOAN ACT CAPTIONS.

This section corrects the captions for sections 4(a) and 5 of HOLA.

Section 4 provides for OTS supervision of both Federal and State savings associations insured by the FDIC and imposes various limits on their activities. Subsection (a) requires the OTS Director to oversee these Federal and State savings associations, issue appropriate regulations, and encourage them to provide credit for housing safely and soundly. To eliminate confusion over its scope, this section amends the caption to read "General Responsibilities of the Director."

Section 5 establishes rules that apply only to Federal savings associations in some cases and to Federal and State savings associations in others. To eliminate confusion over its scope, this section amends the heading to read "Savings Associations."

SEC. 504. CONFORMING AMENDMENT TO RESTATE THRIFT SMALL BUSINESS INVESTMENT AUTHORITY IN HOLA.

This section amends section 5(c)(4)(D) of the HOLA to restate recently-enacted statutory authority for Federal savings associations to invest in small business investment companies (SBICs) and entities established to invest solely in SBICs. Savings associations are subject to an aggregate 5 percent of capital limit on such investments. The Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2001, gave savings associations this authority by enacting a new section 302(b)(2) of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 (15 U.S.C. 6882(b)(2)). Section 302(b)(2) overrides the existing section 5(c)(4)(D) which sets forth obsolete authority related to investments in SBICs. This amendment removes possible confusion by replacing the obsolete HOLA provision with a restatement of current law.

SEC. 505. INTERAGENCY DATA SHARING.

Section 727 of GLBA expressly authorized the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to provide confidential supervisory information concerning an examined entity to another supervisory authority, an officer, director, or receiver of the examined entity, or any other person. Giving this express authority only to the Fed has raised issues about whether the other Federal banking agencies have the authority to share this information without a similar statute. This technical amendment resolves that ambiguity and provides the same authority for all of the Federal banking agencies.

SEC. 506. PENALTY FOR UNAUTHORIZED PARTICIPATION BY CONVICTED INDIVIDUAL.

This section gives the Federal banking agencies the authority to prohibit a person convicted of a crime involving dishonesty or a breach of trust from participating in the affairs of an uninsured national or State member bank or uninsured branch, agency, or commercial lending company of a foreign bank. Under current law, the ability of the banking agencies to keep these "bad actors" out of depository institutions applies only to insured depository institutions. This amendment extends the prohibition authority to uninsured national and state member banks and uninsured offices of foreign banks. The amendment is necessary to provide for the safe and sound operations of these institutions.

SEC. 507. AUTHORITY OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY IN REMOVAL ACTIONS.

Section 8(e)(4) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act provides procedures for the removal of an institution-affiliated party from office or participation in the affairs of an insured depository institution. Among other things, with respect to national banks, this paragraph requires the OCC to certify the findings and conclusions of an Administrative Law Judge to the Federal Reserve for its determination whether a removal order will be issued. This amendment would remove this certification and Fed approval process.

The present system stems from historical decisions made by Congress on circumstances that are no longer applicable. Originally, the role of the OCC in removal cases was to certify the facts of the case to the Federal Reserve. The Federal Reserve then made the decision to pursue the case and made the final agency decision. At that time, the Comptroller was a member of the Federal Reserve Board and therefore participated in the Board's final removal decision. However, Congress later removed the Comptroller from the Federal Reserve Board and gave the OCC the authority to issue suspensions and notices of intention to remove.

The Treasury, OCC, and the Federal Reserve strongly concur in this technical amendment, which removes an obsolete provision of law and vests the Comptroller with the same removal authority as the other Federal banking agencies.

SEC. 508. AMENDMENT TO BRANCH CAPITAL REQUIREMENTS.

Section 5155 of the Revised Statutes requires a national bank, in order to establish an intrastate branch in a State, to meet the capital requirements imposed by the State on State banks seeking to establish intrastate branches. This technical amendment would repeal this obsolete capital requirement, which is not necessary for safety and soundness. Branching restrictions are already imposed under other provisions of law to limit the operations of a bank if it is in troubled condition (see 12 U.S.C. 1831o(e)).

SEC. 509. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT TO THE NATIONAL BANK CONSOLIDATION AND MERGER ACT.

This section is a technical amendment to clarify that the requirement to publish a notice for shareholders in the case of a consolidation or merger of a national bank with another bank located within the same State may be waived by the Comptroller in the case of an emergency situation or by unanimous vote of the shareholders of the national or State bank. The current statute inadvertently omits the word "or" in describing the alternatives for waiving the shareholder notice publication requirement. This technical amendment clarifies the intent of the statute and removes any ambiguity as to its meaning.

TITLE VI – ELIMINATING AND STREAMLINING REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 601. ELIMINATING ANNUAL REPORT CONCERNING GOVERNMENT SECURITIES BROKERS AND DEALERS.

This section eliminates an annual report to Congress under 31 U.S.C. 3121 note which requires the Secretary of the Treasury to report on exceptions granted to a government securities broker or dealer from the statutory prohibition on favored treatment under the government securities auction rules. Because the law provides that no broker or dealer is to receive favorable treatment not generally available to other government securities brokers or dealers unless the Secretary determines such treatment is necessary, appropriate, in the public interest, and designed to minimize anticompetitive effect, and the policy is to treat all auction participants fairly and evenhandedly, the report of exceptions granted is not necessary. There have been no exceptions granted since 1993 when this provision went into effect, and Treasury has consistently reported in the negative.

SEC. 602. ELIMINATION OF REPORTS CONCERNING GOVERNMENT SECURITIES AUCTIONS.

Subsection (a) This section eliminates an annual report by the Secretary of the Treasury concerning material violations or suspected material violations of regulations relating to Treasury auctions and other offerings of securities upon the issuance of such securities by Treasury. There have been no material violations of the auction rules since the enactment of this requirement. Treasury has taken numerous steps since this requirement was first put in place to assure compliance with auction rules, including on-site visits with auction participants combined with ongoing and extensive education and compliance training programs which remain effective in maintaining the integrity of the auction process.

Subsection (b) repeals the requirement that Treasury notify Congress at the time of implementing significant modifications to the government securities auction process. This section would eliminate the notice. There have been no significant modifications since 1993 when this provision went into effect that have been reported to Congress. Important modifications to auction procedures would be announced publicly and, if they involve an auction rule, would be the subject of a rulemaking published in the Federal Register.

SEC. 603. ELIMINATION OF ANNUAL RESOLUTION FUNDING CORPORATION REPORT.

This section eliminates an annual report to Congress required under 12 U.S.C. 1441b(i) on the operations, budget, receipts, and expenditures of the Resolution Funding Corporation (RFC). The information provided by the report is duplicated by the provision to Congress of similar financial information on the RFC required under the Chief Financial Officers Act (Public Law 101-576).

SEC. 604. ELIMINATION OF ANNUAL REPORT CONCERNING THE PUBLIC DEBT AND THE FEDERAL FINANCING BANK.

This section eliminates an annual report to Congress required under 31 U.S.C. 3130(a) on the levels, maturity structure, ownership, interest costs, and amortization schedule of the public debt and on receipts of the Federal Financing Bank. Some of the information duplicates information available in the President's budget, and elsewhere, while other information required to be provided (for example, "net public debt" expressed on a "current services basis") does not correspond to standard terms used in the budget and elsewhere, and is therefore confusing.

SEC. 605. MODIFICATION OF ANNUAL REPORTS ON EXCISE TAX FUNDS.

This section eliminates the annual reporting requirements for several excise tax funds, including: Airport and Airway Trust Fund (26 U.S.C. 9602(a)); Aquatic Resources Trust Fund (26 U.S.C. 9602(a)); Black Lung Disability Trust Fund (26 U.S.C. 9602(a)); Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund (26 U.S.C. 9602(a)); Highway Trust Fund (26 U.S.C. 9602(a)); Inland Waterways Trust Fund (26 U.S.C. 9602(a)); Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund (26 U.S.C. 9602(a)); Hazardous Substance Trust Fund (26 U.S.C. 9602(a)); Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund (26 U.S.C. 9602(a)); and Vaccine Injury Compensation Trust Fund (26 U.S.C. 9602(a)). This reporting requirement is now satisfied by publishing the required reports in an issue of the quarterly Treasury Bulletin, which is sent to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House. Treasury no longer sends the separate reports on each excise tax fund to Congress. The Treasury Bulletin is also available to the public on the Financial Management Service's Internet site.

SEC. 606. MODIFICATION OF ANNUAL REPORT ON URANIUM ENRICHMENT DECONTAMINATION AND DECOMMISSIONING TRUST FUND.

This section eliminates the annual reporting requirement on the Fund under 42 U.S.C. 2297g(b)(1)). This reporting requirement is now satisfied by publishing the required report in an issue of the quarterly Treasury Bulletin, which is sent to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House. Treasury no longer sends the separate report to Congress. The Treasury Bulletin is also available to the public on the Financial Management Service's Internet site.

SEC. 607. MODIFICATION OF SEMIANNUAL REPORT ON UNFUNDED HIGHWAY AUTHORIZATIONS.

This section eliminates the semiannual reporting requirement under 26 U.S.C. 9503(d)(6), for a report estimating the amount which would be the unfunded highway authorizations at the close of the next fiscal year, and net highway receipts for 24-month period beginning at close of such fiscal year. This reporting requirement is now satisfied by publishing the required semiannual report in two issues of the quarterly Treasury Bulletin, which is sent to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House. Treasury no longer sends the separate semiannual reports to Congress. The Treasury Bulletin is also available to the public on the Financial Management Service's Internet site.

SEC. 608. ELIMINATION OF REPORTS CONCERNING FOREIGN CURRENCY.

This section eliminates the quarterly reports required under 31 U.S.C. 5315 on foreign currency, based on weekly, monthly and quarterly surveys, covering foreign exchange holdings of large foreign exchange participants and some U.S.-based banks and non-bank financial entities and foreign banks' U.S. subsidiaries. Neither the Treasury's Market Room nor the Federal Reserve Board of New York's (FRBNY) Markets Group finds that the report contains useful market information. The currency coverage of the report is limited to the major currency pairs and does not capture currency positions in emerging markets. The reporting requirement is based on respondents' gross positions, and this does not ensure that the respondents with large net positions, with the greatest potential to move markets, will report at all. The reports are not globally comprehensive, as only U.S. institutions and U.S. branches of foreign institutions, are covered. In addition, there is no means to guarantee consistency among different respondents' reports. Finally, there are costs involved for the Treasury, which taps a permanent indefinite appropriation to reimburse FRBNY for collecting the data, and for the respondents to prepare their report on a weekly, monthly, and quarterly basis.

SEC. 609. MODIFICATION OF SEMIANNUAL REPORT UNDER THE PRESIDENTIAL PROTECTION ASSISTANCE ACT.

Public Law 94-524 requires a seminannual report to the Congress on expenditures under the Presidential Protection Assistance Act. This section would change the frequency of the reporting requirement from semiannually to annually. The preparation of the report is very labor intensive, requiring that a large amount of data be collected, compiled, collated and presented. The objective of the mandated reporting could be more efficiently achieved by extending the reporting period to one year.

SEC. 610. ELIMINATION OF ANNUAL REPORT OF NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON INTERNATIONAL MONETARY AND FINANCIAL POLICIES.

This section eliminates the annual report to Congress on international financial institutions required by section 1701 of the International Financial Institutions Act (22 U.S.C. 262r) and section 583 of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1999 (Pub. L. 105-277). Much of the information in this annual report is available on the institutions' Internet sites or in materials such as the annual justification for appropriations for Treasury International Programs submitted to the Congress.

SEC. 611. ELIMINATION OF REPORTS ON POLICIES, OPERATIONS AND MANAGEMENT OF INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.

This section eliminates several reports and a requirement to notify Congress:

Subsection (a) repeals subsections (a) and (b) of section 803 of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 2001 (Pub. Law 106-429). Section 803(a) requires an annual report by the General Accounting Office (GAO) on the sufficiency of audits of the financial operations of each multilateral development bank (MDB) conducted by persons or entities outside such bank. The GAO will submit a report in 2001, and a one-time report by the GAO is adequate. Annual GAO reporting would provide minimal added value.

Section 803(b) requires an annual report on actions taken by recipient countries of MDB assistance to strengthen governance and reduce the opportunity for bribery and corruption, and how certain MDB-financed projects contribute to the eventual graduation from reliance on concessionary terms and international development assistance. Much of the content of this report is publicly available on the Internet sites of the MDBs.

Subsection (b) nullifies a requirement contained in Conference Report 106-977 that the Congress be notified if certain loans, community financing, cost sharing, or cost recovery mechanisms involving user fees are approved by any MDB or the International Monetary Fund (IMF). The criteria for the notification request under the Conference Report have not materialized.

Subsection (c) repeals the report on trade conditionality in the banks and IMF codified at 22

U.S.C. 286gg(c)(2). This report is discretionary, based on a series of conditions being met, and requires a determination by the United States Trade Representative (USTR). The criteria for reporting under this section have not materialized.

Subsection (d) repeals the provision in the International Financial Institutions Act requiring an annual report on (1) the success of the U.S. Executive Director at the IMF in influencing the IMF to adopt internal reforms and to push for various reforms in borrowing countries and (2) the progress made by the IMF in adopting and implementing policies specified in section 803(c) of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 2001 (Pub. Law 106-429). Much of the content of this report can be found on the IMF's Internet site.

Subsection (e) repeals the provision in the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 2001 (Pub. Law 106-429) that requires an annual report on the efforts of the heads of each Federal agency and the U.S. Executive Directors of the international financial institutions on efforts to make full use of American resources, including commodities, products, and services for assistance provided under the referenced statute. Much of the information is already publicly available.

Subsection (f) repeals the provision in the Foreign Operations Appropriations Act, 1999, requiring quarterly reports on new IMF arrangements (and augmentations to existing arrangements) during the previous quarter, identifying separately those with certain terms. This information is already publicly available on the IMF's Internet site.

Subsection (g) repeals subsections (b) and (e) of section 504 of Public Law 106-113. Section 504(b) requires quarterly reports on the costs and benefits of U.S. participation in the IMF and the valuation of the gains or losses on the U.S. reserve position in the IMF. Several reports have already been submitted. Additional reports would be of limited value because U.S. financial engagement with the IMF is based on an exchange of assets. Therefore, the cost or benefit does not change significantly, and changes that do occur are primarily the result of fluctuations in the exchange rate.

Section 504(e) requires annual reports by the GAO on the extent to which the practices of the I MF are consistent with U.S. policies in Federal law concerning the IMF. In January 2001, the GAO stated in its first such report that "Treasury has instituted a systematic process for applying legislative mandates concerning the Fund to individual countries, based on their economic circumstances." This system remains in place and continued annual reports would provide little new information.

SEC. 612. ELIMINATION OF REPORTS ON FOREIGN SALES AND POSSESSIONS CORPORATIONS.

This section eliminates reports on foreign sales and possessions corporations, for which the underlying provisions of the Internal Revenue Code have been repealed.

SEC. 613. MODIFICATION OF REPORTS UNDER THE INTERNATIONAL EMERGENCY ECONOMIC POWERS ACT.

Treasury is responsible for preparing numerous separate semiannual Presidential reports under section 204(c) of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act (IEEPA) (50 U.S.C. 1703(c)), relating to actions taken in response to unusual and extraordinary threats, originating in whole or in substantial part from outside the United States, to the national security, foreign policy or economy of the United States. This section would change the frequency of the reporting requirement under section 204(c) from semiannually to annually. Among the reports affected are: the Angola (UNITA) Emergency Report, the Western Balkans Emergency Report, the Burma Emergency Report, the Conflict Diamonds (Sierra Leone and Liberia) Report, the Iran Emergency Report I (1979), the Iran Emergency Report II (1995), the Iraq Emergency Report, the Libya Emergency Report, the Columbian Narcotics Traffickers Emergency Report, the Highly Enriched Uranium Emergency Continuation Report, the Sudan Emergency Report, and Taliban (Afghan) Emergency Report, the Middle Eastern Terrorism Emergency Report, and the Yugoslavia Combined (Serbia and Montenegro/Kosovo/Milosevic) Emergency Report.

SEC. 614. ELIMINATION OF REPORTS CONCERNING FOREIGN TRADE PROJECTIONS.

This section amends section 163 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2213) by repealing the requirement that the Secretary of the Treasury and the USTR jointly prepare an annual trade projection report. This report, prepared mainly by Treasury with a short section by the USTR, provides a brief review of global economic developments and their relevance for U.S. trade. The report should be eliminated because it duplicates the coverage of, but provides much less information than, the annual International Economic and Exchange Rate Reports, each of which is updated six months later.

TITLE VII – DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA RETIREMENT FUNDS TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS

SEC. 701. ABOLISHMENT OF THE FEDERAL SUPPLEMENTAL DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA PENSION FUND AND TRANSFER OF ITS ASSETS TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FEDERAL PENSION LIABILITY TRUST FUND.

This section abolishes the Federal Supplemental District of Columbia Pension Fund (Supplemental Fund) and transfers its assets and functions to the existing District of Columbia Federal Pension Liability Trust Fund (Trust Fund).

Maintaining two separate funds with identical investment requirements for the purpose of making Federal benefit payments results in duplicative reporting requirements, and increased management and administrative expenses. For example, the existence of two funds means that both are subject to annual actuarial, audit, and financial reporting requirements, and both are presented in the budget as separate accounts when their purposes are identical. Maintaining one fund will streamline and improve the process for making Federal benefit payments and will provide a simpler and clearer presentation of the DC pension program in the Federal budget.

Both the Supplemental Fund and the Trust Fund were established by the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 when the Federal Government assumed responsibility for certain pension liabilities of the of the District of Columbia. Most assets of the District of Columbia Police Officers and Fire Fighters Retirement Fund and the District of Columbia Teachers Retirement Fund were transferred to the Trust Fund for the purpose of making federal benefit payments to District police officers, fire fighters, and teachers for service accrued on or before June 30, 1997. The assets transferred consisted of a wide variety of private and public securities, and could continue to be invested in private securities and any other form of investment deemed appropriate by the Secretary.

The Supplemental Fund was established to receive the annual payment required to be made by the Secretary from the General Fund of the Treasury to amortize the original unfunded liability assumed from the District of Columbia and annual gains and losses. Unlike the Trust Fund, the assets of the Supplemental Fund were required to be invested in public debt securities.

The Omnibus Consolidated and Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1999 required the Secretary to invest the assets of the Trust Fund in public debt securities notwithstanding the provisions of the BBA to the contrary. As a result, both funds are now required to be invested in the same type of assets. This statutory change eliminated the primary reason for creating separate funds, and the Trust Fund and the Supplemental Fund should have been combined at that time.

This section also amends the BBA and the District of Columbia Code to reflect the termination of the Supplemental Fund.

SEC. 702. CLERICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

This section makes nonsubstantive clerical and conforming amendments to reflect the termination of the Supplemental Fund.

TITLE VIII – COINAGE TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

SEC. 801. ACQUISITION OF SILVER.

Section 5116(b)(2) of title 31, United States Code, requires the Secretary of the Treasury to obtain silver for minting the American Eagle silver bullion dollar coin authorized by 31 U.S.C. 5112(e) by purchase from stockpiles established under the Strategic and Critical Minerals Stock Piling Act 50 U.S.C. 98 et seq.). At the current rate of production of this coin the stockpiles are expected to be depleted before the end of calendar year 2002.

This section amends section 5116(b)(2) to authorize the Secretary to obtain such silver from any available source when the stockpiles are depleted. Without this amendment, the very successful American Eagle silver bullion coin program would be discontinued when the stockpiles are depleted.

Dear Community Leader:

As you may know, the lack of a government backstop for terrorism insurance is causing insurance rates to skyrocket and, even worse, preventing new projects from going forward. Last year, we came close to a legislative solution, but it foundered on the shoals of tort reform.

I have worked with Treasury Secretary O'Neill on a new approach that should avoid these perils. The approach is a simple one. The federal government will pick up uninsured losses if there is another terrorist attack. I believe it can receive bipartisan support in both houses of Congress.

I am sending you a copy of this proposal. If you support it, please let your senators and congressmen know. If you have any questions, please contact Kate Scheeler in my Washington office at 202-224-6542. And, as always, please let me know if I can be of help to you in any way.

Sincerely,

Charles Schumer
U.S. Senate
SCHUMER PROPOSAL

SECTION. 1. SHORT TITLE.
This Act may be cited as the "Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002."

SEC. 2. TERRORISM RISK INSURANCE PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.--
The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to establish a terrorism risk insurance program to compensate U.S. persons for up to $100,000,000,000 in aggregate economic losses of the type that are typically covered under property and casualty insurance policies, including business interruption coverage, resulting from any act of terrorism that occurs on or after the date of enactment of this Act through June 30, 2005. The Secretary shall compensate persons pursuant to this Act only if both the person and the appropriate State insurance commissioner certify that the person has not been able to obtain reasonably priced insurance coverage in the private sector for economic losses resulting from acts of terrorism. The Secretary has discretionary authority to assess premiums on those certified. Any determination of the Secretary as to whether or not to pay compensation, or as to the appropriate amount of any compensation, under this Act shall be final and shall not be subject to judicial review.

SEC. 3. ACT OF TERRORISM DEFINED.--
(a) CERTIFICATION.--The term Aact of terrorism@ means any act that is certified by the Secretary -- (1) to be a violent act or an act that is dangerous to human life, property, or infrastructure; (2) to have resulted in damage within the United States, or to an air carrier (as defined in section 40102 of title 49, United States Code) regardless of where the loss occurs; and (3) to have been committed by an individual or individuals acting on behalf of any foreign person or foreign interest, as part of an effort to coerce the civilian population of the United States or to influence the policy or affect the conduct of the United States Government by coercion.
(b) LIMITATION.--No act or event shall be certified by the Secretary as an act of terrorism if (1) the act or event is committed in the course of a war declared by the Congress; or (2) losses resulting from the act or event, in the aggregate, do not exceed $5,000,000.
(c) DETERMINATIONS FINAL.-- Any certification of, or determination not to certify, an act or event as an act of terrorism under this paragraph shall be final and shall not be subject to judicial review.

SEC. 4. PAYMENT AUTHORITY.-- This Act constitutes budget authority in advance of appropriations Acts, and represents the obligation of the Federal Government to pay up to $100,000,000,000 in compensation for economic losses determined by the Secretary to be covered under this Act.

SEC. 5. GENERAL AUTHORITIES.--The Secretary shall have the powers and authorities necessary to implement this Act, including authority to prescribe regulations and procedures. Such regulations and procedures may include, but not be limited to, guidelines for certification and for assessment of premiums. The United States shall have the right of subrogation with respect to any payment made by the United States under this Act.

Explanation of Proposed Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002

The proposed bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a temporary (3 year) terrorism risk insurance program to protect taxpayers and reduce economic instability caused by the current lack of affordable commercial property and casualty insurance coverage for terrorism risk in the wake of the September 11 attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

The proposed bill recognizes the federal government's interest in stabilizing the economy during this period of uncertainty about possible future terrorist attacks. It offers a simpler, yet effective, alternative to other terrorism insurance bills.

Specifically, the proposed terrorism risk insurance program would -- ~ provide compensation to U.S. persons, up to an aggregate cap of $100 billion, for economic losses, of the type typically covered under property and casualty insurance for future acts of terrorism, subject to certification by that person or persons and by the appropriate state insurance commissioner, that the person or persons have been unable to obtain reasonably priced insurance coverage for losses resulting from acts of terrorism

~ limit federal government exposure by narrowly defining the term "act of terrorism," requiring federal certification by the Secretary of the Treasury that an act of terrorism has occurred, limiting the duration of the program and providing a federal right of subrogation with respect to any payment made under the Act

~ provide congressional payment authority for the program, and ~ authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to implement the Act and the program, including authority to prescribe regulations and procedures

Under the proposed bill, the terrorism risk insurance program would provide direct compensation for victims of future terrorist attacks who have been unable to secure private sector insurance coverage. The Secretary of the Treasury would have discretionary authority to charge a premium for such coverage. By providing direct, full compensation for economic losses, the proposed bill: 1) recognizes the responsibility of the federal government to assure insurance protection against potential future attacks 2) avoids issues raised last year regarding the level and amount of private insurers' retention and 3) reflects what appeared to be the consensus reached last year that taxpayer dollars should not be used to compensate for non-economic losses, such as punitive damage

TALKING POINTS ON REQUEST FOR GOVERNOR RIDGE TO TESTIFY

ú The Administration has taken extraordinary steps to ensure that Congress is extremely well informed about all aspects of homeland security.

- Administration officials with operational and budgetary authority, including the Secretary of Defense and the Attorney General, have repeatedly testified before Congress on homeland security matters. They also have given members of Congress full briefings.

-- Governor Ridge, although he does not have operational authority, has nonetheless made himself available to meet with Members of Congress. He has repeatedly spoken with leadership and members. In fact he recently met with the Senate caucuses of both parties. He has committed to continue to meet with members of Congress as necessary.

ú The question whether Governor Ridge should testify does not involve Congress' access to or need for information; rather, the sole question is whether Congress -- contrary to decades of practice -- can require members of the President's immediate White House staff, rather than Administration officials with operational authority, to testify before Congress on policy matters.

ú The long-standing position of Presidents of both parties -- a position long accepted by Congress out of due respect for the Presidency -- is that members of the President,s immediate White House staff do not testify before congressional committees on policy matters. The principle that the President,s closest advisers cannot be forced to testify before Congress is an essential part of the Constitution's separation of powers and protects both the legislative and executive branch of government.

-- This long-standing practice applies to close Presidential advisors. The National Security Advisor, who has a similar coordinating role as Governor Ridge does not testify, nor does The White House Chief of Staff.

-- Administrations of both parties have adhered to this principle for fifty years, except for instances involving substantial allegations of personal or official wrongdoing.

-- The President does not expect Senate staff members to testify or otherwise discuss the confidential advice provided to Members of Congress, nor should the Senate expect the President's staff members to testify before Congress.

ú There are Executive Office of the President officials who regularly testify before Congress. They include statutorily created offices that involve positions that require Senate confirmation such as the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors, and the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy.

ú The Administration will continue to meet legitimate Congressional needs for information consistent with these principles.

TALKING POINTS ON REQUEST FOR GOVERNOR RIDGE
TO TESTIFY

ú This is not a dispute about withholding information from Congress. The Administration has kept Congress extremely well informed about all aspects of homeland security.

- Administration officials with operational and budgetary authority, including the Secretary of Defense and the Attorney General, have repeatedly testified before Congress on these matters, or given members of Congress full briefings.

- Governor Ridge does not have operational authority. None-the-less, he has made himself available to meet with Members of Congress. He has repeatedly spoken with leadership and members about his mission. In fact he recently met with the Senate caucuses of both parties. He has met and will continue to meet with members of Congress at the White House and elsewhere.

ú The principle that the President,s closest advisers cannot be forced to testify before Congress is an essential part of the Constitution, s separation of powers and protects both the legislative and executive branch of government. Administrations of both parties have held fast to this principle for fifty years, except for instances involving allegations of personal wrongdoing.

- The National Security Advisor, who has a similar coordinating role as Governor Ridge does not testify, nor does The White House Chief of Staff.

- A similar analogy would be if the executive branch were to request that a Member of Congress, Chief of Staff testify before the executive branch. (Does that make sense? Is there a way to testify?)

ú There are White House officials that regularly testify before Congress. They include statutorily created offices that involve positions that require Senate confirmation such as the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the Chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality, and the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy.

ú The Administration wants to cooperate with Congress without compromising an important constitutional principle. They are seeking ways to meet any legitimate Congressional need for information from Governor Ridge with the President,s need to be able to receive confidential advice.

TALKING POINTS
REQUEST FOR GOVERNOR RIDGE TO TESTIFY

Governor Ridge has been asked to testify before Congress. The Administration believes strongly that the Governor) as one of the President,s closest advisors) should be held to the long-standing practice that precludes such advisors from testifying.

The Administration recognizes the needs of Congress to receive information to perform its constitutional responsibilities. Governor Ridge has offered and held numerous meetings and briefings with Members of Congress. The Governor will continue to work closely with Congress, including the relevant Committees, in a manner consistent with this long-standing practice (well-established).

Why the Director of Homeland Security should not testify ú Presidents of both parties, for over 50 years, have taken the position that their closest advisers cannot be forced to testify before Congress on policy matters. This position, based on the Constitution's separation of powers, has long been accepted by the Congress.

ú Governor Ridge is the President,s chief advisor on homeland security issues. As an Assistant to the President, a non-confirmed position, he has no authority to hire or fire, except in his immediate office.

ú The Director of Homeland Security serves as a coordinator between various agencies and departments. The National Security Advisor, who has a similar coordinating role between agencies does not testify, nor does the White House Chief of Staff.

ú Administrations of both parties have adhered to this position, except for instances involving substantial allegations of personal or official wrongdoing.

ú There are White House officials who regularly testify before Congress. These include statutorily created offices that involve positions requiring Senate confirmation, such as the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors, and the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy.

Meeting Congress, Need for Information
The Administration and Governor Ridge have regularly met with Congress and provided extensive information on homeland security.

ú Governor Ridge, although he does not have operational authority, has made himself available to meet with Members of Congress on an ongoing basis. He has repeatedly reached out to the bipartisan leadership of the Senate, and most recently met with the Senate caucuses of both parties.

Moving forward in the future.

ú The Administration and Governor Ridge recognize that the country faces significant issues regarding homeland security and that it will take the cooperation of both branches working together to solve them.

ú The Administration is committed to meeting Congressional needs for information consistent with constitutional principles, and will continue to meet with Members of Congress and brief committees on an ongoing basis.

TALKING POINTS
REQUEST FOR GOVERNOR RIDGE TO TESTIFY

Governor Ridge has been asked to testify before Congress. The Administration believes strongly that the Governor, as one of the President's closest policy advisors, should adhere to the long-standing practice under which such close Presidential advisors – based on the Constitution's separation of powers -- do not testify before Congress.

The Administration recognizes the needs of Congress to receive information to perform its constitutional responsibilities. Governor Ridge has offered and held numerous meetings and briefings with Members of Congress. The Governor will continue to work closely with Congress, including the relevant Committees, in a manner consistent with this long-standing practice.

Why the Director of Homeland Security should not testify:

- Presidents of both parties, for at least 50 years, have taken the position that their closest advisers cannot be forced to and ordinarily will not testify before Congress on policy matters. This shared respect for the Constitution's separation of powers provisions has long been accepted by the Congress.

- Governor Ridge is the President's chief policy advisor on homeland security issues. As an Assistant to the President, a non-confirmed position, he has no authority other than his role as a policy advisor who makes recommendations to the President. He has, for example, no authority to hire or fire, except in his immediate office.

- The Director of Homeland Security also serves as a coordinator between various agencies and departments. The National Security Advisor, who has a similar coordinating role between agencies, does not testify, nor do the White House Chief of Staff, the Counsel to the President, and other officials.

- Administrations of both parties have adhered to this position, except for instances involving substantial evidence of personal or official wrongdoing.

- The White House office is one component within the Executive Office of the President (EOP). Certain other EOP agencies regularly testify before Congress; these include statutorily created offices that involve positions requiring Senate confirmation, such as the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors, and the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy.

Meeting Congress' Need for Information

- The Administration and Governor Ridge have regularly met with Congress and provided extensive information on homeland security.

- Governor Ridge took the oath of office on October 8, 2001. Since that time Governor Ridge and his staff have held over 100 meetings with Members of Congress and staff, and briefed various committees in the House and Senate. In addition, he has repeatedly reached out to the bipartisan leadership of the Senate, and most recently met with the Senate caucuses of both parties.

- During this short period of time, Governor Ridge has been working on important homeland security issues such as Border Reorganization, the Threat Alert System, bioterrorism, food safety, and helping to ensure security at home at events such as the Olympics and the Super Bowl.

- Governor Ridge does not have operational or budget authority over any federal agency except his own office within the White House. The Threat Alert System is an example of an initiative that the Governor coordinated with various agencies which was ultimately turned over to DOJ for a period of comment, and DOJ will handle the comments on and the actual operation of the program.

- Administration officials with operational and budgetary authority, including the Secretary of Defense and the Attorney General, have repeatedly testified before Congress on homeland security matters. They have also provided Members of Congress with periodic briefings.

Moving forward in the future.

- The Administration and Governor Ridge recognize that the country faces significant issues regarding homeland security and that it will take the cooperation of both branches working together to solve them.

- The Administration is committed to meeting Congressional needs for information consistent with the principle of separation of powers.

- Governor Ridge looks forward to continuing to meet with Members of Congress, the __ committees with jurisdiction over homeland security, and brief committees on an ongoing basis.

- The Administration continues to seek to cooperate with Congress without compromising an important constitutional principle. It is actively seeking ways to meet any legitimate Congressional need for information from Governor Ridge while respecting the Constitutional protections which ensure the President's ability to receive confidential advice. Throughout modern history, disputes of this kind have generally been settled cooperatively between Congress and the White House, which remains the Administration's goal here. To issue a subpoena rather than to continue to share in these efforts to identify a cooperative resolution would be an unprecedented break with Congressional practice in similarly situated matters.

Some did -- for example, Beth Nolan (Counsel) and John Podesta both testified on the last-minute pardons. This was after the end of the Administration and it also involved hearings into alleged wrongdoing, which has been a sometime exception to the normal rule. Brett, do you know of others during the Clinton years? I think there were some, but again, always as part of scandal oversight.

PRF 3/20 testimony before the House Financial Services Committee's Subcommittee on Capital Markets, Insurance and Government Sponsored Enterprises

Thank you, Chairman Baker, for the opportunity to testify before your committee on reforming corporate disclosure. The President and Secretary O'Neill are emphatic about the need for change.

Today I will try to answer two questions likely to be on your minds. What's the underlying problem that we need to fix? And how would President Bush's 10-point plan redress that problem?

The underlying problem

The United States enjoys the deepest, most liquid, and most transparent capital markets in the world. Over the past few months, however, we have learned once again not to take the performance of our capital markets for granted. For investors to price risk properly and to allocate capital to the most promising firms, they must have access to reliable information. Nothing could be more important for the long-run health of our economy and for investor protection. Yet the demise of Enron, other confidence-driven financial implosions, and the rash of earnings restatements have recently made us realize that our system of corporate disclosure is not working as well as it should.

The quality of corporate disclosures relative has been eroding for at least a decade relative to the complexity of corporate finance. While our capital markets have been racing along at 100 r.p.m., our accounting and corporate disclosure regime has been crawling along at 10 r.p.m. The gap has just kept widening. The result is misallocation of capital. Every so often, the markets notice a particularly egregious misallocation, and as we have recently witnessed, a financial implosion follows.

What is driving this erosion? One place many would like to point is the Financial Accounting Standards Board as the key formulator of generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP): too slow and too mired in details instead of enunciating broad principles. Those are fair claims but they fail to identify the true culprit: that an ethic in boardrooms and auditing firms too often equates GAAP compliance with adequate disclosure. This ethic sets the bar too low. It encourages corporate executives to prepare, and auditors to certify, financial statements that meet the technical requirements of GAAP but fail to provide investors with a realistic picture of the firm's risk and reward prospects.

The President's plan to restore corporate accountability

For our corporate disclosure regime to work, a company's CEO and its auditors must be made accountable for disclosing the information that a reasonable investor would find necessary to assess the company's value (excepting competitive secrets). The President's 10-point plan would hold corporate executives accountable to the highest standards of conduct.

The President's program is guided by three core principles: first, providing better information to investors; second, making corporate officers more accountable; and, third, developing a stronger, more independent accounting and auditing system.

As the President made clear, and as the Securities and Exchange Commission has recently re-affirmed, mere compliance with GAAP is not enough. Each investor should have access to a true and fair picture of the company, in plain English, and should be promptly informed of unquestionably significant events that affect the condition and prospects of the company. By forcing companies to stop hiding behind GAAP compliance and demanding additional disclosure – by re-defining what satisfies the law – the President's proposals would raise the bar for what constitutes adequate disclosure.

President Bush directed our attention to CEOs because "reform should start at the top." We believe that CEOs should personally vouch for the veracity, timeliness, and fairness of their companies' public disclosures, including their financial statements. Today only the most responsible CEOs sign an attestation like this. The SEC should make sure all do. If a CEO or other corporate officer is guilty of misconduct, the SEC should force him or her to give back any compensation gained thereby. If corporate leaders abuse their power, the SEC should strip them of the right to serve as a director or officer of a public company. And corporate leaders should have to tell investors within two days whenever they buy or sell the company's stock for personal gain.

What about catching CEOs guilty of fraud? We all think existing legal standards and penalties are sufficient and well-honed for this task. Neither the President nor anyone else on his economic team thinks more private litigation would solve the problem of corporate disclosure. Instead, the President has urged the SEC to step up its enforcement against securities fraud.

Finally, the President believes that we need a stronger and more independent auditing and accounting system. To do this, we need a new, independent regulatory board for auditors, under the SEC's supervision, to develop standards of professional conduct and competence. In addition, the SEC needs to exercise more effective and broader oversight of the Financial Accounting Standards Board to ensure that accounting standards are issued more promptly and are more responsive to the needs of investors.

The President also favors two main reforms to bolster the independence of outside auditors. First is making audit committees more accountable. The SEC would issue new guidelines for audit committees to use in deciding whether a non-auditing service would compromise an auditor's integrity. Audit committees would also report their choice of auditor directly to the shareholders. Second, the left hand cannot check the right hand's work. The President would prohibit an outside auditor's providing internal audit services to the same client.

We do think that more extreme rigid rules would impose too high a cost, not on auditors, but on companies and their investors. One example is mandatory rotation of outside auditors. An outside auditor can get to know a client company's people, processes, and problems extremely well. Just understanding the intricacies of a client's business – like accounting for mortgage-backed securities trading – can take a long time. That deep knowledge is why companies often hire auditors to deliver other services such as tax consulting. A rigid rotation rule would destroy that intellectual capital every so many years, no matter the circumstances. It would also guarantee a company that whenever an outside auditor had finally mastered the company's business, a freshly ignorant auditor would arrive. (The same would be true for mandatory rotation of auditors, a beguiling idea that would in reality often ensure auditor ignorance and impose huge financial burdens on companies.) For the same reasons, we would discourage rigid bans on audit firms providing any non-audit services to the same client. Instead of absolute bans, we would provide regulatory – or perhaps even statutory – guidelines that audit committees would have to apply in judging the independence of their firm's outside auditor.

The reform agenda I've just outlined focuses on government's role. Our focus on government action – what you and we can do – should not blind us to the limits of our role. We in government can raise the legal minimums that public companies' senior executives must meet. But in a society committed to democracy and freedom of choice, government should not be the only source for setting behavioral norms for CEOs. Legal minimums enforced by fines and penalties will only take us so far. Going beyond that – to ever-improving best practices, more efficient financial markets, stricter ethics for our corporate leaders – is a job for the business community itself.

Required legislation

As I canvass the major bills offered here in the House and in the Senate, I am heartened that we will find a number of spots of convergence. We all want to serve the same goals of better corporate disclosure and improved investor protection. And we all know that, even while we strive to improve it, our corporate disclosure regime is the best in the world.
